PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 101st CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE—Tuesday, October 16, 1990

(Legislative day of Tuesday, October 2, 1990)

The Senate met at 9 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the Honorable HARRY REID, a Senator from the State of Nevada.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This morning's prayer will be offered by the guest chaplain, Bishop John T. Cahoon, Jr., the Episcopal Vicar of the Anglican Diocese of the Mid-Atlantic States, Gettysburg, PA; and rector of St. Andrews of Scotland Anglican Church, Alexandria, VA.

PRAYER

His Excellency Bishop John T. Cahoon, Jr., the Episcopal Vicar of the Anglican Diocese of the Mid-Atlantic States, Gettysburg, PA; and rector of St. Andrews of Scotland Anglican Church, Alexandria, VA, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray:

Most gracious God, we humbly beseech Thee, as for the people of these United States in general, so especially for their Senate in Congress assembled; that Thou wouldest be pleased to direct and prosper all their consultations, to the advancement of Thy glory, the good of Thy church, the safety, honour, and welfare of Thy people; that all things may be so ordered and settled by their endeavours, upon the best and surest foundations, that peace and happiness, truth and justice, religion and piety, may be established among us for all generations. These and all other necessaries, for them, for us, and Thy whole church, we humbly beg in the name and mediation of Jesus Christ, our most blessed Lord and Saviour.

Almighty God, who hast given us this good land for our heritage; we humbly beseech Thee that we may always prove ourselves a people mindful of Thy favour and glad to do Thy will. Bless our land with honourable industry, sound learning, and pure manners. Save us from violence, discord, and confusion; from pride and arrogancy, and from every evil way. Defend our liberties, and fashion into one united people the multitudes brought hither out of many kindreds and tongues. Endure with the spirit of wisdom those to whom in Thy name we entrust the authority of government, that there may be justice and peace at home, and that, through obedience to Thy law, we may show forth Thy praise among the nations of the Earth. In the time of prosperity, fill our hearts with thankfulness, and in the day of trouble, suffer not our trust in Thee to fail; all which we ask through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

RESERVATION OF LEADER TIME

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order previously entered, the leadership time is reserved.

MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 9:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each.

THE BUDGET

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I had prepared remarks that I had intended to deliver this morning dealing with this proposed tax increase which is unnecessary, totally unnecessary, Mr. President, on the American people, in my opinion. But it was brought to my attention before I left my office that I had received a letter and then a memorandum attached to it from a Mr. William B. Corbett in Soda Springs, ID, where he requested that I read this to the U.S. Senate.

When I looked at my remarks that were prepared that we had worked on yesterday and looked at his letter, I thought maybe his letter was more appropriate. His letter certainly is very blunt, very direct, and in some ways some Senators may take it that he impugns their motives slightly.

I would only say that, disregarding those very blunt statements, I think there is a message in this letter that is filled with basic common sense. And, of course, the common sense that is in the letter, is that we do not need a tax increase. What we need to do is spend the same amount of money this year that we spent last year and freeze the budget and we would have a balanced budget in a very short period of time without putting any undue hardship on any people in the country.

So I would just like to read this letter from Mr. Corbett.

DEAR SENATOR SYMMS: The following remarks concerning the present U.S. Budget fiasco are directed to the entire U.S. Senate. I would very much appreciate your reading them before that full body.

Then his letter commences:

DEAR SENATORS: Let me begin by quoting the first paragraph from the October 6, 1990 Vol 18, No. 39 issue of the Pro Farmer newsletter published by "Professional Farmers of America Inc".

"Congress reaches a new low. We have finally reached the point where there are so few statesmen looking after the welfare of the nation as a whole, and so many back-alley politicians who care only about buying enough votes to be re-elected, that Congress has lost its ability to govern at all."

And also, please allow me to paraphrase a statement made by Abraham Lincoln.

"You can fool all of the people some of the time, and you can fool some of the people all of the time, but you cannot fool all of the people all of the time".

It appears that fooling all of the people all of the time is the goal of Congress, and has been for many many years. There are 220 million plus citizens in this nation, and perhaps you can fool 20 million of them all of the time, but the rest are wise to you. I am writing this memo on behalf of myself and the several hundred million people who, I am sure, like myself, are no longer fooled by your shenanagans.

You make such a big deal out of this budget business. I suppose that's to convince us that you are really trying to do something worthwhile; but I, and the several hundred million citizens that I am speaking for, know that this budget "crisis" can be solved very simply by freezing the new budget at the current 1990 level for five years. With this freeze, normal growth in the economy will allow the income side to catch up with expenditures, and in five years, we could have a balanced budget; maybe even a surplus.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by a member of the Senate on the floor.

If we actually froze the expenditures, it would be much less than 5 years before we would achieve a balanced budget.

We know, senators, that the so-called cuts that you in Congress, are bandying around are not really cutbacks in present benefits, but are in reality, cuts in the 114 billion dollar proposed increase in spending for the 1991 budget year. Freezing the budget at 1990 levels is not going to create a hardship for anyone. Without reckless increases in government spending, inflation is vastly curtailed, so people will be able to get along in the future just as well as they did in 1990.

We know also senators, that your defense for not freezing the budget, will be that increases are mandated in certain entitlements. Here again, we are not fooled by such rhetoric. Congress enacted the entitlement increases, and Congress can repeal them. One short sentence will take care of it.

Figures have been published that state: in 1981, when tax rates for the highest income levels for individuals in this country were at 70%, tax collections were around 588 billion dollars; and in 1988, when tax rates for the highest income levels of individuals were 28%, tax revenues were around 915 billion dollars. So you are not fooling us with that nonsense about needed tax increases. The plain truth is, you have been remiss in your fiduciary responsibility for managing our money, and have recklessly squandered it.

So, come on, boys and girls, the days of grandstanding are over. We don't buy that kind of nonsensical rhetoric anymore. It's time to search your souls and do what you know in your hearts is right for this country. History has proven over and over again as far back as early biblical times, that governments that try to provide all things for all people have ultimately fallen. The United States of America will be no exception.

Thank you.

Sincerely,

W.B. CORBETT.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. SYMMS. I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The Senator from Connecticut is now recognized.

MEDICAL DEVICES, CHILDHOOD IMMUNIZATIONS, PEDIATRIC OUTREACH

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I am going to take just a few minutes this morning to discuss three of my major health initiatives that originated in the Labor and Human Resources Committee, and last Friday evening were passed by the Senate by unanimous consent. Given the late hour on Friday evening and the fact that these bills were adopted on the consent calendar, I did not have the opportunity at that point to address the Senate regarding the substance of these matters and decided to take some time this morning to discuss them.

The three matters, Mr. President, that I will be addressing this morning are the Comprehensive Medical Device Improvement Act of 1990, the Child Immunization Act of 1990, as well as the Primary Pediatric Outreach and Care for Disadvantaged Children Act of 1990, which was included under the McKinney Act. The first two of these initiatives go back some time, and the third is a rather new initiative.

The first of these is the Comprehensive Medical Devices Improvement Act of 1990 which the Senate adopted last Friday evening. I was very pleased to work with Senator KENNEDY, the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee to develop this significant and important health care initiative.

I would also like to recognize the contributions of Senator COATS of Indiana, Senator DURENBERGER of Minnesota, and Senator HATCH of Utah, for their tremendous effort, and for making it possible for this legislation to be adopted unanimously not only by the Labor and Human Resources Committee but by the full Senate as well.

Each year millions of Americans use, wear, or otherwise come in contact with medical devices. Such devices run the gamut from the very simple to the very complex, from tongue depressers and thermometers to kidney dialysis machines and artificial limbs. Special devices such as heart valves and artificial hips become part of the body, making normal life possible; while appendage devices such as hearing aids, improve everyday functioning for millions of Americans.

In addition to these direct use devices, other devices such as magnetic resonance imaging and electrocardiograph machines are used to treat patients and diagnose diseases in doctors' offices, hospitals, and other health care facilities.

In short, Mr. President, we have seen in the past generation the development of a tremendous range of medical devices whose use has improved or prolonged people's lives and revolutionized medical practice.

Mr. President, the comprehensive Medical Device Improvement Act constitutes the first major reform of the Federal regulatory scheme for medical devices since the Medical Device Amendments of 1976. The 1976 amendments formally initiated the regulation of an ever-growing medical device industry. That legislation, by the way, was in no small measure the result of the work of the chairman of the Labor Committee, Senator KENNEDY.

The 1976 Medical Device Amendments were intended to protect consumers' health and safety by ensuring that marketed products are safe and effective. The amendments also were intended to ensure that health practitioners could have confidence about the medical equipment that they use or prescribe for their patients.

Finally, the Congress also intended that the regulations impede innovation in the field as little as possible.

In the last few years interest in the medical device amendments has grown because of problems that have surfaced in implementing some very key provisions and because of concerns regarding the costs of some of the provisions relative to the incremental gains of safety and effectiveness. These implementation problems appear to be the result of complexities in the law, the manner in which the FDA interpreted certain provisions of the 1976 act, and limited FDA resources.

This legislation that we have now adopted in the Senate and that will be in conference very shortly, would modify most major medical device program activities at the FDA and would promote improved actions by the FDA. The bill will streamline the approval process for bringing medical devices to market, will create improved procedures for monitoring devices that fail to work as intended, and will make it easier for dangerous devices to be recalled if shown to be defective.

The bill will also spur development of new medical technologies so that both our health care system and our medical devices industry retain their status as world leaders.

The Comprehensive Medical Device Improvement Act will improve the regulatory scheme for medical devices and will ensure continued public access to safe, effective, high quality medical devices.

The House has already passed this legislation, and I look forward to going to conference on the bill and getting this legislation signed into law by the President.

The second piece of legislation that was adopted by the Senate last Friday was the Childhood Immunization Act of 1990. This legislation was adopted as part of the Vaccine and Immunization Amendments of 1990. Our immunization and vaccine programs are among the most valuable public health programs in this Nation. Since the development of the first smallpox vaccine nearly 200 years ago, the use of vaccines to prevent infectious diseases has represented one of the major success stories of public health and preventive health programs. Use of vaccines against illnesses has prevented thousands of deaths each year in this country and around the globe, and has substantially reduced the morbidity resulting from disease.

Major achievements of immunization programs include the global eradication of smallpox, reduced incidence of polio, and a reduced incidence of cases of mortality from pertussis or whooping cough. Child immunization programs represent the largest segment of immunization programs in the United States. Our Nation has been engaged over the past 15 years in a nationwide effort to reduce morbidity and therefore mortality due to the infectious diseases of childhood through programs of universal immunization of children. The effort involves the integration of efforts of the public and private sectors on the national, State and local levels.

Sadly, however, Mr. President, millions of American children are failing to receive immunizations that can protect them against diseases that can be prevented, such as polio, measles and mumps. For example, if the trends in polio immunization rates that prevailed from 1980 to 1985 continue, nearly 1 in 5 children will not be fully protected against this crippling disease in the year 2000; a disease, Mr. President, that ought not even be heard of again because of the tremendous biomedical research successes of some three decades ago. More than 2 million preschool children will be inadequately protected against polio. That, Mr. President, is an outrage.

Moreover, the current measles epidemic is of particular concern. As many as 30,000 cases of measles could occur this year, whereas the incidence of measles was as low as 1,500 cases only 6 years ago. Last year, 40 children in this country died of measles. Think of it, Mr. President—measles, last year 40 children died. This year, we may have as many as 30,000 cases. Three times as many children could die of measles this year as a result of our failure to properly immunize our children in this country.

The percentage of 2-year-olds who have been immunized in the United States is well below the 1990 target objective of 90 percent and has shown little progress since 1980.

Moreover, Mr. President, considerable differences relating to levels of immunization persist with respect to race and geographic location. National survey data indicate that differences exist between white and nonwhite as well as urban poverty areas and suburban and rural areas.

This legislation that the Senate adopted Friday evening will augment the Federal program aimed at preventing and controlling vaccine-preventable childhood diseases. The bill will establish demonstration projects for outreach and immunization service for children up to 24 months of age who are in high-risk populations. Preschool children who are from low-income families or from some high-risk populations or geographic areas are not being immunized at acceptable levels. These infants are at added and unnecessary risk of contracting diseases which are fully preventable.

This bill provides grant funds to support the development, demonstration, and evaluation of methods for the screening, referral, and immunization of such children.

Similar legislation, Mr. President, also has been adopted by the House. This bill can and must be enacted into law this year and signed by the President.

The last piece of legislation that passed the Senate is the Primary Pediatric Outreach and Care for Disadvantaged Children Act. This legislation, which I introduced as S. 2054 earlier this year, was included in the amendments reauthorizing the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act which passed the Senate as well last Friday evening.

For many American children, basic health care is inaccessible. Many are homeless; others are neglected or functionally without parents. Some indigent families are intact and caring but lack health insurance and only seek medical help when a symptom or illness can no longer be ignored, usually through an emergency room of the local public hospital. The result, Mr. President, is that health care for many American children is serendipitous at best.

Too many are not being immunized, as I discussed a moment ago. Others fail to get treatment for such common conditions as ear infections. These shortcomings can result in lifelong individual complications and serious public health implications, not to mention cost.

This legislation adds a new section to the Public Health Service Act authorizing $10 million for grants to initiate health care outreach programs for disadvantaged children. The funds are to be used to provide health care to children who lack access because of homelessness or other barriers. Outpatient facilities or mobile medical units are to be used, and the care is to be preventive, comprehensive, and to include referrals and other followup.

This bill, Mr. President, is modeled on the New York children's health project. This is an exciting program that uses mobile vans to reach the most vulnerable children of the New York City area to respond to their particular needs. The principal feature of this program could be applied in other cities and rural areas and throughout the country where children are at risk. The New York model of mobile outreach is adaptable to virtually every community where children are in need and are unable to receive basic health care.

Mr. President, I would be remiss if I did not point out that one of the primary persons responsible for the New York model, which is the basis we are using for this legislation, is the artist, Paul Simon, who has dedicated substantial resources from his artistic performances to make this project possible. This is his contribution to reaching homeless children in New York, and as a result of that program, we have now been able to adopt some models nationwide.

I am confident that a small investment of Federal dollars would generate substantial private sector support. The success of such programs obviously will depend heavily upon the willingness of private enterprise to contribute money, equipment, and supplies.

Mr. President, I believe this level of Federal support will, in fact, leverage the broader resources that are so badly needed.

Mr. President, I also appreciate in this legislation the support of my colleagues, including Senator KENNEDY, the chairman of the Committee on Labor and Human Resources; Senator COATS of Indiana, the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Children, Family, Drugs, and Alcoholism, as well as Senator BRADLEY of New Jersey and Senator ROCKEFELLER of West Virginia, who have been particularly helpful around this issue.

I am optimistic that we will emerge from the conference with this provision, thus responding more effectively to the dire needs of many American children who are now without access to health care.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the order previously entered, the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD] is recognized and is not to exceed 10 minutes. The Senator from North Carolina is now recognized.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator KENNEDY, I ask unanimous consent that the privilege of the floor be granted to Emily Van Tassel during the pendency of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 today.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROMOTE THE UNITED NATIONS

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, 2 weeks ago the Washington Post published an article by Henry Kissinger entitled, "The Dangers of Stalemate." I have been worried by the article ever since I read it. Perhaps only a heedless man would take issue with Henry Kissinger on foreign affairs, but his advice on Saddam Hussein is dangerous—or so it seems to me. The thrust of his views is that diplomacy is not likely to work, and that a decision to fight must be made soon. He wrote, "I would be very uneasy were it to be delayed into the new year. * * *"

Mr. Kissinger, I suggest, is wrong in his timing and his premise. If the United States makes wise decisions, the embargo against Iraq can last as long as it need last—for 6 months or 6 years, or until Iraq is reduced to an agrarian society.

The U.N. embargo against oil exports cuts off Iraqi income and destroys the Iraqi economy. The embargo against the import of industrial machinery, commercial equipment, and military materiel will dry up Iraq's military and economic strength. There is no need to prevent import of food, which is not only unworkable but also would add to the anger of ordinary Iraqi citizens and galvanize their opposition to the United States. We can strangle them without starving them.

Mr. Kissinger is correct in observing that our goals are incomplete. It is not enough to get Iraq out of Kuwait, and the hostages out of Iraq. It is the evil ambition of Saddam Hussein, and the accumulation and potential use of weapons of mass destruction that we must bring under control. We must set as a goal the elimination of Iraq's capacity for military aggression. Otherwise all of our present efforts are needless.

Many, but not Mr. Kissinger explicitly, have argued that the solution is to take out Saddam. There are two things wrong with that thinking. First, Saddam cannot be captured, except by a piece of unlikely luck, without a ground war of the intensity, if not the magnitude, of World War II. The people of the United States are not prepared to make that commitment, nor should they.

Second, the aftermath of war would bring unpredictable turmoil, perhaps revolt, in all of the Arab nations. It could strengthen fundamentalism and nationalism, and induce the rise of several more Saddams. The Middle East has no solid base for democracy and stability, such as was available even so fragilely in Europe after World War II. To seize Saddam through military action is not an easy solution, nor a quick solution. The turmoil will remain with us for a generation, perhaps generations.

To put the question directly, what should the United States do now? Mr. Kissinger properly notes that "a solution through sanctions would clearly be preferable." He seems to think sanctions will not work. I think they will.

The purpose behind our diplomacy is to avoid war in achieving our stated objectives, and I agree with Mr. Kissinger we need condone no action to appease or to save Saddam's face. We want to kick his rear and tie his hands, not save his face. But all of our goals can be better achieved without a shooting war.

"It remains for the administration to reap the benefits of its courageous efforts," Mr. Kissinger concludes. The efforts to stop Iraq's march into Saudi Arabia and to mobilize world support and U.N. action were brilliant as well as courageous. How do we reap the benefits?

Not by war. We would reap the whirlwind.

We will reap the benefits by deftly promoting the United Nations. Indeed, we will benefit considerably beyond solving the problems that Saddam Hussein has created. President Bush can resolve his dilemma in the Middle East, and establish his unique place in history. He can be the first leader of the world to make the United Nations work as it was intended.

The almost irresistible, but treacherous, tendency for a President is to remain centrally in charge, the leader of the troops, the avenger of the malefic aggression. In this situation, such a path is not wise for the President. He has shown courage. Now is the time to show wisdom.

The United Nations is no longer immobilized by the cold war. The Security Council has demonstrated alertness and alacrity. The purpose of the United Nations is to contain and punish aggression. The United Nations has laid down the terms of the embargo and defined the goals.

The United Nations is well suited to wait out the embargo. Waiting will not be a stalemate; it is strangulation. The United Nations can keep the sale of Iraqi oil cut off indefinitely. We must insist on the unconditional surrender of Iraq to the terms of the embargo.

The United Nations terms require the evacuation of Kuwait, the return of the legitimate government, and the release of hostages. However, withdrawal from Kuwait is an inadequate objective for all we have invested. The United Nations can prevent future sales of military weapons and supplies to Iraq. The United Nations must require an additional condition to the lifting of the embargo: Iraq must destroy its supplies and means of production of poison gas and biological and nuclear warfare, and agree to U.N. onsite verification. This is the key objective, and it must be included now.

U.S. planes and ships are required, along with those of other U.N. members, to enforce embargo. The United Nations can move to raise the U.N. flag over this military force, although that is not essential.

The essential shift is to move the fount of news from Washington to New York. Our Ambassador there can speak for President Bush and the United States. We do not by that action put our fate in other hands. We strengthen our own hands by picking up a stronger weapon—and a more durable one—the United Nations.

The United Nations can settle down for the long haul, if need be. We can ever so gradually return home many of our troops. President Bush will be applauded, not criticized, for such adroitness.

A side benefit of this course of action would be that we can also better protect our economy from the inflation caused by rising oil prices. I am not cynical enough to think we went to Saudi Arabia just to protect oil, but certainly we went to effectuate our long-established interest in stability in the Middle East. I think we are there because of a dangerous dictator who has an evil record, a huge army, and a capacity to create and use outlawed war weapons, and who could gain immeasurable power to further his urge to aggression by controlling so much of the world's oil. The daily threat of war in the Middle East unsettles the jittery world oil markets. A settled-in U.N. embargo would ease the tensions and permit the President to engage in creative jawboning to remind the world that there is no shortage of oil, and that increased prices are unacceptable.

I can agree with Mr. Kissinger's last sentence. "It remains to the administration to reap the benefits of its courageous efforts." I would add that the ideal comrade of courage is wisdom.

Mr. President, I thank the Chair. I yield the floor.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's time has expired.

RECOGNITION OF A GREAT PUBLIC SERVANT, ANNE BARON MANVILLE

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I rise today to recognize and honor an extraordinary person with whom I have worked with during the last 6 years—Anne Baron Manville.

Anne, who is an outstanding public servant, left U.S. Senate employment on Friday, October 12, 1990. I would like to take a moment to share with my colleagues a little bit about her.

Before coming to our office, Anne worked for the National Presbyterian School in Washington, DC, for more than 10 years. Before that, she worked at home, caring for her four children, Jeffrey, Anna, Richard, and Nicholas.

Anne was the legislative correspondance director in our office, responsible for answering the thousands of constituent inquiries we receive every week. As with everything Anne undertakes, she served the State of Illinois with care, compassion, and dedication, and she was always willing to go the extra mile to get the job done, and to get it done well.

In and out of the office, Anne shines. Her intelligence and commitment, tempered with her kindness and gentleness, have won Anne the respect and admiration of her friends and peers. She is, truly, a class act, and I am prooud to have worked with her and to call her my friend.

Mr. President, on behalf of my entire staff, the State of Illinois, and all of her many friends, I extend our thanks and appreciation to Anne Manville, and wish her and her husband, Bill, all the best. She will, indeed, be missed.

COMMENDING JOHN QUINCEY SOMERVILLE

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I rise today to commend one of my former staff members, John Quincey Somerville, for his exceptional performance at the University of Alabama School of Law. Last month, John began his third and final year at the university, with a shining academic record and as editor of the Alabama Law Review.

John left my office in 1987 after working for 2½ years as a legislative assistant and speech writer. As my "chief wordsmith," John's work was always of the highest quality—thorough, polished and thoughtful. If anything, John tended to labor over things too long—sometimes for hours, days or weeks—in an effort to make them perfect. This tendency usually left him working on 1 million projects at once, pacing the office till all hours of the night and sitting at his desk most weekends. No one would ever accuse John Somerville of approaching any task lightly and, for that reason, his outstanding performance in law school comes as no surprise to me or, I am sure, to anyone who knows him.

John's success in law school has certainly not surprised anyone who knows his family and the respected position which they have always held in the legal community. In fact, John comes from a long line of attorneys on both sides of his family. On his mother's side, both his grandfather and great grandfather practiced law in Georgia. On the Somerville side of the family, in addition to two Alabama Supreme Court justices, Henderson Somerville and Ormond Somerville, attorneys abound. John's father William G. Somerville, was a highly respected attorney who practiced for years in Birmingham, where John's brother currently practices and where his sister-in-law clerks for a Federal judge. I know how proud these relatives would and must be of the success which John has already found following so closely in their footsteps.

In closing, I want to wish John and his delightful wife, Holly, a gifted clinical psychologist, the best of luck in their future endeavors.

Thank you, Mr. President.

RENEWABLE ENERGY TESTIMONY FOR FOREIGN OPERATIONS SUBCOMMITTEE

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, during the month of June, the Appropriations Subcommittee on Foreign Operations had scheduled a hearing at which time several representatives of the renewable energy industry associations were to testify. I was looking forward to this hearing because I believe that renewable energy sources have much to offer the developing countries of the world. In addition, dependence on imported oil is as much a problem for third world countries as it is for the United States. Unfortunately, due to scheduling conflicts, that hearing was canceled.

What we missed by not holding the hearing, was an opportunity to explore how bilateral U.S. aid and the multilateral organizations to which we belong, are helping foster projects using energy sources other than fossil fuels. I have long been concerned that we are not doing enough in this area. For example, 80 percent of all World Bank funds for power generation in the developing world go toward diesel generators and fuel. Continuing on this path fosters oil dependence today, and economic collapse tomorrow, when the supply of imported oil is interrupted or exhausted.

Imagine what a doubling of world oil prices means to countries that have no alternatives to meet their basic electrical generator needs other than diesel generators. For those countries, we are talking about more than high prices at the pump; we are talking about an inability to keep the lights on at hospitals and an ability to keep food and medical supplies refrigerated.

The consequences of this dependence are already disastrous—5 million children die every year from preventable diseases. It often is not that they do not have access to vaccines, but that there is no fuel for the kerosene and bottled gas powered refrigerators, in which the vaccines are kept. In Sierra Leone, fully 71 percent of all vaccines are lost this way: in Peru, over half and in Pakistan, a third.

Mr. President, in the absence of the hearing in June, I submitted several of my questions regarding international renewable energy programs in writing to Mike Marvin, government relations director for the American Wind Energy Association. Following my remarks today are those questions and Mr. Marvin's answers. As we move forward on the Foreign Operations Appropriations bill, I hope this information will be useful to my colleagues.

(1) How can the Agency for International Development Office of Energy help disseminate U.S. renewable energy technology and expertise?

There are many ways, but perhaps the most effective, at this early state in the development of the renewable energy industry, is in the area of education. Most developing countries have a dated and poor understanding of the competitiveness of wind and other renewable energy sources and their potential to solve energy supply problems. This leads them to overlook the opportunities for renewable energy technologies to help them expand their utility supply or to electrify rural areas. A little education goes a long way. The American Wind Energy Association (AWEA), for example, just sent several industry experts to Pakistan for lectures and discussions with the government and the AID mission. As a result of this one trip the Pakistanis are now planning a major wind resource assessment program and have begun initial planning for several wind projects.

The Office of Energy is already helping through its support of an AWEA program that brings developing country energy officials to the U.S. for training in wind power. We need to be more aggressive in this area, particularly in light of the proactive renewable energy industry support being practiced by several European countries. AWEA has developed a plan of action for the Office of Energy to expand its wind energy activities and we are working with the office to get it funded.

(2) Do you find AID missions receptive to renewable energy and its applications?

In a word, no. A great deal of education is needed within AID as well. AID missions are also at a disadvantage in adopting new energy technologies because their energy programs are often managed by non-technical people, and many AID missions have gotten out of the energy sector entirely. This is why the Office of Energy can provide an important support function in assisting in the adoption of new technolgies. As an industry we have to begin building bridges to the AID staff located in the 70 countries which could use renewable energy technology.

(3) As far as you know, does the Office of Energy have a plan for promoting the adoption of wind power?

As far as I am aware, they do not have a formal plan. As I mentioned, AWEA has suggested a limited program to them. In our view the Office of Energy needs to beef-up its expertise in wind and solar technologies and develop specific long-term programs to promote these previously neglected technologies. We think the long-standing and successful biomass energy program at the Office of Energy serves as a good example of what is possible.

NATURAL GAS IN MINNESOTA

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to bring to the attention of this body the ever-increasing importance of natural gas and to salute the opening of America's largest public natural gas vehicle fueling station.

This Wednesday will mark the official opening of Minnegasco's South Lyndale natural gas vehicle fueling station, in Minneapolis, MN, which is, as I say, I earlier mentioned was the largest public natural gas vehicle fueling station in the United States.

This state-of-the-art facility was designed and constructed by Minnegasco to serve the growing needs of its natural gas-powered fleet, as well as natural gas vehicles operated by the company's commercial fleet customers. Currently, more than 100 Minnegasco vehicles and over 100 customer vehicles operate on natural gas.

The American Gas Association estimates that there are 30,000 cars, trucks, and buses running on natural gas in the United States. I would like to see that number grow.

With the current situation in the Middle East, I strongly believe America needs to reduce its dependence on foreign fuel. It is also important to note, Mr. President, that natural gas is domestically produced and is found in abundant supply right here, not across the seas in foreign countries. I'm also particularly pleased that this progressive facility is located in the Gopher State, a place I am very proud to represent in this body.

Natural gas has the added benefit of being an environmentally clean fuel. Natural gas-powered vehicles reduce air pollution as well as the emissions of the chemicals that contribute to global warming.

The future is bright for alternative fuels like natural gas and ethanol. Every day, more and more Government and community leaders are realizing the importance of modifying their fleets and taking advantage of the many benefits these fuels have to offer. The Clean Air Act that will be approved in the coming days will further increase the use of alternative fuels. I am proud to support this policy, which I understand from my friend Brian Clymer at the Urban Mass Transportation Administration is a priority in the Bush administration's transportation policy.

Mr. President, Canada currently has more than 200 public natural gas vehicle fueling stations throughout its provinces. I hope to soon see as many stations in the United States.

I was recently very proud to announce a $6.1 million grant from the Urban Mass Transportation Administration of the Department of Transportation to purchase 37 new buses for the Metropolitan Transit Commission. Of the 37 buses, 20 will be powered by compressed natural gas or ethanol. The remaining 17 have new cleaner burning diesel fuel engines.

Mr. President, the business of the Senate prohibits me from participating in the grand opening of this exciting facility, but I am pleased I have this chance to recognize its importance and to congratulate those who made it possible.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, morning business is now closed.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1990—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 2104 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be stated.

The bill clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 2104) to amend the Civil Rights Act of 1964 to restore and strengthen civil rights laws that ban discrimination in employment, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferences.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report is printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD of October 12, 1990.)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the Civil Rights Act of 1990 ranks with the most important measures this Congress has addressed. Many Senators on both sides of the aisle have worked closely together for many months to fashion legislation to respond to an unfortunate series of recent Supreme Court decisions which have significantly undermined the Nation's civil rights laws banning job discrimination.

I believe that this conference report, reconciling the measures passed by the Senate and House of Representatives, achieves that goal, while scrupulously responding to every legitimate concern raised by the administration and the business community.

It is not yet clear whether President Bush will sign this legislation—but he should, if he shares our commitment to civil rights and to equal opportunity in employment.

Contrary to the view of some of the President's advisers, this is not a quota bill. In the course of the Senate and House debates and in the conference committee, we have adopted numerous modifications and refinements to ensure that nothing—absolutely nothing—in this legislation puts pressure on any employer to resort to quotas in hiring or promoting employees. We have prepared an antidiscrimination bill, not a quota bill.

One of the principal purposes of this legislation is to overrule the Supreme Court's decision in the Wards Cove case, in which the Court rejected the unanimous ruling by Chief Justice Burger in 1971 in the landmark case of Griggs versus Duke Power. In hundreds of antidiscrimination cases in the past two decades, the Griggs rule had been used to strike down the subtle and not-so-subtle practices that kept minorities and women from participating fully and fairly in our economy.

The Supreme Court decision in Wards Cove effectively overruled the Griggs decision. The new standard established by the Court in Wards Cove makes it far more difficult and expensive for victims of discrimination to challenge the barriers they face. The Civil Rights Act of 1990 restores the standard in Griggs, which served the country well for nearly two decades, and deserves to be reinstated.

The President's advisers persist in spreading the false charge that our response to the Wards Cove decision will lead to quotas. The conference report restores the Griggs rule; and in all the 18 years it was in effect, the Griggs rule did not force employers to resort to quotas. Raising the false hue and cry of quotas, as the Attorney General continues to do, does not make this a quota bill.

In fact, the revisions made by the conference committee remove any reasonable doubt about quotas.

The standards set forth in the bill for determining whether an employment practice is required by business necessity are virtually identical to those the administration itself indicated a willingness to accept in July.

The conference committee makes six important modifications in the legislation.

First, the bill addresses concerns about the definition of "business necessity." Where an employer's practices do not involve job performance or selection or where they concern methadone, alcohol, or tobacco use, an employer can avoid charges of discrimination by proving that the practices have a "significant relationship to a manifest business objective."

Second, the bill specifies additional types of evidence that a court may consider on this issue, including "testimony of individuals with knowledge of the practice."

Third, the bill provides expressly that nothing in the measure should be interpreted even "to encourage" employers to adopt quotas, let alone require them to do so.

Fourth, the bill requires the plaintiff to prove which specific practices are responsible for a disparate impact in all cases, except where the employer does not have the relevant records or has concealed, destroyed or refused to make them available.

Fifth, the conference report includes the text of the amendment proposed on the Senate floor by Senator PRYOR, confirming that the mere existence of a statistical imbalance in an employer's work force on account of race, color, religion, sex, or national origins does not create a violation of title VII.

Sixth, the conference committee bill includes a proposal made by Senator BOREN to limit punitive damages against any employer under title VII to $150,000, or the amount of compensatory damages, and backpay, whichever is greater.

There is no valid objection based on quotas to this legislation. The Attorney General's charge is simply a pretext for those who reject the principle of equal job opportunity for all Americans.

Next, the bill responds to the decision in Martin versus Wilks, in which the Supreme Court held that consent decrees settling job discrimination cases may be reopened in future lawsuits, even by people who sat on their hands while the Court considered the decree. In the months since that decision, new suits challenging long-settled decrees have been filed in more than a dozen cities. These cases are having a devastating impact on employers and communities who thought they had long ago turned their backs on discrimination.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990 provides a mechanism that allows finality to be achieved in such cases. It sets up procedures to ensure that interested persons can challenge proposed decrees before they are adopted, while limiting endless litigation and ensuring that fairly settled cases stay settled. These procedures recognize the right of every individual to due process of law, and the need of businesses and communities to bring an end to litigation. At the same time, the conference committee bill will enable more people to challenge consent decrees in job discrimination cases in the future, and it strengthens the notice requirements for such decrees.

The bill also fills a serious gap in Federal law caused by the lack of effective remedies for women and religious minorities in job discrimination cases. Under title VII, there is no adequate remedy for victims of intentional sex discrimination. Employers who engage in such reprehensible discrimination can walk out of court scot-free—and even send a bill for court costs to their victims. The remedies available under current law are often completely inadequate to vindicate the right of working women to be free from sex harassment in the workplace or from discrimination in basic employment decisions such as hiring, firing, and promotion. Those who suffer from religious discrimination are under a similar disadvantage.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990 provides meaningful remedies, granting victims of intentional sex and religious discrimination the right to recover compensatory damages. In particularly flagrant cases, punitive damages of up to the greater of $150,000 or the amount of compensatory damages and backpay may be awarded.

In addition, the conference agreement includes a specific provision to make clear that the bill is not intended to overrule existing cases involving "comparable worth."

This change is intended to allay concerns that this bill will require courts to adopt the "comparable worth" theory in cases alleging pay discrimination.

Further, the bill revises the "mixed motive" provision by eliminating both compensatory and punitive damages where an employer proves that the same job action would have taken place, even in the absence of discrimination.

The bill also provides that when an unsuccessful challenge to a court order or consent decree is brought by a third party, the court will have discretion to determine how attorney's fees should be assessed.

The bill also overrules the Patterson decision, in which the Supreme Court nullified the only Federal antidiscrimination law applicable to the 11 million workers in the 3.7 million firms with fewer than 15 employees.

That decision, with its devastating impact on minority workers, must be overturned, and the Civil Rights Act of 1990 overturns it. It permits victims of race discrimination in the workplace to sue for on-the-job harassment as well as for discrimination in hiring, promotion, and firing.

In addition, the bill corrects other problems caused by the Supreme Court's recent interpretations of Federal civil rights statutes. These problems concern a variety of issues, including seniority systems, attorney fees, and statutes of limitation. These are serious concerns, affecting large numbers of minorities and women, and they need to be addressed.

We have repeatedly modified this legislation in an attempt to meet the concerns of the administration. So far, however, the Attorney General continues to recommend a veto. I hope that President Bush will take an independent look at this legislation and the many good faith efforts we have made to go the extra mile and meet every reasonable objection of the White House. If he does, I believe he will sign this legislation, because he will see that it is an antidiscrimination bill, not a quota bill.

I urge my colleagues to vote for the Civil Rights Act of 1990, and I urge President Bush to sign it.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of my colleague.

Some of the conversations about this bill that have arisen in recent days have come, of course, because of the negotiations which a number of us conducted to see if we could put something together.

I will preface it this way: I do not think there is anyone in this body or anywhere else who feels more deeply about civil rights than I do. Certainly, there are those who feel as deeply. But I would like to have a bill, and I would like to have worked this out.

The first opportunity I had to really negotiate this matter was a week or so ago when I received a call from the eminent attorney William Coleman, a former Secretary of Transportation, a wonderful man, a tremendous attorney, a very, very bright guy, a fellow I have a lot of respect for and can even say a friendship and love for. He approaches this bill from a very definite perspective, having suffered himself from discrimination as a young black man brought up in Philadelphia and as a young, near the top-of-the-class law school graduate from Harvard University. He was foreclosed from law firms because he was black.

He called me and said, "Orrin, will you sit down with me as a friend and see if we can do something about this?" I said, "I will be glad to," because I am always willing to sit down and negotiate.

I think we would have done a lot better if we had done it from the beginning of the bill. If when they began to file it and after filing it, they had sat down and tried to work it out, I think we probably could have worked it out.

We worked for 7 days and nights—I say they were like 12- to 18-hour days—with Mr. Coleman and, I might add, the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, ARLEN SPECTER. Both of them worked indefatigably to see if we could resolve this matter.

We came up with basically seven changes. From the beginning I said if you give me all the changes I want, then I do not care what the White House does. We will go and we will pass the bill; not only pass it, but I think we can defeat any veto that might arise.

(Mr. AKAKA assumed the chair.)

Mr. HATCH. But was apparent after we got into the negotiations that I could not get all that I wanted to correct this bill.

So I made it very clear during the negotiations that I would go with this bill if all three sides agreed; that is, the President of the United States, the civil rights community, and the House and the Senate—the legislative body, the civil rights community, and the Executive of this country—if all three agreed, even though I was not totally happy with the bill, or with the language that we had, and I was not totally happy with it. Then I would go with it. I was asked if I would recommend it to the President. I said I would recommend to the President the language we came up with, but I also said that I would make it very clear I am not totally happy with it and if he rejects it, I am going to support the President.

Now we failed. We did our very best. We tried to put this together in the best possible way. We tried to resolve it in the best possible way, but there are clearly such notable differences among the three groups, and even between the civil rights leadership—Bill Coleman and others and myself—that it was apparent that we failed.

We could not put it together, and the President has taken a principled stand that this bill has so much wrong with it that he really will have to veto it as it passes both Houses of Congress, and we all know it is going to pass. So we know that if it does pass, even in this current form, with the negotiated language attached to it, the President is going to veto it.

I have to say that it was a tribute to the people negotiating and especially to Senator SPECTER and Senator KENNEDY that the conference committee was willing to take this language because, in my opinion, it does definitely improve the bill. But does it make the bill worthy of the President's support? I have to say it is a close question, but I fall on the side of the President.

It certainly helps in those areas, but it does not resolve the problem in other areas that I think are very important as well, and I think the President thinks are very important as well.

I have had conversations with the Attorney General. He feels very strongly about some of this language and feels that it must be changed in order to have a bill that really can become law. I cannot disagree with the point the Attorney General gave in his letter to certain Members of this body, listing why the compromise really was not good enough and why it really had to be vetoed and making clear that the President is going to veto this bill with that language in it.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Attorney General's letter be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Washington, DC, October 12, 1990.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. LEADER: You have asked for the Administration's opinion on the conference report adopted last night to S. 2104. As you know, the President has said he would veto this bill as it was passed by the Senate and by the House of Representatives. In his letter to Representative John Lafalce of August 2, 1990, the President said that, while he would like to sign a civil rights bill, S. 2104 (as amended by the House) was not legislation that he could sign. In our view, the new amendments adopted in conference do not offer substantial improvement to S. 2104; indeed, in some respects they make the bill worse. Accordingly, the President will be compelled to veto S. 2104 in its current form.

The new amendments recognize that the bill contains serious deficiencies, particularly with regard to the matters raised in connection with Wards Cove Packing Co. v. Atonio and Martin v. Wilks, among others. Unfortunately, the amendments do not make substantive changes in the bill and, therefore, do not remove any of the objections we have clearly stated in the past.

With respect to sections 3 and 4 of the bill, provisions that will induce employers to adopt quotas, the new language makes no material change. The additional amendments purport to change the definition of "business necessity" and the extent to which complainants will not be required to identify a particular business practice when they file a disparate impact suit. With respect to both, the words are different, but the meaning and effect are the same, and there is no improvement.

The definition of business necessity is essentially unchanged, and its two fundamental problems remain. First, employers are restricted to defending their selection practices (i.e., virtually all relevant practices) in terms of "a significant relationship to successful performance of the job." This prohibits them from offering other legitimate business justifications that have been recognized as permissible by the Supreme Court for many years. Second, the bill expressly overrules Wards Cove, not just with respect to the allocation of the burden of proof, but also with respect to the entire treatment of business necessity as a defense. This ensures that the many ambiguities in this provision will be resolved against employers. The slight changes in the latest conference report do not address or resolve these or the other problems with the definition of business necessity.

Nor is the new amendments' language with respect to the "particularity" requirement acceptable. Once more, the words are different, but the basic problems which the Administration has identified all along have not been remedied. The new version would still allow a complainant to "prove" a violation simply by pointing to a statistical disparity caused by any "group of practices" where the employer "failed to keep such records," i.e., those necessary for the plaintiff to support his claim. This is clearly unacceptable, for at least four reasons. First, the "group of practices" language means that a complainant can simply list everything the employer does and style this as the "group of practices" being challenged. Second, the proposal continues to assume that any imbalance is caused by something the employer is doing, when of course there may be any number of innocent reasons for the imbalance. Third, the proposal would place the employer in a classic no-win situation when a complainant presented such a claim without identifying any particular practice that was being challenged. The employer would either have to produce evidence showing that one of her particular practices could have been challenged, or admit that she did not have such evidence—either way, she loses. Fourth, it is unprecedented to remove the fundamental legal obligation of all civil plaintiffs to identify what particular act of the defendant is responsible for the plaintiff's claimed injury. Plaintiffs already have available to them the full panoply of civil discovery rules, and they have available to them the usual sanctions when defendants unlawfully withhold or destroy evidence. There is no reason to adopt the proposal's "guilty until proved innocent" or "if there is no evidence, you're guilty" rule against businessmen and businesswomen.

The new amendments also alter sections 5 and 6 of the bill, but here as well no substantial improvement is made. The principal substantive change made with respect to section 5 actually makes the bill worse. The word "contributing" is changed back to "motivating"; our objection to the latter as penalizing "bad thoughts" prompted one of the few changes made at our request by the bill's proponents. With respect to section 6, the language passed by the House and Senate would still apply to consent decrees already in place, and is objectionable for all the reasons we have given in the past. In short, since only unlawful consent decrees can ever be successfully challenged, we see no reason why people should be denied their day in court to mount such challenges: the bill would serve only to protect illegal quotas. For new consent decrees, the proposed amendment prescribes that a different set of rules would apply—an unprecedented bifurcation of people's constitutional rights into two categories. Finally, we note that in section 6(a)(A)(ii), the new version of the bill expressly contemplates that consent decrees in the new category might use quotas.

The amendment to section 9 would, in our view, make the bill worse. For the first time, Title VII would say that certain civil rights plaintiffs—those challenging the legality of quotas adopted under a consent decree—could be required to pay attorney fees where their action was neither frivolous nor otherwise unreasonable. The clear effect would be to discourage many challenges to illegal discrimination, and so this amendment makes the bill even more of a quota bill than it already was.

The new amendments also assert that nothing in the bill would "require or encourage an employer to adopt hiring or promotion quotas * * *." As we have repeatedly pointed out, however, the trouble with the bill is not that it explicitly "encourages" or "requires" quotas, but that it will inevitably result in quotas being adopted surreptitiously to avoid the cost and trouble of disparate impact lawsuits under the bill's new ground rules—which the bill makes much more difficult for employers to win. The assertion that the bill ought not have this effect cannot change the fact that it will.

Finally, the new amendments do nothing to address our objections to those very important and very objectionable parts of the original bill not discussed above: compensatory and punitive damages, other attorney fees provisions, retroactivity, and so forth.

Therefore, I must reiterate that the President will be compelled to veto S. 2104 in its current form.

Sincerely,

DICK THORNBURGH,
Attorney General.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, we failed. We did our best. I have to admit both sides are tough on this issue because it involves a lot of tough problems.

There is one aspect of this bill everybody agrees with, as I understand it, or at least overwhelmingly would agree with and that is the overrule of the Lorance case and the overrule of the Patterson versus McLean case. We all agree on that. Those are the civil rights aspects of this bill. The rest of the bill, although peripherally involving civil rights aspect, involves employer and employee relationships and labor law. So the bill really does not deserve to be called a Civil Rights Act of 1990 because it is really not a civil rights bill.

The two things that are civil rights we all agree with. If we could split those off, we could pass it today and the President would sign in law—that is, a bill that would overrule the Lorance case and overrule the Patterson versus McLean case. In fact, it might be a good thing to do that and put two bills out here so that we can at least rectify the civil rights problems that arose in those two cases.

But having said all of that, Mr. President, I rise today to oppose the conference report on S. 2104, the Civil Rights Act of 1990, and I urge my colleagues to do the same. My opposition is coupled with both frustration and sadness, as I explained here, that we have not been able to come together on legistation that all of us could enthusiastically support.

Everyone who has tried to work out a compromise on S. 2104 has been impressed by the difficulties, the convoluted nuances, and the potential unintended consequences of any proposed language. This is complex stuff. Hours upon hours have been spent trying to come to agreement on what the law was, what the law should be, and what is meant by any language that is proposed. There have been so many explanations, so many interpretations, so many lawyers, that it is not surprising that there has been so little agreement on how this legislation will affect current employment policies.

Recently, I was approached, as I said, by the civil rights community to see whether there was a chance that a compromise could be reached among Congress, the administration, and the proponents of the bill. The better part of 7 days was spent trying to resolve some of the major problems with the bill, culminating in a 17-hour session. Regrettably, we failed, but it was not for a lack of effort on anyone's part.

I particularly pay tribute to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER], who gave an awful lot of time and effort to this matter. In fact, in my entire career in the Senate I have never seen such collective interest in trying to find a solution to this problem or at least these problems.

As this legislation has worked its way through Congress, it has become quite frustrating to witness the battles that occurred over a word here, a phrase there. I shudder to think how many hours have been spent debating the definition of "business necessity" or arguing about the plaintiff's burden in a suit alleging disparate impact discrimination. But, as complex as these debates have been, and as picky and petty as they might appear to be to any occasional observer, they have been of monumental importance.

The core issue involved in the debate over S. 2104 is whether the touchstone of title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 should continue to be equality of opportunity or whether it should be premised on the discredited concept of equality of result, otherwise known as quotas. Herein lies the battle, for it takes only a few words to change the entire direction of title VII. For all of the assurances of the proponents, for all of the cleverly crafted language in the bill, S. 2104 still moves us inexorably down the path toward the proposition that a statistical imbalance can be the sole proof of discrimination.

And if we come to that, we are going to have problems in this country like never before. And that is what this bill does, regardless of what arguments we can put forth.

And, it is for this reason that every word change has been so hard fought. The proponents wish to make it far easier for plaintiffs to win lawsuits. The opponents believe that in doing so, the bill would change title VII into a statute inevitably resulting in the incorporation of quotas in the workplace.

Mr. President, it comes down to this.

Does the Senate wish to reverse a quarter of a century of law, as set forth in the Civil Rights Act of 1964?

Does the Senate wish to replace the principle of equality of opportunity for individuals with a requirement of equality of results for groups?

Does the Senate wish to lead this country down a short road to quota hiring and promotion?

Does the Senate wish to slam the courthouse door on innocent Americans who wish to assert equal protection and civil rights claims?

That is what this bill will do even in its present form, even with the changes we have made.

Does the Senate wish to convert title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, the Holy Grail of that act, from a statute aimed at conciliation and settlement into a statute which will exacerbate conflict in the workplace and emphasize protracted, costly litigation? These are the very issues which are at stake in this bill.

Clearly, there are some provisions of S. 2104 which I readily support. The bill, as I have said, overturns the Lorance decision and provides that challenges to intentionally discriminatory seniority systems may be made after the seniority system actually operates to harm someone. We are willing to do that. Ironically, this same right to sue when harmed is denied to persons who seek to challenge a consent decree on an equal protection basis when the harm actually occurs.

The bill also correctly reverses the Patterson case. As a result, under section 1981, which outlaws racial discrimination in the making and enforcing of contracts, plaintiffs will also be able to bring lawsuits alleging racial discrimination in the terms and conditions of contracts. This will include an action asserting racial harassment.

And, hopefully signaling the beginning of a trend, the bill would place the Congress under title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, although Members are not subject to a private right of action in Federal court. It is clearly time that we legislators begin to live under the rules we are so ready to apply to others.

Unfortunately, much in the bill remains uncorrected. There has been great debate over whether S. 2104 is a quota bill, and too often that debate has failed to focus on how quotas would arise under the legislation. The proponents have gone to great lengths to proclaim that the bill does not require an employer to use quotas.

Let me repeat that. They have gone to great lengths to explain that the bill does not require quotas or does not require that employers use quotas.

Mr. President, they are absolutely correct. Nothing in the bill specifically mandates the use of quotas.

The problem is that S. 2104 will "result in" quotas. That is the problem. The legislation drastically rewrites the rules in current law which set forth how one proves discrimination and the absence of discrimination. Under the bill, it becomes easier for a plaintiff to satisfy his or her legal requirements for claiming discrimination and even more legally arduous and financially punitive for an employer to disprove that assertion. So easy, in fact, for the plaintiff to prove his or her case that in most instances the only prudent employment policy would be to make every employment policy with an eye on the numbers, to make sure that regardless of all other considerations, one's work force always matches the appropriate outside labor force.

Now some, in the privacy of nonpublic debate, believe that proportionality—the euphemism for quotas—should in fact be our objective. They are honest about it. They assert that proportional representation or employment quotas are the only way to guarantee the absence of discrimination. In fact, however, history has repeatedly demonstrated that quotas perpetuate discrimination, and it is for good reason that the American people overwhelmingly reject the concept.

That is why the President is against this bill. It is one of the reasons, and there are many others, and I intend to get into some of those, too.

Unfortunately, S. 2104 represents a significant and irresistible step toward quotas. Even with the changed language, we tried to make it better, we tried to reduce the force of those provisions, but we never quite got there. That is why I could not disagree with the President on this matter—because the President happens to be right.

The best evidence of this assertion was the rejection of Senator DOLE's amendment on the floor in July. That amendment read in critical part as follows:

* * * nothing in the amendments made by this act, or in any statute amended by this act, shall be construed to require, permit, or result in the adoption or implementation of hiring, promotion or termination quotas * * * on basis of race, color, religion, sex or national origin.

That amendment was rejected. Instead, the proponents accepted language in the bill which now says in critical part,

Nothing in the amendments made by this act shall be construed to require or encourage an employer to adopt hiring or promotion quotas. * * *

When one compares the two provisions, it becomes readily obvious that the critical difference between the two is the phrase "results in," which Senator Dole had in his amendment but which is not in this bill. The proponents made clear on the floor that they could not accept such a complete prohibition on quotas. Why, Mr. President? Because they recognize that S. 2104, once implemented, will leave an employer little alternative but to utilize employment quotas rather than run the risk of lengthy and costly lawsuits, which the employer will almost certainly lose. Incorporating Senator DOLE's proposal would have directly undercut the inevitable consequences of the operative portions of the legislation. The rejection of Senator DOLE's "results in" amendment is the best available evidence of the validity of the criticism that S. 2104 pushes Federal civil rights law a significant and irresistible step toward the incorporation of proportionality or quotas in the workplace.

During the negotiations I participated in these last few weeks, one of the most critical issues we addressed involved what is known as particularity or causation. The issue arises in suits involving disparate impact discrimination, where a person alleges that the employer's use of a particular practice, while neutral on its face, screens out minorities or women more than it screens out whites or males. The bill had previously required that a plaintiff would only have to show that a practice or practices contributed to the disparate impact. It also required that an employer defend all practices that contributed to the disparate impact under the bill's new, revised, and more difficult standard of business necessity.

This bill changes the law. And although the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts says all we are trying to do is get back to the Griggs decision, they are changing the Griggs language. For anyone looking at the new language will see that they must not mean Griggs, in spite of the fact they say they do. They have tougher language on business necessity now.

During the negotiations, I proposed that the bill be written to reflect current law so that the plaintiff would have to show not just that the practice or practices contributed to the disparate impact, but that such a practice or practices caused the disparate impact. I wanted the word "causation" in there.

The employers would then have to explain those practices shown by plaintiff to cause the disparate impact, if I had had my way. In the spirit of reaching a compromise, I reached out as far, and really farther, than I thought was necessary, in the hopes of resolving this problem. I actually went too far.

In my conversations with civil rights representatives, I dropped my insistence that the word "cause" be used. I agreed to statutory language which stated that—

The complaining party will be required to demonstrate which specific practices are responsible for the disparate impact.

I also agreed that in two other parts of this portion of the bill, the employer would have to defend only those practices shown to be responsible in whole or in significant part for the disparity.

Unfortunately, the joint statement of the conference committee discussing this change substantially undercuts the very purposes behind this key provision. The report interprets the phrase "in whole or in significant part" to refer only to practices which are more than a mere trivial or insubstantial contribution to the disparate impact.

Consequently, despite the language of the statute, the proponents make clear that they want plaintiffs to be able to assert that a whole raft of employment practices contributed to the disparate impact. And that has been one of the biggest problems from the beginning. Then they want to sit back and watch and see if the employer can justify every single one of his practices under the new standard of business necessity.

The problems arising under causation are a microcosm of problems we have encountered with many of the other portions of the bill. With a slight change in wording, entire provisions of existing law simply disappear. Under current law, a plaintiff must isolate and identify the practice which is responsible for the disparate impact.

The proposed language, which was incorporated in the conference report, moves away from this standard by allowing plantiff to show that a group of practices was responsible for the disparate impact, and by requiring that the employer has to demonstrate business necessity only with regard to those practices shown to be responsible "in whole or in significant part" for the disparity.

But the joint statement goes even further by interpreting the standard "in whole or significant part" to mean nothing more than a trivial or insubstantial contribution to the disparate impact.

According to the joint statement, an employer would be required to demonstrate business necessity with regard to every employment practice shown to have little more than trivial or insubstantial contribution to the disparity. Only in Congress can the phrase "in whole" or the word "significant" be interpreted to mean slightly more than trivial—only here. The interpretation in the joint statement is at best a clumsy attempt to repudiate the very improvement in the revision that I had fought for and sought. Given the importance of the issue of causation to the entire bill, it is reason enough by itself to justify opposition to the bill.

Another provision added in conference reads as follows:

The mere existence of a statistical imbalance in an employer's workforce on account of race, sex, religion, or national origin is not alone sufficient to establish a disparate impact violation.

This, too, fails to protect against a reliance on quotas to avoid liability, because it does not alter the fundamental manner in which the operative provisions of a bill permit the plaintiff to win a disparate impact case. While it does limit a statistical comparison to the job in question and the relevant labor market, the fact remains that a plaintiff satisfies his or her burden under the bill by simply pointing to a statistical imbalance and asserting that some or all of the employer's practices contributed to the disparity. That would satisfy his or her prima facie case.

Remember, according to the joint explanatory statement, the employer must justify the business necessity of every employer practice shown to have more than a trivial contribution to the disparity.

Moving to the portion of the bill which deals with the Martin versus Wilks decision, the latest version would provide better notice to employees who are not parties to the case.

Nevertheless, the bill still bars employees and many others who are adversely affected by a consent or litigated decree from challenging the decree when they are actually harmed. And the conference report still contains double standards in this regard.

For example, when the Government sues an employer on behalf of a group of persons, members of that group can still sue the employer after entry of a consent decree if the consent decree does not provide them with back pay or a job. But a different employee who is harmed by the same consent decree, denied a job because of his or her race, sex, or ethnicity, is effectively denied the chance to be heard.

Where is the justice in that? This provision represents a fundamental retreat from existing protections of the right of all Americans to have access to court and to assert an equal protection claim or a statutory civil right.

It is particularly ironic that it is in the name of civil rights for some that we are being asked to extinguish what has been considered to be an essential civil right, or what are essential civil rights of others.

During the previous debate in the Senate, several of my colleagues indicated that their support for the legislation depended in large part on inclusion of a monetary cap on the amount of damages that could be obtained under the bill, a concept that I personally disagree with.

If a person has a right to recover, he or she ought to be able to recover whatever damages there are. But to try to accommodate certain Senators on the floor, they put what they thought were effective caps in the bill.

The proponents of the bill indicated that their concerns would be addressed in conference, and many of my colleagues believed that the revised bill includes a cap on damages of $150,000. I wish to point out, however, that this is the most flexible of all caps. The $150,000 applies only to punitive damages. There is no cap whatsoever on compensatory damages. Moreover, the punitive cap only applies if compensatory and other relief totals an amount less than $150,000.

For example, if a jury were to award a plaintiff $200,000 in compensatory damages and $50,000 as a backpay award, the jury could then award punitive damages of an amount up to $250,000. So if the jury gives $250,000 in compensatory and backpay award damages, then the punitive damages can also be $250,000. So there is no cap in here.

Or the jury might just give everything in compensatory damages, and it could be millions of dollars. There is no cap on these awards.

Punitive damages are capped at $150,000 per employee or—and this is the catch—the sum of compensatory damages and equitable monetary relief, whichever is larger.

I might point out, in pattern or practice intentional discrimination cases there may be dozens and even hundreds of claimants all potentially entitled to $150,000, or the sum of their compensatory damages and back pay. Punitive damages could well amount to millions and millions of dollars in those cases.

So there is no cap there at all. It is rather bizarre that this legislation incorporates a scheme that is skewed to help higher salaried employees more than lower income employees and workers. It will be interesting to see if the advocates of this section will be as ready to apply caps, even such flexible caps, in other areas of the law, or whether they will be reluctant to cap damages in, for example, product liability cases in a manner consistent with what they are willing to do in civil rights suits.

The changes that have been made to S. 2104 have also failed to address the provisions which help the real beneficiaries of the legislation; that is, employment lawyers. In fact, it is difficult to imagine how a bill could be better crafted to preserve and perpetuate the legal profession.

For example, the bill extends the statute of limitations from 6 months to 2 years. Rather than requiring a person to bring a suit in a timely manner or to challenge a decision or policy relatively soon after its implementation, the bill now permits allegations to remain unresolved. An employer will now have to wait 2 years to know whether a specific decision will be the basis of a lawsuit.

Again, given the importance that the proponents place on finality in other areas of the bill, it is incongruous that they are willing to increase the statute of limitations by 300 percent.

The bill also would place several brand new impediments on reaching settlements. Under current law, if a plaintiff rejects a formal settlement offer and subsequently, after trial, obtains a judgment for less than the amount of the offer, he or she is not entitled to attorneys' fees incurred from the date the offer was rejected. The provision was designed to encourage people to settle cases arising under title VII, in keeping with the statute's trust toward resolution and settlement.

Under this bill, plaintiff is entitled to attorneys' fees after the offer is rejected. Naturally, it is difficult to imagine why any trial lawyer would push for a settlement.

It is in the interests of the attorney, although not necessarily in his or her client's best interests, always to go to trial. For an attorney, the risk of refusing a settlement has been eliminated.

The bill also would prevent a person sued under title VII for conditioning a lump sum settlement offer on the plaintiff's waiver of attorney's fees, leaving the attorney to work out the fee amount with his or her lawyer. Again, the person the legislation seems most concerned with protecting is not the person who feels he or she has been the victim of discrimination, but the attorney. Attorneys come off very well in this legislation. We have protected them to the nth degree. This is an attorney's bill. It is one of the reasons the President is so upset about it. He said he does not want to support a bill that would be a litigation bonanza for lawyers, and that is what this bill is.

The legislation also contains provisions which uncap expert witness fees and requires broad construction of at least 70 other civil rights statutes. With regard to the latter, the purpose seems highly unnecessary, unless its inclusion is intended to encourage Federal bureaucrats and judges to revise current interpretations of civil rights law.

When one cuts through the myriad of issues—and there are many others that I wish I could take time on today, but it really is not going to make any difference—there remains a fundamental question for this Nation, for how we answer it will affect generations of Americans to come. That is, what kind of a society do we really wish to establish? Is it a society that is free of bias; a society that guarantees equal opportunity for all; a society that penalizes those who discriminate on the basis of race, sex, ethnicity, age, or disability and a society that ensures equal opportunity so that one is free to rise or fall based on one's own experience, abilities, and merit?

Or is it a society that has created a convoluted, tortured, and often contradictory legal system which, as a practical matter, requires every job in America to match perfectly the numerical mix of the surrounding, relevant labor pool; a society in which one's right depend on the group to which he or she belongs; a society in which group membership may be more important than ability and experience; a society where every employment policy is governed by numercial quotas? Is that what we are after?

The best answer remains, of course, the first alternative—to treat every American the same, to treat every American equally, to enforce the laws so there is no discrimination, to ensure that no one is excluded or penalized because of his or her race, sex, ethnicity, age, or disability.

S. 2104, the so-called Civil Rights Act of 1990, fails this basic test. I hope my colleagues will vote against it. We do not have to eliminate some civil rights to protect others. We do not have to overturn one Supreme Court decision after another to guarantee equal opportunity. And we do not have to jeopardize fundamental legal and constitutional principles to guarantee a discrimination-free workplace.

We are in danger of doing all of that with this bill, even with the revised language in it. The language does make it better, but I have to say it does not make it good enough. I think the President is justified in telling us he is going to veto the bill.

Having said that, I want to express my appreciation and regard for those who have worked so hard to try to resolve this matter and who are still working to try to resolve this matter. If they can, I will be pleased, but I question it.

Mr. SPECTER. Will the distinguished Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HATCH. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I compliment my distinguished colleague, Senator HATCH—I have just come up from a conference, and I am catching a little bit of breath. One of the problems of working in the U.S. Senate is that we have many conflicting obligations. I was just in the transportation conference.

I start by congratulating my distinguished colleague from Utah for his tireless efforts on this bill. While we may have some substantive disagreements, I can attest to his around-the-clock efforts at many stages of this bill, and there have been very extensive negotiations involving many Senators.

At one stage of the negotiations, Senator HATCH; former Secretary of Transportation, William T. Coleman, Jr.; and I worked around the clock, and came to the so-called Hatch-Coleman-Specter compromise. This compromise was structured, I would say, on an understanding which the three of us, as well as many others in this body, have on the problems of discrimination. While I was on the phone talking about this bill with others, while the distinguished Senator from Utah spoke, I understand he referred to Mr. Coleman's status: first in his class at Harvard, unable to get a job as a victim of discrimination. I can personally attest to being unable to get a job, not on the basis of color, but on the basis of religion. Mr. Coleman is black: I am Jewish. I did not go to Harvard. It was only Yale. I was not first in my class. I was not too far from that, but I think, just as Bill Coleman was qualified for some jobs he sought, so was I. I was denied a job early in my career. I have been denied some later, but not on the basis of discrimination.

It is with the understanding of this sort of a problem that I make this brief introduction. I am not going to speak at length now, although I was second on the floor. I came here at 9:35 this morning right behind Senator HATCH. I am not going to speak now because it is still my hope that as we are talking there will be a compromise on this bill. Intensive discussions are still underway. We are trying to reconcile all differences, because this is a bill on which there ought to be an agreement. Civil rights is too important not to have an agreement. It is unthinkable that if it worked out to have a 65-to-35 vote in the Senate and a comparable majority in the House, that it would be vetoed and the veto would be sustained. Although we may have 67, 68, 70 Senators, we do not know what is going to happen yet on this bill.

The purpose of my asking the distinguished Senator from Utah a question is, because at the conclusion of our meeting, after Senator HATCH, Mr. Coleman and I worked around the clock a week ago Thursday and came to a conclusion of satisfaction with the bill, at that juncture—and Senator HATCH has pretty much covered this, but I want to specify it with a little more particularity—Senator HATCH said to Bill Coleman and ARLEN SPECTER, "I find this substitute acceptable; not perfect, but acceptable. I will recommend it to the President. But if the President does not agree to it, then I am going to vote with the President."

At that stage, Bill Coleman was surprised and I was a little surprised, but I said to both Senator HATCH and Mr. Coleman that although Mr. Coleman may have had some expectation beyond what Senator HATCH had said, there was no expressed commitment. But the point that I want to specify and emphasize is Senator HATCH's statement it was acceptable, not perfect, but acceptable, and that he would recommend it to the President, reserving the right as a matter of deference to the President not to vote for it.

I ask my distinguished colleague if I have accurately summarized our discussions a week ago Thursday morning at about 10:15?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, to a degree, the distinguished Senator has. I felt that, after all the work we had done on those sections that we had worked on, although they were not perfect, and I was not totally happy with them, if the President wanted to accept this language and not veto the bill, that would be acceptable to me, I can go with it. But there was one feeling that I had that was driving me along those lines; and that is, the current Supreme Court, I personally believe, is going to accept the language or might accept the language in the bill that says we are just trying to recodify Griggs. I am not sure of that. I have to say there were many other aspects of the bill with which I disagree, but I was willing to go with the President if he wanted to go with us.

I think it is important to state, too, that had I been able to get some of the additional changes I would have liked to have had, like the word "causes" in the business necessity part, some changes even in the particularity part, changes in Martin versus Wilks, changes in come of the pro-attorney provisions, had I been able to get all of those, I would not care what the White House did.

I would have been on this floor saying OK, we have to take a chance on the language that we came up with. Even though I know it is not perfect, and it may not solve the problem of quotas, we have to take a chance on that, and hope the Supreme Court does what is right with regard to that language.

If we had achieved the other changes I had desired, I would not have cared what the President or anybody else did; I would have come here and fought for this bill.

We did not achieve everything I had attempted to do. That is the problem. I have pointed out some of the problems today that our agreement and our work did not address.

But to answer the question again for the Senator, if the President would have taken that language that is satisfactory to him on the quota issue, then I would have supported the President and supported this bill, even though there is a lot of it I do not like, because I am hopeful that the Court will do what is right with regard to some of these issues.

I also want to point out that I am extremely concerned about the quota issues in here. I am extremely concerned about aspects of this bill which will lead to increased and costly discrimination. I am extremely concerned about some other issues. I would have taken the Martin versus Wilks language, I have to tell you that, even though I do not think it solves the problem, if the President had been willing to do so. But these other things were important to the President also and he feels he cannot take those, and neither does his attorney general, and neither do other members of his staff.

But I made it very clear that I would support the President if he did not take it, because I could go either way on this matter, because I could make compelling arguments against this bill, even with the work that we did. So that is the best way I can explain it.

Again, let me just say, one reason I was willing to, at least try that, was because of the ardent efforts of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania and our mutually good friend, Bill Coleman. We worked very hard with him. I wanted to please both of these men if I could. I wanted to please the President. I wanted to see if there was some way we could get this to a point where he could sign the bill because he said he wanted to sign a bill. I think this was the first time we were really able to sit down and try to do something about it in all the battles over this bill. Unfortunately, as I look at it in retrospect, I think we failed.

Now, that is not to say, that if the distinguished Senator can, through his efforts here today, bring additional change, I will not look at it or that I will not try to resolve it, and if we can solve the President's problems, I will be happy to try and be part of that resolution.

But that is where we are, and that is the best way I can explain it at this point. I personally still feel the bill has many weaknesses and is very bad and would cause a lot of problems. But it is certainly better than it was before.

Mr. SPECTER. I thank the distinguished Senator for his comments. I understand that he feels the bill has weaknesses. I understand that he feels the bill has problems. I understand that had he been able to make other changes he would have disagreed with the President.

But the core of what I think is critical about what the distinguished Senator from Utah and I are in agreement on is that he found this compromise acceptable and that he recommended it to the President even though he reserved the right to vote against it, oppose it if the President did not go along and that I would hope—I will speak on this later, Mr. President. I do not speak at length now because we are in the midst of discussions—my colleagues will rely upon the professional judgment of the distinguished Senator from Utah in accepting it and recommending it as distinguished from the consideration of following the President.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I think it is important to note that since the negotiations on these matters, I have naturally talked to many people about the language that we came up with, including people in the administration, people in the employer community, people in the employee community, and other Members of Congress.

I have to tell you that in retrospect, looking back on it, I thought maybe the language did solve some of the problems, but I am convinced that it did not. There have to be more changes in order for it to solve the problems I have raised today.

So the fact I hoped it might be something the President could accept back then, and I could recommend to the President back then, if he wanted to take it, does not negate the fact that this bill still has serious difficulties and has serious problems, and that even that language can be improved. Indeed, just as late as a few days ago, there have been efforts on the part of the proponents to see if they could work to change that language, which efforts have been rejected by members of the civil rights community.

When I went to the conference, I had some of my dear friends in the black caucus come up and say, this is terrible language, what you have done. I had others come up, who were top Republicans Senators and Representatives, who said, they could never support this language because it doesn't solve the problems, and they gave what they thought were good arguments.

I think it just goes to show that this bill is very technical, very difficult, almost impossible to resolve. And that the points I have made in my opening remarks are still true. If it stays in its current form, I think the President is right. In retrospect, I think he is right.

On balance, this bill ought to be rejected, because it is going to cause a lot of problems in our society. Just last weekend, we saw a man who was a former head of the Ku Klux Klan, who many call a racist, who appeared to be a racist, who had an overwhelming onslaught of accusations against him, serious accusations with lots of bases, and this man received 44 percent of a State's vote, almost 60 percent of the total white vote in that State, and his principal argument is what this bill is all about. The principal thing that appealed to those people was that we are not treating people equally in our society. We are preferring some people over others.

Now, whether his motivations were right or wrong, I do not choose to characterize them. I have my own feelings about it, regardless of what he is or what he said. The issues that were raised are on the minds of Americans of all races all over this country.

When we get away from the principle of equality of opportunity, and we go to a principle of equality of results, and group results at that, you are just playing into the hands of all the racists in America. We are playing into the hands of those who would cause racial division and strife in America. We are playing into the hands of making America less competitive, because what we are doing, if we adopt this language, unless the Supreme Court straightens it out—and I personally choose not to legislate on that basis—we go to a system where employers can no longer choose the person most qualified for the job under reasonable nondiscriminatory employment principles, and under laws that are really tough if there is any discrimination, to where the employer has to choose among the least qualified of those who are available for jobs.

When that happens, we are not progressing as a Nation; we are retrogressing. When that happens, our businesses are not going to take off; they are going to go down. When that happens, we are becoming like nations of Eastern Europe used to be and hope they can strike out from. When that happens, we are in danger of being like India, that has its caste system where they show preferences based upon caste and based upon differences—race if you want to.

That is what is involved. This is not a simple issue. This is not a simple set of issues. To the credit of the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, we have come a long way. Yes, we have tried very hard. If we do not pass this bill this year, the President does veto it, it seems to me that next year we have something that we can work on and try to resolve. But this bill involves the most intricate, difficult, complex, and important employment principles of any bill I have seen come to Congress in years. I have to say we failed on that compromise.

And I have to also say the President happens to be right. I am not just saying that to be politically loyal to the President. I admire him, I love him as a human being, I think he is a wonderful human being. He and his wife are great people. He has been a great President so far. But if I thought that there was a perfect compromise, I would not care, as much of a friend as he is, as much of a great President as he is, as much as he would not want it done—I would not care one whit. I would go ahead and pass this bill. I have stated the reasons I agree with the President, and I can tell you. They are important and significant reasons.

When you vote on this bill today, my colleagues, this is not some inconsequential thing. When you vote for this bill you are voting for a lot of things that I think are detrimental to our society, a lot of things that could hurt a lot of people in our society, and hurt the very people most who you are trying most to help. That is serious stuff. I feel deeply about these things.

That is why I tried to work so hard with the distinguished Senator, and with my good friend, Bill Coleman. They feel just as deeply on their side of these issues as I do on mine. But I do not think they can refute what we have said here today.

I think it is time for Democrats and Republicans to reject this kind of legislation. I am still open to trying to resolve it if we can, but it seems to me it will have to be resolved better than it is right now.

I have to say in retrospect it has not been resolved. In fact, I have become more keen in understanding the problems in the bill. I have spent hours since we came up with that negotiated effort trying to understand this better. I understood it pretty well to begin with.

But today I have to tell you the President happens to be right on this.

That is not going to be enough to stop the bill from passing, but I hope it will be enough to sustain the veto if he has the intestinal fortitude to veto this bill, which he should do, and which he says he will do. I expect him to. If he does, I hope we will sustain the veto.

I have taken much too much time.

My colleague from Ohio has been patient. I certainly want to turn the floor over to him.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio is recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise as one of the seven Senate members of the conference committee on the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

I want to say publicly that the distinguished Senator from Utah has done yeoman work in attempting to bring about a compromise in connection with this legislation. He has put his heart and his soul into it. He has made a good faith effort. Those who are more strongly procivil rights than some of the opponents of this bill have also made a good faith effort. But the fact is the President of the United States has been resolute in his opposition.

Having commended my colleague from Utah for the magnificent effort that he has put into this bill in trying to bring about a compromise, I am disappointed that now he speaks so strongly against it. I am disappointed that he tells his colleagues that they should vote against this bill because some little details in the bill are not satisfactory.

I am disappointed to know, and he tell us, that David Duke and George Bush and ORRIN HATCH are against this bill. Maybe 60 percent of the whites in Louisiana did vote for David Duke. Maybe they will not vote for this bill. But I believe the overwhelming majority of Americans would vote for this bill. I think passage of this bill is the Senate's way, the Congress' way, and, hopefully, the President's way of saying we do not agree and are not going to yield to the David Dukes of America.

This conference report embodies the will of a strong majority of the Senate. More importantly, the conference report restores basic civil rights protection for millions of Americans.

Women and minorities were victimized last year in a series of stunning Supreme Court decisions. Those decisions turned back the clock on our progress toward equal opportunity. This bill rights those terrible wrongs inflicted by the Supreme Court.

At the outset, I must commend Senator KENNEDY for his leadership in connection with this legislation. He has mastered the legal issues in the bill. He has spent hundreds of hours negotiating with the White House and educating his colleagues. Senator KENNEDY's performance was a tour de force. It is truly one of the finest legislative efforts I have witnessed in my tenure in the Senate.

He has been helped immeasurably by Senator JEFFORDS, my ranking counterpart on the Labor Subcommittee. He deserves great credit. He has been steadfast in his commitment to restoring civil rights protection for women and minorities. Many in his own party do not support that effort. But with no reservation, no lack of courage, Senator JEFFORDS has put principle above politics. And the same I might say holds true for Senator SPECTER who has worked tirelessly seeking to fashion a consensus package.

It is a fact that we thought we had worked out that package. But the White House has been determined to block a consensus. Those who have the ear of the President have consistently insisted upon the very last letter, the very last comma, every single dot over every i. So they come here today threatening a veto.

Mr. President, I do not intend to review the intricate substantive details of the conference report. By now the arguments about such issues as the burden of proof in disparate impact litigation—things that people do not understand—and the composition of a pleading alleging a discriminatory group of practices are all too familiar to those of us who deal with this type of legalese. But 240 million Americans do not understand it.

I will tell you who does understand this bill: The people who are affected by this bill, those who have been fighting for an equal share of opportunity in this country, those who have not been getting a fair share of the action, those who have suffered discrimination over a period of years in the history of our Nation. Yes, they understand it. They do not understand the wordage. But they understand the impact.

The real issues at stake here are issues of integrity, issues of justice, issues of fairness. I want to tell Members of the Senate, in particular my colleagues from Arkansas and Oklahoma, that this conference report proves again that the Senate has a sense of integrity about it. It vindicates one of the cardinal rules of the Senate, and that is a Senator is only as good as his or her word.

As we all remember last July when we enacted the Civil Rights Act of 1990, in the Senate, a number of Senators were precluded from offering amendments to the bill. The minority leader acting fully within his rights under postcloture procedure blocked any efforts to improve the bill.

But the chairman of the Labor Committee and the majority leader pledged that the conferees would fight for two particular amendments. The first amendment by Senator PRYOR would have made clear that a mere statistical imbalance in the work force is not sufficient to make out a violation of title VII. The second amendment by Senator BOREN and others would have set a cap on punitive damages at the greater of $150,000 or compensatory damages.

Let me make this clear. I personally oppose any cap on damages. I believe that the jury or the court has the right to determine for itself or themselves what that amount should be. I particularly resent a cap on damages assessed against a person who has intentionally discriminated against women and minorities.

I think it is fair to say, Mr. President, the majority of Senate conferees oppose any imposition of any cap. At the conference it became clear that a majority of the House conferees vehemently opposed any cap, as well.

Let us be realistic. What occurred was this: pledges have been made on the floor of the Senate to Senator BOREN, to Senator PRYOR, and to a group of other Senators that those amendments would be provided for in the conference report. And those of us who were on the conference committee, even though we did not agree with those particular amendments, felt that we were honor-bound to make good on those pledges. We fought hard for that cap. We argued, we pleaded, we cajoled, and, yes, it is fair to say that we twisted a few arms until we were successful. We said to the civil rights community leadership, "We made a commitment, and you are in no position to try to prevail against us, to keep us from living up to that commitment."

They were not in agreement, but the good soldiers that they are, they recognized that commitments made by those who are leading the effort on their behalf are commitments that have to be kept. I can tell you that our efforts were not popular with many advocates of this bill or with our House counterparts. They were not popular with us, ourselves. But our credibility was at stake, and I am pleased to say that we honored the pledges made to assert the will of the majority of the Senate.

The pledge made on the floor of the Senate by the majority leader and by the chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Committee was kept. I think any caps on damages are unsound policy, but the conference report includes both the Pryor and the Boren amendments. Senators PRYOR and BOREN and other Senators who were concerned about those particular issues have a right to be comfortable with this conference report.

We went the extra mile in this conference report. We agreed to have the bill recommitted to conference, after it had come out of conference committee, in order to make seven additional changes. In fact, the package of changes we incorporated were agreed to by Senators SPECTER and HATCH. Senator HATCH indicated he could support the bill with these changes, if the administration would support the bill.

Unfortunately, the administration remained unsatisfied. I am never quite sure who the administration is. I do not really believe it is the President. It is some of those big honchos down there at the White House who first find out what the business community wants and then say, "Yes, sir, whatever you say." And they say, "No, we are not satisfied with the bill as it is." Then they go to the President and say, "You have to veto the bill because some of our heavy hitters in the business community are not satisfied with it."

So I understand the fact that my distinguished colleague from Utah, Senator HATCH, has no choice but to oppose the bill, even though the conferees accepted his suggested changes. But I sincerely believe that the specific substantive details are not the issue here. We have been negotiating for months with the administration seeking a consensus bill. We do not have a consensus, because the White House operatives simply do not want a consensus. They want to kill a civil rights bill. If the White House wanted a deal, I am confident we could work out our remaining substantive problems in short order.

But they do not want a civil rights bill. The President of all people, the President who promised so much as a candidate, is being misled by some of those who are closest to him in the White House. Make no mistake about it, this is not a substantive problem; it is pure power politics at its most cynical. It is power politics with those who gave $100,000 and more to the President in order for him to get elected. Those who have the ear of those in the White House are calling the tune. Apparently, the White House operative believe that the administration is somehow invincible. Maybe they ought to read the recent polls to indicate to them that the White House is not invincible and that the American people are losing confidence in their President. Maybe they will understand that should the President veto this bill—which I hope he will not—his position in the polls will go down even further. Oh, yes, maybe it will go up a little higher with David Duke and some of his ilk. But the overwhelming majority of Americans are not going to be happy if President Bush vetoes this bill.

Apparently, these operatives believe that a foreign crisis gives the President the license to protect the rich over the working class on tax policy, and to side with corporate lobbyists over the victims of discrimination in the area of civil rights. These operatives are consistent, but they are out of tune with the American people. They are living in their little glass-enclosed offices. They are wrong.

The American people want to do right on the issue of civil rights, and this bill does right on the issue of civil rights. This bill was good enough for Senator HATCH, until the White House made it clear that it was not good enough. It is truly unfortunate that the administration wants to play such macho games. "Do it this way, or else I will veto the tax bill, and I will close down the Government. Do it this way, or I will veto the civil rights bill. Do it this way, or I will veto this bill or that bill."

The people of America elected the President to be the President of all the people, not to be the President of just a few who have his ear in the White House. That is not what the people of America look for in their President. We are not looking to read your lips, Mr. President, or your hips, nor to listen to your quips.

Mr. President, what we really want is a President of all the people, and you have an opportunity to reassert that leadership with respect to the civil rights bill. It is reprehensible when the arrogance of those who are closest to the President is used to derail the restoration of our most cherished civil rights for millions of women and minorities. I hope that President Bush has not endorsed this approach. I am confident that we will send this bill to President Bush with overwhelming bipartisan support. When the President reviews this bill personally, which I hope he will do, he should ignore all the labels and the rhetoric. It is absurd to call this bill a quota bill. That is just not factual. That is the unfounded chant of the corporate lobbyists who are seeking to kill this bill at all costs.

Instead, I am hopeful that President Bush will focus on the purpose of this bill: To restore the dream of every American, that in this great Nation you will get a fair chance to prove yourself, regardless of your race, your creed, your gender, your national origin, or your color. That is what this bill is all about. It is a bill to provide equal opportunity for all Americans.

If the President understands that true purpose, then President Bush should sign this bill. Maybe some detail of the bill is imperfect, and I am willing to concede, without agreeing to any particular provision, that some detail of almost every bill is imperfect. But the legislative process is one of give and take, and it is up to the President to recognize that, for years, we have been waiting to pass this legislation. And if the majority of the House and Senate send it to him, an overwhelming majority in both bodies, it should be signed.

I hope my faith in the President is justified, because this will be his first real test of whether he wants to be the President of all the people. There is no secret about the fact that the President is losing that confidence out there. The polls tell us that. The polls tell us that his position with respect to protecting the wealthy against taxation and putting the burden on the middle class and poor is not working in his favor.

An overwhelming majority of Americans support him in his efforts in the Middle East and I, too, support him in his efforts in Saudi Arabia, although I disagree with him in his most recent condemnation of the State of Israel. I think he is wrong. I do not think he understands. I think he is misinformed.

Generally speaking, I support him with respect to his actions as far as Saudi Arabia and protection of Saudi Arabia and standing up to Saddam Hussein are concerned, and so do, I say, an almost unanimous group of Members of the Congress.

But his actions on this bill will tell us a great deal about the real George Bush. In his public life he has had a split personality on civil rights. I am really not sure where he stands on civil rights or what is in his heart.

On the one hand, in his 1964 unsuccessful campaign for the Senate, candidate Bush publicly opposed the landmark Civil Rights Act of 1965. On the other hand, in his 1988 campaign for the Presidency, George Bush publicly promised that civil rights would be "at the top of the agenda" of his administration, and he would "guarantee his personal involvement in civil rights."

President Bush, it is now time for you to live up to that commitment, to take a personal involvement in civil rights. Quit listening to all those honchos sitting around those fancy offices at the White House; quit listening to the business council; take a personal involvement in civil rights.

I personally believe you to be a decent man, Mr. President; I think you are a humane person and I think you have a feeling for your fellow men and women. I think it is now time, Mr. President, for you to take a stand, and your actions will speak louder than words.

The American people do not understand words about quotas and all these other little legal gimmicks that are talked about and all the various legislative language that is used by all of those who are saying this bill should not be signed.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990, simply stated, is the most important civil rights bill since the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

If you veto this bill, Mr. President, and you revert to your earlier anticivil rights position, then you will have proven that your kinder, gentler campaign rhetoric was nothing more than politics at its worst.

Mr. President, you lead the Republican Party. Your decision on the Civil Rights Act of 1990 will tell the Nation about the heart and soul of the Republican Party. Is the Republican Party truly the party of Lincoln or has it become the party of David Duke? That is what the question before us is all about.

Earlier this month I voted to confirm Judge David Souter to become the ninth member of the Supreme Court. That was not a popular vote among people I consider to be my friends and supporters. David Souter was far from a perfect nominee, and I expressed great doubt about his views. In the end, however, I supported his nomination because I believe he would be a fairminded, open jurist.

I am sure that from the administration perspective the Civil Rights Act of 1990 is far from a perfect bill. The White House has expressed grave doubt about certain provisions. For instance, supporters of this administration, particularly the business community, are clamoring for a veto.

But in the end, the President should show leadership by recognizing that this is a fair bill. It is a bill which should become the law of the land. The American people will be watching. Minorities and women are looking to their Government for help, and Congress will not deny their legitimate pleas.

Mr. President, do not duck the issue with a pocket veto. Do not wait until Congress has gone home and then make a pocket veto as if that were not the same as an outright veto. Mr. President, sign this bill into law. If you do, we can move forward together as a Nation to ensure equal opportunity for all Americans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I want to say a few words with regard to the comment of my distinguished colleague from Ohio. As he knows, I have inestimable respect for him. He is hardworking, indefatigable, and believes in what he is doing and gets sometimes worked maybe into a little too much rhetoric.

I just want to say the Republican Party is not the party of David Duke. We repudiated David Duke. The Republican Party has a wide diversity of people in it, but I might caution to point out to the distinguished Senator from Ohio that the Republican Party is also the party of JIM JEFFORDS, ARLEN SPECTER, and my good friend, JACK DANFORTH, three of whom have been with him on the bill from the beginning, but all of whom recognize this bill needs work and all three of whom have been working consistently day in and day out to try and correct it.

I might also mention the Republican Party is the party of Abraham Lincoln.

I have been reading about the Civil War each night recently, ever since the wonderful PBS documentary. I have to say at that particular time it took a lot of guts for Abraham Lincoln to stand up and do what he did; even if he was in a quandary over how to do it.

But that is what our party represents.

I also have to say that linking President Bush with David Duke I think was hitting below the belt just a little. In fact, I would say a great big whole bit. And to throw my name in there also is highly offensive to me. If I stand for anything in this body, I stand for equality, and I believe very, very strongly in civil rights.

I might mention that many of the people who voted for David Duke down there in Louisiana were not Republicans. And many of the people who reelected my dear friend and colleague from Louisiana, as he should have been, were Republicans who voted for a Democrat because they thought he was right; they thought he would be better.

We have our differences on this bill. There is no question about it. Nobody has worked harder than I have to try and resolve those differences, but they still exist. And the President happens to be right. This bill is still a quota bill.

If this bill passes and his veto is overridden, or he does not veto it, I hope that the Supreme Court will keep the employment management laws on an even keel. I hope they will do what is right.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. HATCH. If I could finish and get my emotional statement out, too, OK; I will be happy to then yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. I missed the earlier emotional statements. Now you are getting my emotional statements again.

Mr. HATCH. I know I get to my good colleague, because he gets as emotional as I do sometimes.

I think it important here not to make accusations about the President. He is sincere and has good cause to be concerned about this bill.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio is sincere, and he has good cause to be sincere, and I tell you no one is more sincere about this than I am. I tried my best to try to put this thing together in a way that would be acceptable to everybody. I have to admit I plain-out failed, and I personally failed from my own perspective.

Maybe we could straighten this out. I do not know. But, as of right now it is not straightened out. And anyone who looks at it fairly clearly knows the President is not vetoing it because he does not want to do what is right with regard to civil rights; he is vetoing it because of all these reasons I cited in my earlier remarks.

Now, having said all of that, I hope that what we can do is keep this debate on an even keel and talk about what the law is, what the facts are, and what the language is. Use the compromise for anything you want to use it for.

I have to say it is a failed version of what I wished we could have done better on. But it was a sincere one and it certainly did move the bill forward.

I commend my colleagues for at least being willing to look at that language and to adopt it. But it was not enough. I have to confess I think we read it and studied it and reread and looked at it; it was not enough.

As much as I wanted to be with my good friend, Bill Coleman, on this issue—and I did, and I do—I have to say that the bill still does not merit this kind of support. I do not think that the problems have been resolved. I do not think the problems have been resolved on the other side of the floor either for those who had questions about this bill. I just wanted to make this clear. I give credit where credit is due.

I note the distinguished Senator from Vermont wants to speak and I am glad to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, first I commend the Senator from Utah for his efforts in trying to bring us a bill that the President would sign, and I am still hopeful that the President will do so. But there is no question that the efforts he has made have brought us closer to a resolution of this problem.

Mr. President, at the beginning of this Congress, we were instructed that "America is never wholly herself unless she is engaged in high moral principle." There is no higher moral principle in a democracy than ensuring equal rights. That is the very principle that we seek to strengthen today.

I rise again in support of the Civil Rights Act of 1990. I am both hopeful and frustrated. My hope is that the conference committee, with the help and input of many others, both in and outside this body, have finally arrived at a version of this legislation which fully satisfies all legitimate concerns on the part of the President and the administration. My frustration stems from the apparent fact that no matter what we do to modify the language of the bill to address their specific concerns, it will never be enough for some of my colleagues and the administration. In fact, we now have received a renewed veto threat issued by the Attorney General in response to this latest modification of the bill. With so much effort put in by the Senator from Utah to make it acceptable.

The differences in language between the parties—between what we are proposing and what the administration, at various times, has said it will accept—are slight. In some respects the differences are significant to be sure, but there is no wide gulf between the respective points of view.

We have again spent hours upon hours in an effort to see if we could draft language to accommodate the concerns of all parties. Senator SPECTER has most recently been a particular tower of strength in refusing to allow this measure to die. He has been tireless in pushing us onward toward resolution. Senators HATCH, KENNEDY, and DANFORTH have been there as well.

I have seen firsthand the good faith that has characterized the actions of the parties. There is not a shred of doubt in my mind that the President sincerely wants a solid civil rights bill that he can sign. I do not have that same conviction regarding the interests of some of his advisors. Nonetheless, these same advisors have devoted a tremendous amount of time and energy to discussions and negotiations on this bill.

Unfortunately, we have not been successful in finding the particular language combination which will unlock the administration's resistance. As I stated when we last addressed this bill on the floor of the Senate, I remain dedicated to working with my colleagues and the administration to bring about the desired result of an agreement on this legislation. I believe that the version of the bill that we are now presenting to the body should be accepted by the administration for it meets their stated concerns head on.

The conference committee compromise language, as well as a summary of that language, has been submitted for the RECORD. Other Members have recited the list of changes made and I do not intend to duplicate their efforts. Rather, I respectfully refer my colleagues to the underlying documents at this point for an overview of where we now stand. Six or seven major issues have been resolved with these language changes. As a result, the overall profile of this bill has been substantially modified.

I want to spend the rest of my time today discussing the issue of quotas, the single issue on which it repeatedly has been represented that this bill will be vetoed. In so doing, I wish to focus on two things: the arguments made by the Attorney General and why he is wrong.

As a short-term political matter, his letter is quite sound. Almost everyone in this country opposes quotas—wrap that label around something and it is sure to be unpopular. But as a legal matter, his opinion is quite unsound. No variation of this legislation would create quotas, and the Hatch amendments adopted by the conference committee make that even clearer than it was before.

For the benefit of my colleagues who have understandably been consumed by other issues over the past few weeks, let me try to shed some light on the issues raised by the Wards Cove case and how the bills tries to resolve them.

First, it is important to remember that there are two types of title VII discrimination suits—intentional discrimination, also called disparate treatment cases, and the so-called disparate impact cases, which involve unintentional or resultant discrimination. Nothing on the face of what they do seems to be intended toward discrimination but it results in discrimination.

In 1971, a unanimous Supreme Court joined a decision written by Chief Justice Burger in Griggs versus Duke Power Company, which has formed the basis for disparate impact employment discrimination law over the past decades. In that decision, the Court held that not only were overt or intentional acts of discrimination illegal, but practices which appeared neutral on their face but operated to exclude a class of individuals were also illegal.

In Griggs, the employer instituted high school diploma and other educational requirements that disproportionately excluded blacks. However, the Court reasoned that even with this discriminatory impact, the practices should be permitted if they were based on "business necessity." Thus, in Griggs and the cases following Griggs, an employer was obligated to show that the challenged practice was related to the job for which it was applied, or to successful performance of that job. Thus, at that point, the entire dispute centers on whether the employer will be able to continue using a practice which does, in fact, discriminate. The Duke Power Co. could not demonstrate that its diploma requirement was related to success on the jobs in question, entry level laborer's jobs. As a result, the requirement was struck down by the Court.

In Wards Cove versus Atonio the Court changed the rules regarding disparate impact discrimination by severing the nexus between "business necessity" and job performance or job relatedness. In its place the Court inserted a standard that would allow continued use of employer practices which disparately impact on minorities—created discrimination, in other words—and women so long as they "serve in a significant way the legitimate employment goals on the employer," a much, much broader standard.

The reason that this lesser standard is opposed by the civil rights community is that it could provide justification for practices which had been previously outlawed or were viewed as inherently suspect under the more stringent Griggs standard. Of particular concern in this regard is the possibility that actual, or simply perceived, business costs—the costs of doing business—would once again be raised as excuses to deny employment opportunities to women. Most of the concern here is about discrimination against women, and our colleagues should be aware of that.

Limiting business costs is inherently a legitimate employer goal. Obviously, employers want to make a profit. It is simple economics that, to the extent they are able to control or suppress the cost side of the equation, their profitability will be enhanced. The question is whether such cost control incentives could be supported under the more lenient Wards Cove standard as a basis for permitting continued use of discriminatory employment practices. Under the stricter Griggs standard, such a rationale has repeatedly been rejected. Thus, if the answer is that Wards Cove would permit such practices, and I believe that this would be the case, we indeed have taken a step backward.

In discussing this issue in the past, I have often used the example that the cost-based justifications available under Wards Cove would permit restrictions by employers on the employment of single parents, a policy which inherently would have a disparate impact on women. Because of the health plan cost savings generated by providing coverage for fewer dependents, Wards Cove very likely would permit this policy of discriminating against single parents, mostly women. The suggestion of this possibility has often been disparaged and called unrealistic. "Employers would not do those sort of things" the opponents of the bill tell me; "give us real examples."

However, I do not have to make up examples; history tells us that these things do occur. Prior to the enactment of title VII, and even after it was on the books, employers often provided medical and disability benefits to employees on a discriminatory basis. Plans frequently excluded the dependents and spouses of female workers while covering those of male employees. Plans provided coverage to female employees only if they first established themselves to be "breadwinners" or "heads of household." Still other plans extended medical insurance for pregnancy to wives of male employees but not to female employees. Employers also sought to discriminate against women in the basic employment decision by such policies as refusing to hire women with preschool age children while imposing no parallel requirement for similarly situated fathers. These were cases that occurred and these are cases we believe would now be allowed under the broad definition of Wards Cove.

Such employer practices are clear examples of disparate treatment and, for the most part, have been found to be outright violations of title VII. In many of these cases employers argued that their policies excluding or limiting the participation of hiring of women were justified by the greater cost of employing and providing benefits to women and their dependents. This defense has been expressly rejected by the EEOC in its regulations, and by the courts in the cases under title VII. It is not paranoia on the part of the civil rights community to fear a return to the days when this debate had merit. The change in disparate impact law which the Court made in the Wards Cove decision will have that result. On the other hand, this bill will take us back to the tried and true standard of Griggs that worked so well over the past 20 years.

Twenty years after Griggs, and because of the decision in Wards Cove, we are now being threatened with a veto for trying to carefully define the term "business necessity." I ask you Mr. President, is this "the Nation refreshed by freedom [that] stands ready to push on?"

Since we are now engaged in a political argument, I suppose one way to look at this issue is to view the question before us not as one of quotas, but rather as one of loopholes. How many loopholes will we allow for those who discriminate? How many loopholes can we accept as the price of this bill?

This is the real issue between the civil rights supporters and the White House. Some of these supporters think we have already gone too far. I am not among them. But, after months of trying to work with the administration; of trying to understand its position; of making concessions; I think we have gone far enough and should go no further.

Our first proposal was tied to job performance. Critics, including the administration, argued that it failed to contemplate layoffs. For example, if an employer had a plant in Vermont with mainly white workers, and one in Los Angeles with mainly Hispanic workers, and for economic reasons had to close one, would it create a disparate impact to choose the LA plant? A novel concept, there are no cases on this, but we were willing to fix it. So the bill was changed to allow an exception here. The same issue was raised by the administration in the case of bankruptcy. We said you are right, OK. We will give you a loophole there.

The White House argued that we had to incorporate yet another loophole, patterned after the Court's Beazer decision. OK, another loophole, we will give it to you. Thus, even though they may have no bearing on job performance, rules relating to tobacco, alcohol, and legal and illegal drugs were sanctioned by the bill under a much looser standard.

We had gone from a loophole the size of a Yugo to one that you could drive a dump truck through, but it still was not enough. The administration wanted to turn the bill on its head, making the Griggs standard the exception, and the loophole the rule. They wanted a loophole that any employer could drive a convoy of double-bottoms through with room to spare.

Those of us who had been involved in the discussions with the administration each had our own sense of this over the past few weeks. For me, I was not convinced until I saw the final proposal received from the administration on September 21. There, spelled out in black and white, was an incredible step backward, in terms of both the negotiations and the law.

This proposal would have sanctioned not only the loopholes we had agreed to, but some fairly outrageous ones as well—legitimate customer preference, for example. The customer is always right? Even if he does not want to deal with Jews, women, or blacks? That is all right because in order to help our bottom line we will make more sales if we discriminate.

The one I like even better is "promotional potential." Well, if Mr. Griggs was going to be President of Duke Power someday he was going to need a high school diploma, but all he wanted was to have an entry level laborers job. Good grief, we might as well repeal disparate impact altogether if we pass the bill in the way it was proposed in their last offer by the administration. At least that would be a more honest approach.

What was unspoken was just as damning. Discriminatory employer practices would be justified and allowed to continue, despite disparate impact on minorities or women, so long as the employer's "legitimate employment goals are significantly served by—even if they do not require—the challenged employment practice." Those are words from Wards Cove. What is more legitimate than controlling costs; and what costs are harder to control than health care?

In the face of that type of proposal, is it any wonder that the civil rights community fears backsliding on individual employment rights? No, Mr. President, it is not paranoia to want legislation to clarify and reaffirm the protections of title VII; rather it is simple common sense.

Mr. President, having focused on the principle area of disagreement, I think two things must be kept in mind.

First, disparate impact cases represent a small fraction of title VII cases. The best estimate I can come up with is about one-half of 1 percent of all cases before the EEOC are disparate impact cases, and that probably overstates the situation.

Second, there are in this legislation, perhaps suprisingly, substantial areas of agreement.

We agree with the administration that the Patterson case was wrongly decided. In that case the Court came to the conclusion that a Reconstruction-era statute provided protection in the formation of a contract, but not in its execution. It was an absurd result. Under the Court's ruling, you could not discriminate in hiring under the statute, but could freely engage in the most egregious conduct the next day.

We agree with the administration that women need greater protections against intentional discrimination, particularly with respect to on-the-job harassment.

We agree with the administration that the clock should toll in title VII seniority cases only when a person becomes aware of a harm, not when a potentially complex policy is implemented.

In fact, we agree with President Bush that he should not sign a quota bill or one that will create a lawyers' bonanza. This bill will not create quotas and it will not line the pockets of lawyers.

This bill will be a resounding no to the bigoted politics and employer practices which are still a part of the fabric of this country.

I hope my colleagues can show the same outrage at disrespect for equal rights that they showed for disrespect for the flag. I hope my colleagues will roundly support this legislation. I hope especially that the party of Abraham Lincoln will reaffirm its heritage.

This body and the other body will do the right thing and pass this conference report. I hope my President will do the right thing as well. We are engaged in high moral principles, and we need him to join us.

We cannot let a well-tried fabric of law protecting those principles be punched full of loopholes. This is not a quota bill; it is a question of how many loopholes should be allowed. We have been pushed to add loophole after loophole. No more loopholes. Enough is enough. The fabric of protection is punctured but sound. Let us not consent to destroy it. I urge Senators to show the President that he should sign this bill.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join in support of this conference report. But before I talk about the Civil Rights Act, let me take 1 minute because I see our colleague from Missouri on the floor. He had an op-ed article in today's Washington Post urging certain steps be taken so that in the name of religion, violence is not used around the face of the Earth. I think it is a very significant piece. I ask unanimous consent to have that particular statement printed in the RECORD at this particular point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Oct. 16, 1990]

KILLING IN THE NAME OF GOD

(By John C. Danforth)

Where are our religious leaders when our need for them is desperate? At the very time when they should be the most vocal, they seem tongue-tied. What a change has overcome them, and at the most inopportune time imaginable.

Since Moses, religious leaders have shown no reluctance in telling politicians what to do. What is called the "prophetic ministry" has often been resented by those of us who are in government, but it has been an important counterbalance to the excesses of power politics. While governments have attended to the practical needs of military strength and factional accommodations, religious groups have insisted on the claims of peace and social justice. But, rather suddenly, it is the politicians who have championed a just and stable world order, while responsible church leaders have been mute in the midst of truly dangerous religious fanaticism.

Consider the global response to Iraq's invasion of Kuwait. George Bush and Mikhail Gorbachev have met in Helsinki to issue a joint condemnation of aggression. The United Nations Security Council, including the United States, France, Britain, the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China, has adopted nine separate resolutions offering not only a united front against a specific aggression but the hope of a new world order based on international law. Meanwhile, the heretofore secular Saddam Hussein attempts to cast his ambitions as a religious crusade, and Iran's religious leader, the Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, calls for a holy war to free the Middle East from the Western infidel.

Indeed, in most if not all of the world's trouble spots, religious extremism is at the heart of the problem. In Israel, Moslems throw rocks at Jews and Jews shoot back at Moslems. In the chaos of Lebanon, religious factions are so numerous it is difficult to keep track of them.

In Northern Ireland, Catholic and Protestant Christians bomb each other as they have for decades. Hindu India and Moslem Pakistan face off against each other, offering the prospect of nuclear weapons if necessary to prove their points. And within India, the Hindus fight the Sikhs. In East Timor, Moslems slaughter Catholics. In Sudan, Christians, Moslems and animists kill each other.

All of this killing is done with the absolute certainty that God wants it so. If thine enemy offends thee, rub him out. Indeed, it is believed that to lose one's life in God's cause is to die a martyr's death and win a reward in heaven.

We in the West, enjoying a passable degree of religious tolerance, have tended to dismiss news accounts of holy wars as shocking occurrences in exotic places. Yet, when swastikas are painted in a Jewish school in Maryland, the distant is brought home. And, when fanatics across the world arm themselves with nuclear and chemical weapons and with the ballistic missiles to deliver them, exotic places are hours away and local upheavals become global emergencies.

The notion that God demands blood does not just pop into the head of the average person. Bloodshed is an acquired religious taste. It is acquired because it is taught by the ayatollahs of the world, by the Ian Paisleys and the Meir Kahanes. It is taught, and it can be untaught. But it cannot be untaught by silence.

Where are the voices of interfaith reconciliation in all this turmoil? For Christians, the concept of the Prince of Peace is largely a Christmas card slogan. The loudest voices are those of religious crackpots, while church councils debate who should be ordained and what should be deleted from hymnals and what resolutions should be dispatched to members of Congress.

It is well and good that religious bodies express their views on a variety of political subjects. But it is not well and good that the various faiths remain mute in the face of religiously inspired calamity. As a matter of urgent world necessity, religious leaders must speak loudly and clearly on what their faith demands and what it condemns. One would hope that the most insistent demands from all faiths would be for humility and reconciliation and love. One would hope that the strongest condemnations from all faiths would be for intolerance and hatred and holy wars.

If the Security Council can bring together the United States, the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China for a common expression of commitment to international law, surely religious leaders can devise a forum for a common commitment to religious peace. Granted, religious councils have been dilly-dallying about ecumenism for generations without much to show for their efforts. But perhaps a few nuclear warheads in the hands of fundamentalists can spur good people into action.

Specifically, here is one suggestion that may save a lot of lives. The pope should issue an invitation to an interfaith section of widely recognized religious leaders. He should present a draft document stating that violence in the name of religion is contrary to the will of God. He should seek the active support of as many leaders as will join with him for such a document. Finally, he should call for the creation of a standing forum of religious leaders to address issues of religious violence. In short, just as the Security Council addresses political causes of international conflict, so religious causes of conflict could be addressed by a council of religious leaders.

Would such an invitation be rejected by some of its recipients? Probably. But some would surely accept, and even a small start is worth trying. Where religion is the problem, it is up to religious people to seek the answers.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I want to commend Senator KENNEDY, first of all, for his leadership and the incredible amount of work he has done on this Civil Rights Act of 1990. This bill is a real tribute to his work. Senator JEFFORDS also has been a stalwart throughout on this process. Let me add two others who deserve special commendation: Senator SPECTER, who has tried to work out a compromise that would be acceptable to the President—I gather as of right now that is not achieved, but we hope there will be a reexamination in the White House—and also Senator METZENBAUM. I have been pleased to be a cosponsor of this legislation and serve on the conference committee.

Let me just add here, because, as each of us in the Senate knows, our staffs do so much work: Cheryl Smith, of my staff, has headed my employment subcommittee for some time now, and has been doing a superb job, not only on the Civil Rights Act but on a great many other things. In fact, she has been doing such a superb job that Gov. Doug Wilder has heard about her and is stealing her from the U.S. Government. I am sorry to lose Cheryl Smith, but I commend Gov. Doug Wilder for his perception and recognition of someone of real talent.

I just ran into former Secretary of Transportation Bill Coleman out in the lobby. Here is a prominent Republican who has been working on the Civil Rights Act, who says this is the direction we have to go if we are going to create opportunity in our country.

Arthur Fletcher, appointed by President Bush as Chairman of the Civil Rights Commission, says we ought to be passing this bill.

Why is it necessary? We have had six decisions by the U.S. Supreme Court that unquestionably erode basic civil rights in this country.

The Court negates what I think was clear congressional intent.

The sixth decision, Richmond versus Crosan, is not part of this bill. That case would be overturned by a separate bill and I have the honor of being the chief sponsor of it. I hope next year we can move that bill; that is, overturn the Croson decision, concerning minority business setasides. That decision has substantially eroded opportunities for minorities and women to have public contracts and to have opportunities in our society.

The most fundamental of those five decisions that the Civil Rights Act turns back is the Wards Cove versus Atonio decision that reversed key aspects of the 1971 Griggs versus Duke Power Co. decision. The decision issued last year by the Supreme Court, the Wards Cove decision, involving an Alaska cannery in that State, clearly is a major step backward. As I read both the majority decision of the Supreme Court and the dissenting opinion of the Court, it baffles me, frankly, to figure out how the Supreme Court came to its conclusions.

The issue of quotas has been raised on the floor. We have made it so clear that there are no quotas in this bill. I do not know what else can be done. Senator PRYOR, our colleague from Arkansas, suggested that we should make it more clear, and so in conference we made it more clear. We not only made it clear there should not be quotas, but we said nothing in this bill should encourage employers to adopt quotas.

Then I read the letter from the Attorney General. I have great respect for Attorney General Dick Thornburgh, but he says that the changes made in conference "make it even more of a quota bill." How anyone can come to that conclusion I just cannot understand. I know the Attorney General cannot read all these things himself, but he ought to be hiring somebody who understands the English language very clearly. Then after it is pointed out that we say clearly no quotas are involved, the Attorney General's letter says that it might result "in quotas being adopted surreptitiously."

I do not think we are going to have any surreptitious quotas being adopted in this Nation. We did not have that under Griggs versus Duke Power. That is just not a legitimate argument, and anyone who uses the quota argument, frankly, is straining to find some excuse to kill the bill.

The arguments, as I listened to them on the floor today, have a very familiar echo. I was elected to the State legislature when I was 25 years old, a green, young State legislator from southern Illinois. As my colleague from Missouri knows, southern Illinois is very southern. My home is deep in southern Illinois, 170 miles from the Mississippi border, 300 miles from Chicago, south of Richmond, and south of Louisville.

When I was elected to the State legislature, I was the first State legislator from southern Illinois to sponsor the establishment of a civil rights organization. Then it was called the Fair Employment Practices Commission. We heard the same arguments; if we pass that, we are going to have quotas. I heard one phrase this morning that certainly harks back to those old days. It says, employers cannot choose the most capable people. There is not one word in this bill that says to employers, you cannot choose the most capable people. Obviously, they can.

What this bill does is to make opportunity for everyone in this country. I do not mean to sound partisan, I say to my colleagues on the other side of the aisle. I think we have lost some ground in the last 10 years. We were making progress in the area of civil rights and in creating opportunities for others and being sensitive to those less fortunate in our society. But, for whatever reasons, and I am not suggesting that Congress does not play some role here, but I think the national leadership under President Reagan was not sensitive to this area. At best, we reached a plateau instead of progress. I think others would analyze it as worse than simply a plateau.

A very fundamental question we face over and over again in this body and in the other body is: Are we going to provide more opportunities for Americans who face certain problems, for the minorities, for people who are disabled, for women, for others? That is really the basic question. I think we ought to come down on the side of opportunity. That is what America is all about.

We live in a society—and it is one of these things you do not see on the front page of any newspaper—where we are today more segregated on the basis of economics than at any point in our Nation's history. It is true of every community with the exception of very small communities. I do not care whether one is a staff member here or whether one is a Senator from Nebraska presiding, or the Senator from Missouri, who is here. Wherever we live today, unless we live in a very small town, the chances are those who live around us are very similar in economic status. Those who are less fortunate are no longer living at our doorstep, and we have become less and less sensitive to those who face real problems.

This is a way of saying, let us become a little more sensitive once again. Let us not listen to these same old arguments that have been used against every civil rights bill that we have ever had. I hope that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle and those in the White House who want this bill signed will stand up. If the President vetoes this bill, that is a much greater comment on the merits of the administration than it is on the merits of the legislation.

This bill says let us make opportunity available for all Americans. That is it, purely and simply. For this Congress and this administration not to stand up and say that is what America is all about, we are going to make those opportunities, that would be a sad day. I hope we do not see that sad day. I hope we agree to this conference report overwhelmingly, Mr. President.

Mr. DANFORTH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I would like to try my hand at explaining my understanding of the most contentious issue that has been before us as we have struggled with this particular legislation. The issue is the question of so-called disparate impact cases, and especially the assertion by opponents of the legislation, various people who have wrestled with the legislation, that in order to deal with the disparate impact question, business will be forced to impose quotas because of this legislation.

First, in order to put the whole issue of disparate impact cases in perspective, it is important to recognize how infrequent these cases are.

Of all employment civil rights cases in court only one-half of 1 percent over the last 4 years has been a class action case. Almost never is a disparate impact case not a class action case. And a fraction of the class action cases are disparte impact cases. Therefore, what we are talking about is a fraction of a half a percent of civil rights cases. That is what the entire controversy is about.

I am not suggesting that it is not an important controversy, but I am suggesting that we have become very focused, tied into knots really, as we have discussed this matter over a number of cases that is very very small in the context of the sum total of employment cases relating to civil rights.

What is a disparate impact case, and what is the importance of a disparate impact case? I think that this can be understood maybe by thinking up an example. Let us suppose that an individual who is black goes to an employer and seeks a job, and the employer turns that person down. How does that person make a case that the refusal to offer him a job is based on discrimination? How is such a case made?

If a Member of the Senate were in that position or if a Member of the Senate were a lawyer retained by somebody who claimed that he was discriminated against on the basis of race, how would you go about putting together your case to prove that this was a case of discrimination as opposed to the employer saying, "Well, you just do not appear to be up to the job and you do not have the qualifications that I want?" How do you make that kind of case?

One way to make the case is to say that this employer has hired 100 people over the last year and all of the people who have been hired are white. There have been 30, 40 blacks who have gone into the office, seeking to be hired. None of them have succeeded. And everybody who goes in who is white has succeeded in getting a job. And under the law, if the potential employee can show that, and also show that certain employment practices are the cause of that, then this person has put on a prima facie case for discrimination, for violation of the law.

All right. So then what does the employer say? Does the employer say, "OK, fine, you have got me, I lose?" No. Under the law—that is, the Civil Rights Act of 1964—the employer then puts on his evidence, and the evidence is that the business practices of the employer are justified by, and the words are "business necessity."

That is the question. What constitutes a business necessity? And how can the employer show that the employer's practices are in fact justified by business necessity as opposed to simply a desire to discriminate?

Let us suppose that the employer is in the business of moving pianos in New York City. And it turns out that the employer has 100 employees, and all of them are male. A woman comes in. The employer says, "Well, look, if you are going to work for me, you have to be able to carry 300 pounds up four flights of stairs." The woman says, "Well, no women are ever hired." That is a disparate impact case. Clearly under those circumstances an employer can show business necessity; namely, that the employer's business is moving pianos. Somebody has to be able to carry the things, and therefore a strength test is reasonable, and the fact is that it is more likely than not that more men than women can carry a 300-pound piano.

On the other hand, just to take another extreme, let us say that the employer says, "All right, my business necessity is that I want my retail operation to be popular with the public. And I have found that the public would rather have white people than black people, and that if I hired black people my business would fall off." Does that constitute a business necessity? And I think that all of us would say no, that is discrimination. If the only decision that the employer makes is for the sake of race, for the sake of sex, clearly that is on the extreme side of discrimination.

So the question is where between carrying the piano up the stairs and the physical appearance of the employee, where is the line drawn in proving business necessity to justify disparate impact on various groups of people in employment? That is what the whole issue is about. And as I say, the whole issue involves a very small fraction of the total number of employment cases in civil rights.

The meaning of these words "business necessity" was formulated by the Supreme Court back in 1971 in a case called Griggs versus Duke Power Co. That definition in the Griggs case was assumed to be the law. There was very little argument with it. It was an established principle of law. Everybody cited the Griggs versus Duke Power Co. case in arguing whether or not a particular business practice met the business necessity test.

Griggs was there going along just fine until 1989. And in 1989 the Supreme Court decided a new case, and the case was Wards Cove Packing Co. versus Atonio. That case changed the definition of "business necessity."

That is what we are here about because it was widely recognized that the Wards Cove case shifted the definition of business necessity so that it was too easy for an employer to make the case for discrimination. The Wards Cove case said that "the dispositive issue is whether a challenged practice serves, in a significant way, the legitimate employment goals of the employer." Well, the legitimate employment goals of the employer might be to hire people who the public would like. So it could be argued, I suppose, that under the Wards Cove doctrine, blatant discrimination on the basis of race or on the basis of sex was permissible if business was better because of the discriminatory practice. Because of this wide open definition in Wards Cove it was believed by many, many people, including the administration, that the old understanding of the Griggs case had been gutted by the Supreme Court.

There was a wide recognition that we should restore the law to what it had been ever since 1971 under Griggs. And that is what we have been debating, exactly how should the law be restored to the days of the Griggs case.

The Supreme Court decision in the Griggs case is maybe—I do not know—10, 12, 15 pages or so in length. Obviously, in any case, it is not possible, and highly impractical to simply codify word for word the entire text of the case. So much of the battle that has been going on for the last year or so has been to find those words within the Griggs case that various people believe embody its meaning. And what we have been doing now for the past, I do not know how long, at least a half year since I have been involved in this, is to try to come up with those words out of the Griggs case, or those words which are similar to the Griggs case, which embody Griggs. And that battle has been a lawyer's paradise. Hosts of lawyers, a veritable convention of lawyers, have convened to deal with the question of the precise wording to be used to describe "business necessity." Batteries of lawyers have argued over every conceivable formulation of words.

Mr. President, I believe that it is not possible to come up with any combination of words that will please everybody. We have been back and forth. It is as though a supercomputer had been used to try to find the right combination of words to come up with the exact meaning of Griggs. That is what this whole controversy is about.

Those who are concerned about this legislation claim that if we make the wording too restrictive insofar as business is concerned, then businesses will have to put quotas in place in order to win lawsuits. All of us agree that we do not want quotas. Everybody agrees to that. Therefore, the issue that we have had to face is, how do we word this legislation so that we make it clear that it is not only not our intent to have quotas, but we do not want to have quotas inadvertently, because the statute cannot be complied with in any safe way, other than to have quotas. So we have been going back and forth with this argument as to the precise formulation of the legislation to define "business necessity."

I got involved in this last spring, and I believed at that time the bill that had been reported out of the committee was way too tough for business to comply with. The definition of "business necessity" in the original bill was that the business practice was "essential to effective job performance"; that is, if the business could not say this is essential to the performance of the job, then the business would lose.

My feeling was—and the feeling of a lot of people at that time—that this definition, "essential to effective job performance," was really impossible from the standpoint of business and was way, way too tough. Therefore, we went about the task of reformulating the definition, to have a more balanced view of "business necessity."

Last May, a number of Senators—I think there were about seven or eight of us—finally reached what we believed to be closure in the argument. We came up with what we thought was a reasonable formulation. And that formulation was that "The term required by 'business necessity' means that the challenged practice or group of priorities bears a substantial and demonstrable relationship to effective job performance."

Subsequent to that time, there were again major arguments as to exactly what the wording should be. The bill came to the floor of the Senate, cloture was invoked on the bill, and the discussions went on among the lawyers. I can remember one night sitting in the conference room in the majority leader's office until about midnight or so. Governor Sununu was there, Senator KENNEDY was there, various lawyers had gathered outside the room; and for maybe 3 hours, we were going back and forth on the question of wording. All of us agreed that we did not want a quota bill. On the other hand, all of us agreed that we did not want the language written so broadly that employers could justify any discriminatory hiring policy that popped into their head.

At one point last July, the administration came up with a formulation that they proposed to Senator KENNEDY. Senator KENNEDY accepted that formulation, and then later in the same day, having consulted with various lawyers and experts who had advised him, decided that the formulation that he thought was all right, was not after all. So that particular deal fell through.

Then last July, while this bill was on the floor of the Senate, the President asked Senator SPECTER and Senator JEFFORDS and me to come to the White House and meet with him, Boyden Gray and John Sununu. The President said at that time, "Work it out." It was a clear mandate to us to do our best to work it out. The President, through his administration, John Sununu and Boyden Gray, came out with some additional language. We then tried that out on Senator KENNEDY. Well, the whole thing fell through.

(Mr. KOHL assumed the chair.)

Mr. DANFORTH. After this failed effort, there was no agreement involving both the White House and the civil rights community, between John Sununu and Boyden Gray and Senator KENNEDY.

In July the administration was willing to accept the following language:

(1) in the case of employment practices primarily intended to measure job performance, the practice or group of practices must bear a significant relationship to successful performance of the job. (2) in the case of other employment practices that are not primarily intended to measure job performance, the practice or group of practices must bear a significant relationship to a significant business objective of the employer.

That was what the administration was willing to accept in July.

Here is the language of the conference report that is now before us:

The term "required by business necessity" means—(A) in the case of employment practices involving selection such as tests, recruitment, evaluations, or requirements of education, experience, knowledge, skill, ability or physical characteristics, or practices primarily related to a measure of job performance, the practice or group of practices must bear a significant relationship to successful performance of the job; or (B) in the case of other employment decisions, not involving employment selection practices as covered by subparagraph (A) (such as, but not limited to, a plant closing or bankruptcy), or that involve rules relating to methadone, alcohol or tobacco use, the practice or group of practices must bear a significant relationship to a manifest business objective of the employer.

Mr. President, I know this is tedious. Believe me, if you spend 3 or 4 hours straight talking to lawyers about it, it is extremely tedious. If you spend 3 or 4 months at this, it is amazingly tedious. If you spend as long at this as Senator KENNEDY, Senator HATCH, Senator SPECTER, and others have spent at it, it is enough to drive you crazy. It is indeed a paradise for lawyers. But the point is, first of all, that there is very little to distinguish what the President agreed to in July from the language that is now before us.

In fact, I am advised by those who know the law far better than I do that the weighting of the conference report is more in the direction of the employer than what the administration agreed to in July.

But the most important point that I would make is that we are not really dealing with global differences. We are not really dealing with major philosophical changes. This truly is not, as was described by Senator METZENBAUM earlier this morning, a battle between David Duke and the rest of us for the soul of the Republican Party. It is not that at all.

It is a quibbling over words that lawyers have been involved in. They believe that the quibbling is very important. My belief is that over a period of months the differences have been so narrowed from the original committee bill that we are talking about a very, very fine point in the wording in the statute which is designed to interpret "business necessity."

Now, Mr. President, because we are talking about a very, very fine point, I would suggest that it is very, very easy to miss that fine point. When the debate is about a very narrow issue, then it is very easy to be a little bit to one side, a little bit to the other side, of that very narrow issue and engage in extreme heated debate because everybody thinks you have not quite made the point.

That is where we are now. We are in a very narrow debate on a very technical point.

I am convinced, and I have been since last May, that this is not a quota bill. I am absolutely convinced that an employer can comply with this legislation without putting quotas in place.

It may be that the precise wording of the statute would make it relatively hard or relatively easy for the employer to make his case in any given set of circumstances, but it is certainly not a quota bill. The real issue before us is that fine point on which we attempt to balance the interpretation of business necessity.

It is possible to have that fine point at a place which tilts the argument ever so slightly toward the employee who alleges discrimination. It is possible also to place that fine point in such a way that it tilts the burden, the litigation, ever so slightly in favor of the employer.

Exactly where it is placed is the argument before us, and as is true with many highly technical legal questions, there will be a difference of opinion as to where the point should be and where these particular words in fact place us.

I suppose that the argument that all of us have to put to ourselves, and satisfy ourselves about, concerns one of balance. It concerns one of balancing two interests.

When it comes down to the precise calibration of this point, where do we want the balance? If it comes to a question of balancing, on one hand, the interests of the employer to hire whoever the employer wants and, on the other hand, the interests of the country to try to overcome the problem of discrimination in the workplace, where do we put the weight?

We do not want quotas. We do not want overt discrimination. But if we have to favor employment legislation and the cause of the employment exercising reasonable business judgment, then where is that weight put?

I am a Republican. I believe in our free enterprise system. I believe that it is very important in this country to have business that can compete and that can be successful. But in the end, as a matter of national identity, national value, clearly if we are forced to make the choice, the choice must be in favor of equal opportunity for employment. If we have to make the choice between business and people, we must make the choice for people. If it imposes some additional burden on employers to be fair in employment, then our answer has to be that this is America, this is what this country is all about.

I think that we have struggled with this legislation with utmost good faith on all sides. I believe that the administration has been very conscientious. I believe that the civil rights community has been very conscientious. I believe that we have narrowed the differences and we are now down to a fine point. I believe that it is possible to make the argument that the fine point shifts the balance a little bit toward the victim of discrimination. My answer to that is, good. My hope is that the President will sign the bill. This Senator will vote to pass the legislation. This Senator will vote, if necessary, to override the President's veto.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I had hoped to engage with my friend and colleague from Utah somewhat on the progression and the history and the development of the legislation that has been included in the conference report. He spoke at some length earlier today. I wish to acknowledge the time and the effort that he and many other Members of the Senate on both sides of the aisle have spent on this issue. In my statements, I have run through the list of the Members, which includes Republicans and Democrats alike, both those on and off of the committee.

The one point that I did want to correct in the RECORD, at least at this time, is a point that the Senator did mention, that he still believed that this was a quota bill.

I think Senator DANFORTH's statement addressed that issue very adequately. I think those who have known Senator HATCH know very well that he would not have recommended to the President that he accept a quota bill. It just does not make any sense.

The changes made in the conference basically incorporated the seven areas that had been worked out between Senator HATCH, Secretary Coleman, and Senator SPECTER. I wish Senator HATCH were here now so that he could address this question, but we will be recessing soon and hopefully we will be resuming consideration of this issue, as well as the community service conference report, this afternoon.

But I think it is very difficult for any of us to possibly believe that the Senator from Utah would have actually recommended to the President of the United States that he sign a quota bill. That just is not so. And the language which is now incorporated in the conference report is basically the language which was agreed upon by the Senator from Utah, the Senator from Pennsylvania, and Secretary Coleman.

We had a chance earlier in the discussion and presentation to outline those changes in some detail. We heard an exposition on those matters by our principal cosponsor, Senator JEFFORDS, who reviewed these matters in very considerable detail.

One point I would just mention on the whole question in Wards Cove of business necessity is that in the conference report that is before the Senate today, with regard to business necessity, we have actually taken the words that have been used by the Supreme Court and other courts under Griggs.

So rather than just use generic words that could be subject to varying interpretations and are not defined by previous court cases, we took the words that had been used by the Supreme Court, the circuit courts and the district courts—in the Dothard case, the Albermarle case, the Griggs case, and in other cases so each and every one of those definitions of what is essential business necessity actually was taken from a court opinion.

So that was really the extra effort that we went to to try and accommodate the administration in eliminating what might be considered to be somewhat vague or indefinite. Each and every one of those criteria are based upon court holdings. And they reach the issues of selection, which really is what this bill is all about.

So we have gone that extra mile, Mr. President. We want to give the assurance to the membership that we have tried to eliminate any possible degree of confusion or ambiguity, and we've avoided words that could be subject to misinterpretation.

I did not take the opportunity to go through the Attorney General's response to the latest conference report. Perhaps during the course of the afternoon, depending on what the will of the membership is, we can go through that.

But I must say, as a member of the Judiciary Committee now for 28 years, I have never seen such a disingenuous interpretation of any piece of legislation in the time that I have been here, under Republicans and Democrats alike. And we all know we have had areas of difference and areas of agreement.

But the fact is that the letter uses the word quotas, I believe, seven times. What they were basically trying to do is frighten, distort, and misrepresent this legislation.

I will take the opportunity to get into that at length during the course of the afternoon. I can appreciate the difficulties in understanding various tests, whether the word is substantial, essential, manifest, or significant. You can say that these are words of art, Mr. President. That is why we have had to take a great deal of time, because they have been used in court opinions where the outcomes have varied. So this has been a complicated and difficult negotiation.

But I must say that there has been very significant work by Members on both sides of the aisle, which has been the historic tradition in this body. All the great civil rights bills in recent times, including, for instance the fair housing legislation, the Civil Rights Restoration Act, overturning Grove City have been bipartisan efforts. And we followed that tradition here.

We will have an opportunity to get into any additional degree of description when those who want to make the case in opposition are willing to do so.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DIXON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The Chair recognizes the majority leader.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, for the information of Senators with respect to the schedule for the remainder of the day, we have now had about 3 hours of debate on the civil rights bill. I hope that we can shortly reach agreement on a time limitation on remaining debate and bring that matter to a vote as early as possible today. I believe all of the Democratic Senators who wish to speak have done so, with the exception of myself and the distinguished chairman of the committee, and our remarks will be relatively brief. So we are prepared to proceed to complete debate and vote on that important measure as soon as possible this afternoon.

It had been my hope and intention to bring up for a brief debate and a vote by now, the national service conference report. We are still attempting to get that cleared. It has been cleared on the Democratic side of the aisle. We are awaiting clearance on the Republican side of the aisle. As soon as that is obtained I hope we can proceed to a relatively brief period of debate and a vote on that early this afternoon.

As I indicated, I had expected and intended that there would have been a vote on that measure prior to this noon break. I originally thought we could get a vote on that by about 12 or 12:30 today. I apologize to my colleagues for our inability to do that. But I am hoping and anticipating we will be able to get clearance on the Republican side of the aisle and proceed to a vote on that sometime early this afternoon.

With respect to the remainder of the day, these are two important conference reports, the national service bill and the civil rights bill, and I hope we can complete action on both of those relatively promptly this afternoon and complete action before the day is out.

FINAL PASSAGE VITIATED—S. 3189

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the final passage of S. 3189 be vitiated, that the bill be indefinitely postponed, and that the rollcall vote on passage of the bill be considered as having occurred on final passage of the House companion, H.R. 5803, as amended by the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

APPOINTMENTS BY THE VICE PRESIDENT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, on behalf of the Vice President, in accordance with 22 U.S.C. 1928a-1928d, as amended, appoints the following Senators as members of the Senate delegation to the North Atlantic Assembly fall meeting during the 2d session of the 101st Congress, to be held in London, England, November 25-30, 1990: the Senator from Alaska, Mr. STEVENS; the Senator from Idaho, Mr. MCCLURE; the Senator from Rhode Island, Mr. CHAFEE; the Senator from Utah, Mr. HATCH; and the Senator from Missouri, Mr. BOND.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, for the information of affected Members of the Senate I would like to state for the record that if a Member who is precluded from travel by the provisions of rule 39 is appointed as delegate to an official conference to be attended by Members of the Senate, then the appointment of that individual constitutes an authorization by the Senate and the Member will not be deemed in violation of rule 39.

RECESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order the Senate will now stand in recess until the hour of 2:15 p.m.

Thereupon, at 12:38 p.m., the Senate recessed until 2:15 p.m.; whereupon, the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer [Mr. SANFORD].

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1990—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE BUBBLE IN THE TAX CODE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have been speaking the last 2 or 3 days on what some refer to as the bubble in the Tax Code, and what I consider to be gross distortions of the purpose of the bubble and what it means and what it does not mean. The fact that it is so poorly understood by many Americans I think is understandable, when the media never explains it. I do not say it is deliberate, but I think it is hard to understand for those who report.

The result is that if you tell the average taxpayer about the bubble, they have a perception that you pay a certain rate of tax until you come to the bubble, which is 33 percent, and the people within the bubble pay a higher tax than those after the bubble ends, which is about $186,000 for a couple filing jointly.

The truth of the matter is, that is not true. As you go through the bubble, depending on your income, you lose the advantage of the 15-percent rate, and you lose your personal exemption. So when you, in effect, come out of the bubble, you are paying a flat rate of 28 percent; no exemptions. You do not get any credit for the lower rate.

So some in the bubble are actually paying a 20- to 25-percent rate and those upper-income Americans are paying about 28 percent, and the average is 28 percent. I think it is regrettable.

Again, I thank the New York Times for running a piece even though it was on a Saturday when not as many people read the New York Times, but at least those who read the New York Times on Saturday were able to understand that it may well be that the bubble was put in the Tax Code because it did allow progressivity. It was, as I understand, the idea of the distinguished Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] known by some as the "Bradley bubble." It is also, I think, an idea of the majority leader in the House, Mr. GEPHARDT.

I note that this week Time magazine makes sort of a feeble effort to talk about the bubble. They do not do it much justice, but at least they do indicate that the bubble was created in 1986 to simplify the Tax Code. The old graduated system, in which there were as many as 15 brackets, each subject to a differing marginal rate, was replaced by a new scheme with only two rates, 15 percent for low-income taxpayers and 28 percent for everyone else. But achieving that goal required some juggling.

For most joint filers, for instance, income below $32,450 is taxed at the 15 percent rate. To ensure that those who make more kick in 28 percent on all their income, the Government puts the larger bite on the higher end of their earnings. So for some joint filers, the marginal rate jumps from 28 to 33 percent on taxable income between $78,400 and $185,760.

Then comes the odd part. It drops back to 28 percent of income above that level. Is that a break for the rich? Then they go on to explain, no, it is not a break for the rich because they lose exemptions, they lose the advantage of the 15 percent rate, and both middle-income and wealthy earners are supposed to wind up paying the same marginal rate of 28 percent on their earnings over $32,450. The truth is those in the bubble pay a little less than that rate and those outside with higher incomes pay the 28-percent rate.

So, Mr. President, in another Washington Times piece dated October 12, written by Warren Brookes, who, I think, does good work from time to time, it talks about partisan politics. I will just quote him so nobody will misconstrue it. "There is nothing new for partisan politics to engage in lying. What is troublesome is the way in which the Bush administration is lying down and taking it. President Bush's willingness to accept the notion of raising the top income"—bursting the bubble—is an implicit acceptance of the liberal Democrats' persistent argument that the Reagan tax cuts benefited only the rich while the poor and middle-class wound up paying more. Even though this argument is patently, factually false"—they have a table attached—it is being buttressed by citing the so-called tax bubble enacted in 1986 as a part of tax reform whereby those with family incomes between $70,000 and $170,000 pay a temporary 5 percent surcharge on the 28-percent top marginal rate. That creates an implicit temporary 33 percent marginal rate, which then drops back to 28 percent on the highest incomes. This looks on its face to be unfair."

You tell people they are going to be 33, then drop back to 28 for the very rich. Yes, it looks to be ludicrously unfair. Yet the whole reason for the bubble was to raise more taxes from the rich by taking away all personal exemptions and the lower threshold rate of 15 percent on the first $30,000 income from those in the highest income brackets.

The phaseout adds about $6,000 to the average tax bill of those earning more than $200,000. To avoid an abrupt income cutoff for the addition, it brackets, and to raise more money, Congress divides the 5-percent surcharge over a bubble of about $120,000 income and maybe $200,000 and $202,000 for families of four.

So the effect of this bubble transition is to cause a gradual rise in average tax rates from about 20 to 25 percent for those at the start of the bubble, to 28 percent at the end of the bubble and from then on it is 28 percent. Thus, the effect of the bubble is to increase the progressivity to make it fair, and we tried to make the Tax Code of 1986 fair.

I will be including in the RECORD statements by such outstanding leaders as Speaker O'Neil, talking about 1986, how fair it was; Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee; Congressman GEPHARDT, who is now the majority leader in the House; and others, and I will include those in today's RECORD to remind them of what they were saying in 1986 when they passed the tax bill, how fair it was, how fair it was to low-income, lower-middle-income Americans, how it was progressive in that those who made more money paid more taxes. It was progressive.

I would remind those colleagues that nothing has changed. Nothing has changed except politics has changed. This near the election we find some out trying to convince voters of something that is not accurate.

I ask unanimous consent that the article by Mr. Brookes be printed in the RECORD, too, along with the inserts from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1986 that I previously referred to.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BLOWING UP THE BUBBLE OF ENVY

(By Warren Brookes)

It is nothing new for partisan politics to engage in lying. What is troublesome is the way in which the Bush administration is lying down and taking it.

President Bush's willingness to accept the notion of raising the top income, "bursting the bubble," is an implicit acceptance of the liberal Democrats' persistent argument that the Reagan tax cuts benefitted only the rich, while the poor and the middle class wound up paying more.

Even though this argument is patently and factually false (see Table), it is being buttressed by citing the so-called "tax bubble," enacted in 1986 as part of tax reform, whereby those with family incomes between $70,000 and $170,000 pay a temporary 5 percent surcharge on the 28 percent top marginal rate.

That creates an implicit, temporary 33 percent marginal rate which then drops back to 28 percent on the highest incomes. This looks ludicrously unfair. Yet the whole reason for the bubble was to raise more taxes from the rich by taking away all personal exemptions and the lower threshold rate of 15 percent (on the first $30,000) from those in the highest income brackets.

That phaseout adds about $6,000 to the average tax bill of those earning more than $200,000. To avoid an abrupt income cutoff for that addition (and to raise more money), Congress devised the 5 percent surcharge over a "bubble" of about $120,000 in income, from $82,000 to $202,000 (for families of four).

The effect of this bubble transition is to cause a gradual rise in average tax rates from about 25 percent for those at the start of the "bubble" to 28 percent for those at the top and beyond. Thus the effect of the bubble is to increase the progressivity of the system.

The real reason for this concoction was that in 1986 tax reformers needed billions in additional revenues at the last minute and decided to soak the rich to get them. That's why there was bipartisan support for this arrangement, especially from Sen. Bill Bradley, New Jersey Democrat, a sensible liberal.

Now, the Democrats want to use this apparently "unfair" device that they helped invent as an excuse to impose an entirely new 33-36 percent rate on the rich (with no personal exemptions or income threshold), who will see their average tax rate raised a shocking 18-29 percent, wiping out all the Reagan average-rate tax cuts (less than 20 percent).

The alleged justification for this is that the rich supposely got all the benefits of the 1981 cuts, and the rest got nothing, or worse. That is a baldfaced lie, and those who repeatedly tell it know it, as do readers of this column.

Not only was the 1981-83 percentage rate cut the same for all income brackets, but the lower top rates induced a massive reduction in the exploitation of tax shelters, and that increased the taxes paid by the rich. (See Table.)

Let's go through the numbers one more time, this time in constant 1982 dollars. From 1981 to 1987 (the latest year for which we have data by income percentile) the income taxes actually paid by the top 1 percent of the taxpayers (those with incomes of more than about $130,000) rose by 49 percent in real terms. The income taxes paid by the top 5 percent rose nearly 43 percent real and those paid by the top 10 percent rose 20 percent in the same period.

By contrast, the income taxes paid by the nation as a whole rose only 4 percent real, and those of the middle class (the 50th through the 90th percentile) fell in constant dollars by 9 percent, while the bottom 50 percent paid 15 percent less.

That is to say, the real income taxes paid by 90 percent of Americans fell by 10 percent from 1981 to 1987 while the real income taxes paid by the richest 5 percent rose by nearly 43 percent.

Aha, say the liberals, but the rich got so much richer in this period while everyone else lost income ground. That's also not true. From 1981 to 1987, it's true the top 5 percent saw their median income rise in constant dollars 24.5 percent, but the middle income median also rose by 9 percent. That's less than half as much, but it rose. Yet in the same period the income taxes paid by the top 5 percent rose nearly twice as fast as their median income, while the income taxes on the middle actually fell by nearly 10 percent.

That's why the share of income taxes paid by the top 5 percent rose dramatically from 35.4 percent in 1981 to 43.3 percent in 1987. That's a 22 percent rise in tax share in a period when their share of total income rose by 10 percent.

Finally, as middle incomers listen to the Democrats trash the Reagan tax cuts, they should remember that without those 25 percent rate cuts the average middle-class family would now be paying $2,400 more than they do. Indeed, the main reason for the Democrats' vicious assault on those cuts is precisely because they so massively reduced the actual tax collections from ordinary Americans. Americans also would do well to remember that under the Democrats' "soak the rich" policies of the 1970s the average marginal tax rate on middle-income families soared from 23 to nearly 28 percent in 1981. Today that average marginal tax rate is less than 18 percent.

The real irony is that the wealthy, by and large, would love to trade a higher marginal rate for major capital-gains exemption of 40-50 percent. Their net taxes would be reduced in the right combination. The danger is that the moment we start trading higher rates for more loopholes, the whole rate structure that now so benefits the middle class would be under siege all over again, and the likely losers would be the middle class.

So, beware the green-eyed "bubble blowers."

[From the Congressional Record, Sept. 25, 1986]

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Madam Speaker, I yield myself 2 minutes.

Madam Speaker, almost 16 months, to the day, I sat in a room off the Chamber and answered the President of the United States in his plea for tax reform. The President was looking to this Congress to right some wrongs that have been in the code for many years. I take great pride in the fact that we answered with bipartisan effort.

We asked the American people how they felt about the code, and their response was overwhelming: "Get fairness into it." As the President put it: "Let's go for it." Go for it to help the American farmer. Go for it to help the wealthy doctor. But most of all, go for it to help middle-income America and the poor.

That was not a Democratic issue and it was not a Republican issue. So we plotted and prodded and I think this afternoon we recognize that tax reform is a bipartisan issue. It was the Ronald Reagan and the Tip O'Neills, the Jim Bakers, and the Don Regans. It was all of them who worked for today. The Bob Doles, the Bob Packwoods, and the Dick Gephardts and the Bill Bradleys, it was the Jack Kemps and the Bob Kastens. It was all of us.

So here we are, trying to decide this afternoon what we are going to do about fairness and equality in the code.

We have got to answer that mandate. This afternoon we are going to let the American people know that their legislative process is working; that when they request of their leaders in Washington a change, that we respond.

Today we celebrate for that American that needs help.

I say to my colleagues, it is high time that we do it.

Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. O'Neill], the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Mr. O'NEILL. Madam Speaker, I rise in support of the tax reform conference report.

This is an historic moment in the House. We are about to vote on the final passage of the most sweeping tax reform legislation in the history of this Nation. If we approve this report today, the 99th Congress will assume a special place in the history of this country. This will be the Congress that accomplished what eluded all the 20 preceding Congresses that talked about the comprehensive tax reform but failed to enact it.

For me, this is a decision of a political lifetime. I first ran for Congress in 1952. I remember my party platform. We pledged the continual effort toward the elimination of tax loopholes. To quote from that platform: "Justice requires the elimination of tax loopholes which favor special interest." That was in 1952 when the business corporations of America paid 40 percent of the taxes of America, and yet we can see how down the line, through the ingenuity of tax experts that the corporations of America now pay between 5 and 8 percent of the tax bill, and the largest employer in my district pays no tax, but his 8,000 employees pay a tax.

It is not fair. That is what the American people have said. It is not fair.

I am talking about 1952. Each party, both sides of the aisle, in our platforms have said and promised the American public that we are going to close the loopholes.

In 1960 my close personal friend, Jack Kennedy, was the President of the United States. We still talk about the Kennedy tax bill, how it stimulated the economy of America. That tax bill was meant to be tax reform and yet the Kennedy proposal for comprehensive reform was brushed aside.

The people at that time said that tax reform is just too difficult, too hard. Reform will have to wait. Year after year, reform has had to wait.

Ever since, many people have spoken beautifully of building a fairer tax system. Of the overall objective, all have generally agreed, on both sides of the aisle, we should reduce the number of special loopholes so that we can reduce the taxes of the average American taxpayer, the person who does not have a whole division of accountants and tax attorneys helping either him or her.

My friend, the gentleman from Illinois, Dan Rostenkowski, said on national television 2 years ago that the average fellow, that average honest taxpayer, has begun to think of himself as a chump. The big boys have had all the tax loopholes, yet he, the average American taxpayer, is stuck with a big withholding taken out of his tax every week.

In all the years that I have been in Congress, the majority of us have agreed on the need to help this average American citizen, this middle class fellow. We have all agreed on the idea of tax reform, but after agreeing on the idea of tax reform, every Congress since 1952, has adjourned without doing anything about it.

The conference report is a historic departure from that pattern. It eliminates 6 million people from the tax rolls. Instead of adding burdens to those on the bottom, it reduces taxes for millions of low-income people. Just think of the poor person at the bottom. He pays an income tax and he pays a Social Security tax. He may pay $400 or $500 or $600, but if you eliminate that, it could be the difference in getting out of the rut that they have been in for so many years. Over 5 years it would cut the taxes of the lower income people by $40 billion. It gives them an incentive to work and to support themselves. It is a $40 billion program of economic relief and economic opportunity.

I have been around here for years and I have seen the fight on poverty. I have seen what we have done on poverty, but this is the best antipoverty bill that has been in this House, I would have to say, in at least half a dozen years.

It is a fair bill. It shifts the burden of taxation from the average individual taxpayer to those who have avoided taxes through the years.

It opens the windows of economic opportunity by plugging loopholes of inequality.

Now, this is not a partisan measure. It took a great deal of effort to overcome the giant barriers to reform. It took the Bill Bradleys, the Dick Gephardts, and Danny Rostenkowski, who were out there selling this gospel and all the members of the committee. It took the White House and the Treasury Department to respond to fairness, an issue raised in the arena of partisan debate, and to produce a measure that made tax reform a bipartisan matter. That is what this is, a bipartisan matter.

Most of all, it took the efforts of Members of the House. I am so proud of Dan Rostenkowski, to meet this great body's responsibility under the Constitution of the United States.

Like it or not, when you were elected to the Congress of the United States, you accepted a duty to ensure that this country has the best and the fairest Tax Code.

Now the time has come. Today, this particular Congress has devoted more time, more energy, more emotion to keeping this pledge that both parties have made for so many years. The time for debate is over, so is the time for offering refinements or modifications or amendments.

There are no multiple choice questions. The choices are down to two. You vote "aye," you set in place a new comprehensive Tax Code.

You vote "no," you add a layer of fresh cement on a tomb that will encase the foundations, and you will not talk about tax reform again for years.

My colleagues, we have come too far down the road now to waiver. We have accomplished too much to give it up. We have struggled too long to fail now.

Let us say "yes" to change. Let us say "yes" to fairness. Let us say "yes" to a brighter new day for the American taxpayers. Let us not wait another 50 years for reform. Let us move forward by voting "yes" on this bill today.

Mr. GEPHARDT. Madam Speaker, Barber Conable, an honored Member of this body who now has gone to be the head of the World Bank used to say about some pieces of legislation, "There's something in this legislation that everybody can hate."

I have not seen a piece of legislation like this one where there are so many things that people have objections to; but I understand it, because it is a big piece of legislation. There are hundreds of things in this bill that you can find that you do not like. There are things in it I do not like, that I disagree with, and I have been talking about tax reform with the gentleman from New York [Mr. Kemp] and others for a long time.

As the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY] said, "I think we have got to step back from the trees that we are looking at so closely and look at the forest, and look at the good things that are done in this bill." If you will do that, I am convinced you will vote for it, because there are some very important good things that come out of this bill.

First, fairness. It has got a minimum tax, the best minimum tax we have ever had. It makes me angry, that 250 families earned over $1 million last year and paid no taxes. It makes me angry that corporations in this country that make millions of dollars get by with paying no taxes; many of them do not even want that to be the case.

This bill makes sure that does not happen anymore. It does give a tax cut, and importantly it gives it to ordinary, average taxpayers. It does not give the lion's share to the people at the top. It helps people at the bottom; 6 million people off the tax roles, at the bottom, and an 8- or a 9-percent tax cut to people in the middle, the people that we are supposed to be worrying so much about; and much less tax cut to people at the top.

Third and most important, we would stop the trend of the last 25 or 30 years of every time we do a tax cut doing it by giving this group and this individual and that group a tax cut, a tax loophole, a tax preference, and keeping everybody's tax rate up to pay for those individual treatments.

This changes that whole trend and moves us to a fairer and simpler Tax Code.

Now we all have to make a decision; we have got to look at the good and the bad and decide which is predominant, which is the most important. I just ask you today as you make this vote to not think of all the lobbyists and all the representatives who are legitimately here who have been talking to you for the last 3 weeks, or maybe the last 3 years about this tax bill; and remember the lobbyist you have not seen here is the lobbyist for the average, ordinary taxpaying family in this country. That lobbyist is not here. you have not heard from them. You are the lobbyist for that individual, that family, and that family wants you to stand up for them today and I hope you will.

Mr. DOLE. Finally, Mr. President, since we will have more debate on this when the reconciliation bill is before us, probably tomorrow, maybe late today, and there will be a lot of jumping and shouting, I assume, by some who say, "Boy, we have got the package for you. It is called the Democratic Ways and Means package. This is going to raise taxes on the rich. We are going to burst the bubble." What I have tried to explain in the last 3 days is you already have the heaviest taxes on the rich, whoever they are; there is nobody that I know of; maybe somebody else knows of.

But I want my colleagues particularly on the Democratic side to take a good look at the Rostenkowski package. There is going to be a big temptation, "Boy, we will sock it to the rich and we will do all of these things and we will call it good politics, good tax policy, and we will make President Bush eat it."

Well, they have a little what we call the friendly family taxes in that package, just a little thing. The Democrats just cannot avoid taxing everybody. They do not want to leave anybody out. They talk about the rich while they tax the working people. There is a little $30 billion tax in that Rostenkowski Ways and Means package, a little $30 billion tax on working people. Only 1 percent of it is paid by people making more than $200,000.

In 1981, on the Senate floor, over the objection of the Reagan administration, the distinguished senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG] offered an amendment called indexing. What does it mean? It means you do not pay taxes on inflation. It is called bracket creep. If inflation goes up, you are paying taxes on inflation. It did not have any more real income. So this was the Republican idea sponsored by a Republican Senator, strongly supported by the Senator from Kansas, and we passed it over the objection of the Reagan administration—and I think at that time the Republican leadership in the Senate—by a vote of 60 some to 30 some.

So the working people of America finally got a break. They got a pay increase that was not eaten up by taxes. They got to keep the money. They did not pay taxes on inflation. But lo and behold, the Democrats, always looking for another tax, had to revive an old one that has been put to rest. They have come up now with delaying indexing for 1 year. That means if you delay it for 1 year, the taxes are going to be higher forever after that. Why do they do it? They do it because they get $30 billion.

We have all heard this talk about fairness, how it is not fair, we have to tax the rich. They want to tax everybody, everybody. Let me give you a little idea of what this little family tax does for the average working family, or the average farmer, whatever.

There are 87 million tax returns out of 110 million that are filed that pay taxes. Their tax will go up if this Rostenkowski plan is adopted. There are 176 million personal exemptions claimed on taxable returns. Current law will raise the exemption from $2,000 to about $2,100 next year. The Democratic package wants to deny that increase. The result: Your taxes go up $15 or $28 per family member, depending on your tax bracket, 15 or 28 percent, and for a family of four your taxes go up $60 to $112. That is just for the personal exemption lost.

About 20 million tax returns are in the 28 percent bracket. Most will get hit by bracket creep, inflation—the insidious hidden tax that crushed the economy in the 1980's; in fact, between 1976 and 1980. The tax brackets are indexed under current law because of this amendment offered on this floor in 1981, and the 28 percent rate was removed from about $30,950 to about $32,500 next year.

The so-called Ways and Means Democratic package wants the 28 bracket to stay where it is now. In other words, do not index next year. If your taxable income exceeds $32,500 next year, taxes go up $201. If you add those two together, you are talking about a $313 tax increase for a family of four.

Maybe that is not much, but I think it is quite a bit. If you are a family of four making that amount of money, it seems to me that you have a problem with the Democratic package.

Thirty billion dollars from the working people. That is just one of the problems with the so-called Ways and Means package. I understand that in the Democratic Senate caucus everybody was applauding and saying, "Is this not great, we finally have something we can all vote for." Go right ahead. If you want to vote to take this one tax break the working people have, delay it for a year, then this is the opportunity you are going to have.

Mr. KERREY. Will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. DOLE. Yes, I am happy to yield for a question.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I have listened to the distinguished Republican leader's explanation of the bubble, and I find it in fact persuasive. The language about the bubble itself has often been inflated and overstated. Nonetheless, I also heard the distinguished Senator talking about the 1986 tax law and the bipartisan support that law had. I will admit I was on the sidelines during the deliberations over that tax law.

It is my understanding that one of the features of that 1986 tax law was that we were going to create neutrality between capital and wages, that there was an attempt to try to take out the incentives for people to go one way or the other. Now I hear people coming back and proposing a capital gains reduction. Am I missing something here, or was that also part of the 1986 tax law, and part of the reason that people liked that particular piece of legislation?

Mr. DOLE. Well, I do recall the act, because I was there, and I was a party to the conference report. I remember there was a great deal of discussion, and I think there was a conclusion that as long as you keep it at 28 percent, maybe we should not have a lower capital gains rate.

At that time, President Bush made the judgment—this Senator did not make that judgment—that one way to stir the economy and to create jobs—and there was some demonstrated effort of that—would be to lower the capital gains rate. That is why the President, I guess, stated it in his campaign and has made an effort since that time to have it adopted by the Congress. It has not happened. Partly, in the Democratic so-called Ways and Means package, it limited capital gains for small farmers. We would have to change that here to make it apply to more than the household and others who own their homes.

Mr. KERREY. If the Senator will yield for one additional question. I appreciate that answer. I have not read the Ways and Means Committee's package. In fact, I have not read the Finance Committee package. We have enough difficulty just wading through that without getting into the details of the House.

There is a piece of it that has appeal to me. It has a feel, from the way it impacts in the State of Nebraska, and that is—and the question is whether or not it has appeal to the distinguished Senator from Kansas, as well. That is, that part that says that we are going to simply increase that last marginal rate. I acknowledge that it is not bursting a bubble. We are generally increasing that last marginal rate and levying an attempt to set a surcharge on people who have income over a million dollars, for the purpose of eliminating the gas tax. I know Kansas must be similar to Nebraska. We have had tremendous increases already in energy costs, and we built all of our roads in Nebraska with the gas tax; we always have. We are second or first highest in the Nation on the gas tax now.

My concern with the gas tax is that not only is it going to increase the cost of doing business, 70 percent of our oil use is in transportation. We are heavily dependent upon it to move the products to market. Not only will it do that, but it seems to me that it does, in fact, fall disproportionately heavy upon those who have been paying an increasing amount, particularly with payroll taxes, in the 1980's.

So my question is whether or not that piece of it has any appeal to the distinguished Senator from Kansas?

Mr. DOLE. Obviously, it has appeal. If you are looking for a painless package, I would like to peel out everything. I would not like to, but I think you have to pay a penalty around here for being leaders.

Everybody wants to reduce the deficit, but nobody wants to contribute to the reduction. They do not want more tax; they do not want to cut any programs they are involved in, and that includes Congress and the White House and includes everybody else.

But my view is that we are over in the gulf now because of oil. I remember seeing a Time magazine poll about 6 weeks ago, asking the American people how many are willing to make the sacrifice because of the gulf crisis. It was 84 percent. We are all over there because of oil. If we used less oil and gasoline, we might not be over there.

The next question was, "Are you willing to have your gas tax increased?" Seventy-three percent answered no. People cannot have it both ways either. They want to sacrifice, as long as they do not have to make a sacrifice. We have to make a sacrifice, and we have to provide leadership. Some of our constituents will not like it. I do not like the gas tax. I do not particularly like it when it goes for deficit reduction. If it went into a highway trust fund, we could build bridges and highways, I would be happier with it.

Mr. KERREY. If the Senator will yield again, I remember earlier this year, the distinguished Senator proposed doing just that. I publicly supported it. I thought it was a terrific proposal.

Mr. DOLE. If we go back to that, I would support a gas tax increase for policy reasons, to help conserve oil, to make us less dependent on foreign sources of oil and maybe bring some of the people back from Saudi Arabia.

Second, we have a couple hundred billion dollars that we ought to be spending on infrastructure. I know the Senator shares this view, because he is on the Appropriations Committee. That is where all the money goes into the trust fund, and we have some way to get it out so it can be spent for highways and bridges, if there is a gas tax.

Mr. KERREY. If the Senator will yield further for a question. I quite agree. I think there comes a time when you have to act, and I supported the budget resolution, and supported the earlier budget resolution. I think the deficit is an overwhelming problem and has been permitted to build up in almost obscurity. I think it is good that the President addressed the Nation. Regrettably, it was not terribly persuasive. My phone calls, as lots of others did, ran against that.

Part of what I am trying to do, is the second side of act, trying to make sure that the action is in accordance with what the people want. They will not like any part of this particular proposal. They will not like tax increases in any form, or spending reductions in any form. But what I am persuaded is that at least in my State, they do not like that aspect of the proposal that says we are going to increase gas tax, while not increasing taxes on people who earn more than $200,000 a year. And though, I quite agree, again for emphasis, that the distinguished Senator is correct, this bubble has been oversold for what it is.

Mr. DOLE. Overblown.

Mr. KERREY. I find myself persuaded that it would be better for the economy, and much fairer, to have an increase on that last marginal rate and a surcharge as well.

I understand there are disagreements on that, and some people would not like to increase that last marginal rate, would not like to have it be 33 percent. The people, on a policy basis, will come forward and say, no, 28 percent is where it ought to be. But I believe it is fair, and I believe it is good for the economy to move to 33. I believe, as well, that the surcharge that has been proposed is reasonable, too.

Again, I ask the distinguished Senator if it is his sense of where the Senate is going, now that we are attempting to work out the differences that occur between Republicans and Democrats, so as to be able in the end, to present the President with a responsible package?

Mr. DOLE. I do not know where we are headed. We have not been doing much lately. The thing the American people are wondering is what happened to some of the colleagues who have been in their States the past weekend. I was in my State for the Eisenhower celebration, but rather than to risk any outcries I stayed close to Billy Graham. He was there, and they were all applauding him. I thought, boy, he must be doing very well. We walked down the aisle together.

I know there is frustration on the part of the voters, largely because we cannot seem to get it done. Should we sock the rich some more? That is, in essence, the question. I guess that will be voted upon here.

I think what we need to get is a deficit reduction package. This started out as that, and now it is all a tax package.

I know I used more than leader time. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for a couple of minutes, and I will conclude and yield the floor to the Senators from Nebraska, California, and others.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. The point I want to make is there has been a lot of talk, and I would hope we would hear from the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. BRADLEY] in this debate, because certainly it was our hope to hear from him. I have had my colleagues on both sides of this say there ought to be one flat rate. I remember the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] had a great plan, I think a 15-percent rate, one 15-percent rate, no exemptions and deductions. Now the Senator from Nebraska wants to go back and have instead of one rate, he wants three rates. What we have, in effect, is a 15-percent and 28-percent flat rate. Nobody pays more than 28 percent.

We have some who want to keep that 15 percent, one flat rate. We all received hundreds and thousands of postcards saying we ought to have a flat rate tax. That was 4 or 5 years ago. Let us do not start the other way, and putting back all the deductions and loading up the code and have 15 brackets again. Let us do it one way or the other.

I will conclude by making again the point of the bubble, and I will be happy to yield the floor. I want to reread this portion of a letter I had from a lady in Charlotte, NC. The name is Mary Harding.

It said:

Senator, I am neither a Democrat nor a Republican. Nor am I a registered voter. I am one of those many who have given up on both parties and said "A Pox On Both Your Houses". This has been the result of my being convinced by the Democrats and the press that the Republicans are the party of the rich, and my own observations that the Democrats are the party of the Giveaway. I had grown convinced lately that the only hope of the country was the formation of a third party.

And this is the key paragraph:

I, like everyone else, had bought the argument that the rich were paying less taxes than everyone else, but you were so evidently telling the truth that I decided to get on my computer and find out for myself. You will not be surprised to find out you were right.

She happened to be watching on C-SPAN last week, where I was trying to explain the bubble, challenging the press to tell the truth about the bubble. So far the New York Times has responded. That is it. She went on to say:

I am a far cry from being the tax expert to which you appealed yesterday, actually I'm unemployed, but I am sending you, with this letter, an analysis I made of earnings ratio to effective tax rate based on the 1989 Employer's Tax Guide-Table 7-Page 23-Married Person. (I am sorry I don't have a 1990 guide available). I also calculated the effect on taxes if the highest rate was changed from 28% to 33%. This clearly demonstrates, as you stated, that the purpose of the 1986 tax reform act was to gradually increase the effective tax rate up to 28% at which time it becomes stable for all earnings higher.

That was the purpose. Now we find some of the architects of that famous piece of legislation—I was not one of the major architects—on the other side of the aisle, I assume to be saying we did not mean what we were saying in 1986. Let us go back and have a third rate, stick in more deduction, more exemptions for the rich.

I suggest we have a pretty good Tax Code. It is progressive and what people said they wanted around here for years.

Some wanted one rate, and we got two rates. Now we are being told we want three rates. I wish the Senator from Nebraska and others who want to talk about that rate would talk about the $30 billion tax on the working people in the Ways and Means package which is going to pass the House floor today. It is a $30 billion tax on working people taken right out of their check.

I am afraid, as I said earlier, it is a habit the Democrats cannot seem to break; they want to tax everybody; everything that moves tax it and then go around and talk about the Republicans being for the rich because you know the media is going to repeat it for you.

But the facts are facts. If you are working, and the Rostenkowski plan should pass, then you are in trouble, because you have lost indexing of your exemptions and the brackets and you are going to pay for it forever just for a measly $30 billion they are going to take out of the hide of working people. Is that fair? Talk about fairness, let us talk about fairness to the working man and woman. Who are these illusory rich somewhere that nobody seems to know?

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, will the Republican leader yield for question?

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I was not only struck by the remarks about the bubble but if I understand the Senator correctly the House Ways and Means proposal, as he described it, would largely eliminate the benefits that we gained from indexing; is that correct?

Mr. DOLE. They delay for 1 year which has an impact of raising taxes forever, yes.

Mr. WILSON. Specifically the Senator is saying it would effect the personal exemption that most of us take?

Mr. DOLE. As well as the brackets.

Mr. WILSON. As well as the brackets. So in the case on the exemption it, in effect, prevents what otherwise would occur; the exemption is supposed to go up to $2,100?

Mr. DOLE. That is correct.

Mr. WILSON. It is now $2,000 so this 1-year delay if it is only 1 year means in the next year taxpayers would have to, depending on the bracket, pay either $15 per family member or $28 per family member more, is that correct?

Mr. DOLE. In the 15-percent bracket, 28 percent; it is called the friendly tax, yes.

Mr. WILSON. Very friendly.

Let me get the other point. If I understood the Senator, what he is saying is that the bracket, or the indexing that would otherwise occur, that would mean that whether you are in that 28-percent bracket or the 15-percent bracket, it would also not move as it is scheduled to move. Instead of going up to about $32,500, it would instead stay where it is at the present time?

Mr. DOLE. That is correct. It is called the friendly family tax.

Mr. WILSON. I did not get the number. What is the effect of that? I can pretty well guess at what it would be.

Mr. DOLE. It is going to cost, if your income exceeds $32,500, and you have a family, your tax is going up by $201. When you add that to what you lost in personal exemption it is a pretty good tax increase, say a dollar a day more tax courtesy of the House Democratic friendly family tax plan.

Mr. WILSON. Even if in the 15-percent bracket, let us say a family of four, that means with the loss of increase in the exemption you are going to pay $60 more than you otherwise would?

Mr. DOLE. That is correct.

Mr. WILSON. In addition, because of the delay in the increase up to $32,500, if you are a family of four, you are going to pay an additional probably $200 or so. So you are looking at about $260 or $300 tax increase?

Mr. DOLE. That is correct.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I must say that I do not find that friendly. It is certainly not a family tax plan that is going to benefit most families who will find favor with them nor do I think it should.

As eager as everyone on the floor is to reduce the deficit, there has to be a better way. I thank the Republican leader.

Mr. DOLE. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed to speak as if in morning business for not to exceed 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Kansas and distinguished Senator from California expressed a considerable amount of concern over the House Ways and Means action as regards indexing. I do not support that action. It is kind of curious, debating the House Ways and Means proposal. I came here today to talk about the Finance Committee proposal, the Senate proposal.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KERREY. Yes.

Mr. DOLE. I understand it is going to be offered as a substitute on your side when we get in reconciliation, so we thought we would give a warning so you will not make the same mistake the House Democrats did.

Mr. KERREY. I appreciate the warning you are giving me.

I also would like to point out that in the midst of all this concern for families of America, I would like to ask where was the Republican leadership when we had an opportunity to reduce the tax on wages in America? It went up a half percentage point on January 1.

Mr. DOLE. This was a Republican amendment in 1981 indexing.

Mr. KERREY. I am talking about last week.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. I remind the Senator they must address each other through the chair.

Mr. KERREY. Last week we had a proposal before us that was based on the idea when we raised the tax on working people to pay for the Social Security trust fund that money was to be used for Social Security. But, unfortunately, for people who work in America, these working families that the Republican leader and the distinguished Senator from California expressed concern earlier, for these working families we taxed them too much. We generated more money than was needed for Social Security but we found another need, that is, deficit reduction. We found that we needed that little bit of excess. The distinguished Senator from Kansas talks about the highway trust fund. We are using that as well to reduce the deficit.

I did not hear enormous Republican outrage that American families were being overtaxed as a consequence of the increase in Social Security taxes and FICA contributions on January 1. I suspect that half-percent levy over the next 5 years will generate far more than what they are talking about over on the House side on indexing, though it is not a proposal I support.

I came to the floor, Mr. President, because I believe in the Finance Committee—though I may end up supporting that proposal—I believe in the Finance Committee proposal there is a continuation of what occurred in the 1980's. Perhaps the facts will reveal something other than what the facts revealed to me about the 1980's. But as I look at the 1980's, I think working people have taken it on the chin in all kinds of areas. Their real wages have gone down, creating all kinds of problems in our society.

We are finally going to get a child care bill passed, as I understand it, with Republican and Democratic support and it is going to be way too short and inadequate to deal with the problems that we have in America today.

In 1970, a person could graduate from high school and go out and get an hourly wage and support a family, but not in 1990. I hear this grand concern for American families. I hear more defense in fact of people who do not have a concern about their families because they are generating enough income that it is not a problem for them.

I look out in the streets of America today and I am concerned about American working families and what our tax policies, our spending policies, and our regulatory policies have done to them in the 1980's. And I think, in fact, contained in the rejection of the budget resolution after the President goes on television and tries to sell it, I heard the American people rejecting it.

Part of what I am trying to do, with respect to the distinguished Republican leader, in the debate about the Finance Committee proposal is try to respond to that concern.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. KERREY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DOLE. Let me say, in reference to the Social Security tax, I joined the majority leader in opposing that, a bipartisan opposition to that plan, first of all, because we were trying to work out a bipartisan summit agreement to reduce the deficit and the so-called Moynihan proposal did not fit into that. Plus, as a member of the commission in 1983 that we think sort of rescued Social Security from the brink of disaster, many of us were concerned, not only us, but experts in the field, economists were concerned, about what the adoption of the Moynihan proposal, notwithstanding the short-term political gain, might do to the trust fund in the outyears, in the long term. And that is why I opposed it with the majority leader, Senator MITCHELL.

Mr. KERREY. Mr. President, I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed as if in morning business for 10 minutes or less.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DEBUNKING THE MYTHS OF THE TAX SUMMIT PART III: WHEN A CUT ISN'T REALLY A CUT

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, again we find ourselves, with the colloquies around the floor, trying to understand and trying to get the message to the American people on the budget process here in Washington. I think that is what makes it difficult, because there are not very many Americans really who understand it, I being one of those. I am new here.

I can remember my first committee meeting when they said, "Well, you have to come up with some savings and you have to save some money." So we come up with ways to save some money, but we found out it is not going to be scored as a savings—scored.

So I want to talk about two fundamental flaws in our budget process. They are flaws which can easily be corrected if we, in Congress, spoke the workingman's English.

Here in Congress the word cut, as in "spending cut," means something entirely different than it does in Montana or any other State in this country. If I went to Montana and said we are cutting Federal spending—which I would not, because we are not—people would think that Federal spending was going to be less than it was a year ago. That is not what cuts are here at all. Here in Washington, a spending cut can mean one of two things. It can mean that spending will increase, but not as much as it would have if we did not cut it, or it can mean that spending will increase just as much, but Congress will just make someone else pay.

I realize that might be confusing, so let me explain. The first meaning arises because of something called current services budgeting. When the budget is put together, it is assumed that spending will increase at a rate equal to inflation or greater. It is on this increased level that the budget debate begins.

Let me give an example of how it would work in real life, and I will boil it down to what everybody can deal with, which is situations around home. If I give my son $100 a month allowance this year—first of all, he would faint; second, under current services budgeting, though, he would expect to receive $110 a month next year. If I then decided we could not afford to pay him that additional $10 a month, but could only increase his allowance by $7 a month, I would in congressional lingo be cutting his allowance by $3 a month.

I think most people would see that as a $7 a month increase in an already generous allowance, but in Washington budget speak, we would proclaim it a $3 cut.

I sponsored legislation which would correct this problem and put these budget terms into what most people could understand; legislation that would base each year's spending on the previous year's spending. If we spent $1 million on a certain program in 1990, we would start at that level and then increase or decrease from there. It is plain common sense. I think the American people could better understand the budget process if we stuck to the ordinary meaning of words.

I am an old county commissioner. We had to deal with real dollars, dollars that come in. We could not estimate what our taxes would be. We had a mil levy; we had a certain amount of dollars that would come into the county and that was our budget. We could not go over that. State law prevented it in the first place. In another place, your phone number is in the phone book, and your taxpayers can walk into your office. That makes a big difference. If the American people think that spending is going to be less than it was a year ago, then they should be told that is not the case. And if the American people see what we are doing, they might be better able to put a stop to it.

The second meaning of the word "cut" here in Washington is my favorite. This is when cut means that Congress spends just as much, but we just make somebody else pay. To equate it with the above example that I gave awhile ago, it would be like telling my son I could give him $110 a month even if I can only afford to give him $107. And I have a daughter in college, and I charge my daughter $3 a month to drive the car each month. So I could match her $3 with my $107 to come up with my son's allowance of $110. This is exactly how the current budget process works.

Under the current budget agreement, the committees have been directed to increase revenues or cut spending to meet certain deficit reduction targets. This process is called budget reconciliation, and the amount that must be found is $258.6 billion over 5 years. We know approximately $140 billion to $150 billion will come directly from tax increases. The rest is to come from savings or cuts in spending.

Now the trick is these savings could be raised through fees. Congress saves money by making someone else—most likely the small business person or user of any Government service—pay. So far, committees have come up with most of their savings by raising fees. In fact, under the rules of the Senate, true spending cuts not only count as savings, oftentimes the only option a committee has is to raise fees.

For example, the Senate Banking Committee was instructed to save or cut spending $13 billion over 5 years. So they raised deposit insurance premiums, a cost the banks will pass on to their customers. Let us never forget that companies, corporations, do not pay taxes. People pay taxes.

The Commerce Committee was directed to save $1.3 billion over 5 years, so we increased fees on boats that use waters patrolled by the Coast Guard. And that is a cost that the private boat owners will have to bear.

I could go on and on, but I think the point is clear. I think most people would lump fee increases with tax increases and not with spending cuts. I think we should do the same here in Washington.

It is pretty clear to me, Mr. President, that the American people are being deceived. They are being told programs are being cut when in fact they are just increasing by less than assumed. They are being told Congress is going to cut spending when in fact we are just making them pay increased fees. I believe the budget process needs to be reformed to build in some type of spending control. We can do this simply by redefining our terms. Let us get rid of the current services budgeting and let us put fees in the revenues column.

If we view the budget agreement in this light, it is clear the budget is being balanced with tax increases and not spending cuts. We are asking the American people to sacrifice greatly so Congress does not have to sacrifice at all. It is just that simple. Nobody can run our farms and ranches and businesses like we are running this outfit here. I will venture to predict if the current budget agreement is enacted into law, all of the American people will be paying more to Uncle Sam than they ever have before so Congress can continue to spend.

I yield the floor, and I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEAHY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from North Carolina.

THE HONEST BUDGET

Mr. SANFORD. Mr. President, why do we have so much trouble with the budget? Why is there constant conflict between the White House and the majority in Congress? Why cannot we get the deficits under control? How did we pile up the greatest national debt in the history of the country?

The basic answer is that we have not been operating for the last 10 years in a framework of honesty. For 10 years we have covered up a large part of the annual deficits by slick accounting tricks. The lack of clear and honest accounting let this debt slip up on America.

This pileup of hidden debt is the legacy of the Reagan administration. That is not a political opinion. It is a statement of fact, clearly demonstrated by the budget figures. It is necessary to be candid, not political, in order to define our problem and to design our solution.

It started with a mistaken notion that supply side economics is a feasible economic theory. It is a theory, but it has not been feasible.

The Reagan administration, the nonpartisan hand of history now clearly unfolds, gambled that it could cut taxes, increase spending for defense, and grow out of the deficit. The American people bought this fantasy because they wanted to believe it, but it did not work. Deficits grew. Each year the debt grew and grew as the administration borrowed and borrowed and borrowed. At the end of the Reagan administration, the national debt had tripled to some $3 trillion. And now the current administration continues this failed policy that President Bush once called voodoo economics, and we are racing toward a $4 trillion debt. At this rate, before the end of the decade, the national debt will equal the GNP.

What is wrong with us? Why is our fiscal house crumbling around us? To repeat, the basic reason our budgets, deficits, and debt are out of control is because for the last 10 years the people have not been told the truth.

The White House, year after year, has sent over budgets in which sizable stportions of the deficits were covered up, while pretending that the deficits were being reduced. They were not being reduced. They were being covered up. The true deficits, the national debt, were climbing all the time.

And the Congress is not without equal guilt. Congress, year after year, acquiesced in the coverup and the deceit.

So, in a word, Mr. President, the missing ingredient has been and continues to be honesty.

I am convinced that the first step to fiscal rehabilitation is to insist on honest accounting in the Federal budget.

S. 101, reported out by a bipartisan Budget Committee vote of 17 to 5, is entitled, "the honest budget/balanced budget bill."

What it would do is very simple, yet the results could be profound. This bill requires honest accounting.

There has been much importance placed on a unified budget, going back to a study done by agency heads in the Government during the Johnson administration. At that time it was felt that there were too many separate budgets, that we need a unified budget. That was no doubt good advice at the time. We may need a consolidated budget now, as economists argue, so that they will see the full impact of all Government expenditures. I have no quarrel with that.

I do know from experience that the only way to identify the ingredients of catfish stew is to examine them before they are thrown together into the stewpot.

That is what S. 101 will do. It will lay the ingredients out on the counter, for the public to look at very carefully, to be sure what is that. Then the economists can mix the numbers up, unify and consolidate, any way they want to. But first we need to get a clear look at honest figures.

S. 101 initially displays the budget in three columns. Simple. But with profound results.

First, S. 101 would redefine deficit, put an accountant's definition on it, and say simply that the deficit is the annual increase in the national debt. Everybody understands that. The S. 101 deficit includes money that we spent that we did not have, and therefore had to borrow. That's the way other people keep their books. So to achieve this, we would lay out deficit, debt, and interest, and sum it all up to clearly see what the annual increase in the debt is. That is the real deficit. That is the figure we must expose, the figure we must reduce, if we are ever going to get the budget and the deficit under control.

Second, in order to accommodate this treatment of debt and deficit, a second column is used to account for all retirement funds, showing income and expenditure and reserves, and a balance at the bottom of that column. This is the way corporations are required to report their retirement funds. We in the Government, however, have mixed retirement funds with general revenue and have been using these retirement funds for Government operations. They are used to cover up the real deficits, while being misused to finance the Government. We leave IOU's in those retirement accounts to replace the retirement funds we have spent—funds that we gave—funds that will need to be replaced some day. These are IOU's backed only by the right to tax later on. This puts the Social Security future beneficiary in a program that might very well be described as "pay now, and pay again later." S. 101 would cure the deceitful reporting, and also would help cure the temptation to misappropriate these retirement funds.

Third, this leads to the remaining column of the budget, the operating budget, which consists of three large groups of expenditures: mandatory entitlements, defense, and discretionary programs. The mandatory part covers such things as veterans' benefits, the farm program, and food stamps. The discretionary part covers everything from the White House to the Coast Guard to Yellowstone National Park. Defense covers the largest single item in the budget.

The other side of the ledger in the operating budget is the income, the revenues. This includes individual income taxes, corporate income taxes, excise taxes, estate and gift taxes, customs duties, and various miscellaneous fees and taxes.

The operating budget, which includes general tax income and regular government expenditures, must be balanced year after year. S. 101 requires that. S. 101 also requires that if there is manipulation of the budget, or faulty estimates and assumptions, resulting in an operating deficit at the end of the year, the resulting deficit must be carried to the first line of the next budget. Consequently, the operating budget can be kept perpetually balanced, and that is what S. 101 requires.

Now, looking to the debt, deficit and interest column, S. 101 provides that a debt trust account will be established, into which revenues can be put, which must be absolutely and solely dedicated to the reduction of the national debt, and that these revenues would sunset when the debt has reached an appropriate percentage of the gross national product.

Honest accounting is the first step. Would the passage of this legislation ensure that we get our budget and deficit under control? Of course not. S. 101 sets the stage, it almost compels action, the problem is exposed starkly, but political courage and determination each year will be required. This legislation, S. 101, will lay it all out in the fresh air for the public to observe and to comment upon and I hope to insist upon appropriate action. The massive size of our national debt should frighten us all. What the debt and high interest are doing to our economy, to our world competitiveness, to the cost of buying a home, and the cost of running a business, is real and will have disastrous consequences. Honesty, I suggest, will force action.

In fiscal year 1991, the debt, the amount of money borrowed each year, was used mostly for interest, with 16 percent being used for debt incurred for reasons other than interest. The following year 10 percent will be for expenditures other than interest. The next year interest will become 100 percent of the amount borrowed. Reflect on that. The startling fact that we now have built up such a debt that the deficit, the annual increase in the debt, will be solely the interest on the massive debt. The deficit is the interest on the massive national debt—a startling development. It is urgent that the voters know about the cost of the debt, in order that we might do something about it.

That is what S. 101 is designed to do. It is designed to bring honesty back into the budget process. It starts the cure with a dose of honesty.

S. 101 defines deficit for what it is, the annual increase in the national debt.

S. 101 protects Social Security and other retirement funds by removing them from the operating budget, and reducing the temptation to misapply them.

S. 101 gives us a unique opportunity to have an enforceable balanced budget.

And finally, it gives us an opportunity to use the budget process without annual quarrels, about how to reach certain artificial target figures, and it commits the White House and the Congress to the purpose for which the budget is intended: to set the priorities of America. It will give us an opportunity to see clearly and focus upon our expenditures and receipts, and to relate better the budget to the hopes and aspirations of the Nation.

S. 101 is a step in the direction of more honest government. We should not miss taking this step.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1990—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the conference report.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent on behalf of the Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] that Bill Yeomans and Roger Clegg, from the Department of Justice be granted privileges of floor during consideration of the now pending civil rights conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am very hopeful that we can move ahead to accept the conference report. As we know we are moving down to the final few days of this session. We have another important conference report following the acceptance of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 conference report. It deals with community service and has the administration's support.

We have been out here since 9:30 this morning. We have heard a number of excellent statements from Republicans as well as Democrats, particularly those who have been most involved in the shaping of the legislation, as well as the shaping of the followup proposals that have been incorporated in the legislation. I know of no others on our side who wish to speak beyond the leader. He wishes to address the Senate. I think it is appropriate that he does prior to the time of reaching a vote on the conference report. But with the exception of the leader, I know of no further Members on our side who wish to speak. I hope and urge those who do want to speak in favor or against to do so. We can then move ahead and adopt this particular conference report at the earliest possible time.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, will the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, it was the intention on this side through the Republican leader, Senator DOLE, to make a motion to recommit to the conference with instructions, or request the review of the Senate that it report out the Kassebaum-Wirth amendment, or something substantially similar to the amendment, which was debated at length at the time of the debate on the floor of this bill, and to have a vote on that motion of course before we voted on the conference committee report itself.

I have just spoken to the Republican leader who is prepared to make such a motion. But he was asked by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPECTER] who as the Senator from Massachusetts knows has been working with him toward accommodation of this issue, that before any such motion was made he had an opportunity with the Attorney General and some others to discuss whether or not there is a middle ground in the office of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. RUDMAN]. That meeting is going on at the present time.

The Republican leader feels that he should not make the motion until he hears what the results of that meeting are, I expect with respect to the request from Senator SPECTER. So, unfortunately that will cause an additional bit of delay, but there is always the possibility that it will result in something that we can all agree on.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Senator for his comments. I know this has been a long and continuing dialog with the White House, and with Republicans and Democrats alike.

I see my colleague, Senator JEFFORDS, who is our primary cosponsor on this legislation and has been very much involved in these conversations and negotiations. We tried to give as much time as possible after we completed our conference last week. It was my desire that we move to the conference report even as late as last Friday evening because it is a privileged matter. Then it was even the willingness of the Senator from Utah to move to it on Monday. Then there was the request to have it move on over to this morning.

We obviously are eager to have the President's endorsement and support. That has always been our desire. But at some time we have to reach a moment when we are going to dispose of this particular matter. We are now on Tuesday. We have heard that the majority leader desires to consider the Senate Finance Committee bill later this evening. We have other legislation on the community service program.

I would certainly not object to temporarily setting this aside for a short period of time so that we might be able to move ahead with our community service legislation, and so that we could use this time in a productive and constructive way.

The majority leader indicated this morning that these were the two items that he wanted to address today. We are prepared to move ahead on the community service program. I know of no objection to reaching a very short time limit on our side. There are two or three Members who wanted to speak very briefly on it.

So I hope that perhaps the Senator from Washington might make an inquiry of the majority leader to see if we cannot utilize this time in a way that would maximize productivity for Members of the Senate, and not just go on with continuing quorum calls.

Mr. GORTON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington.

Mr. GORTON. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts, Mr. President, for his understanding. Obviously, I have no objection to setting this bill aside so we can go on to other business.

It would seem to me at this point it might be appropriate to go into a quorum call, for the Senator from Massachusetts to seek the presence of the majority leader, and me to seek the presence of the Republican leader to see whether or not that could go forward. I will be happy to determine whether or not he would like to do exactly that.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the request is that at the appropriate time we temporarily set the civil rights conference report aside for a brief period and then return to it. So I would suggest in just a moment the absence of a quorum. I believe I can say having talked with the majority leader that we would be authorized to move ahead in that direction. We will check with him at this time. But if the Senator would inquire, I think it would be worthwhile.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BURDICK). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BURNS. I ask to proceed as in morning business for no more than 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

GRAZING FEE AMENDMENT

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, yesterday the House of Representatives voted to include the so-called Synar grazing fee amendment to the interior appropriations package for fiscal year 1991.

Mr. President, there are several of us in the West that are having problems with this particular amendment, and I want to state a few reasons why.

The amendment would increase grazing fees on public lands, particularly in BLM, those lands under the jurisdiction of BLM, by some 500 percent over the next 4 years.

Mr. President, the effect of such an action would be devastating to the Western States, those States that have a lot of Bureau of Land Management land, and in particular, to my State of Montana. The current rate in Montana is $1.81 per animal unit per month. The Synar amendment would raise that to $4.35 in 1991, $5.80 in 1992, in 1993 to $7.25, and $8.70 per AUM, animal unit, in 1994.

This amendment was not in the Senate appropriations bill, and if it is included in the Senate version that reaches this floor, they will pass this bill over my dead body. That is just how much it hurts a State like Montana.

It has been estimated that higher grazing fees would have a huge impact on local businesses. If grazing on Federal lands were to increase to $8.70 in 1994, it would mean an increase of over $70 million outlay just on stockgrowers in the State of Montana—$70 million. Raise the fee by only $2.50 and you would cause a loss of $2.1 million to the local economy in Montana.

In Prairie County, over in eastern Montana, local officials estimate that that cost would be some $1 million out of one county alone, and that county only has 2,000 residents.

Mr. President, as a former county commissioner, I understand the economics of our rural areas. Current grazing fees are not the total cost that stockmen pay to graze on public lands. In fact, the grazing fees paid to the Federal Government for the use of that land only constitutes very little, in fact, some 15 to 20 percent of the total cost associated with moving cattle and sheep on the public lands and maintaining them there and getting them off and getting them to market. It just does not stop there. Fences are maintained by the stockgrower at no cost to the Government. Reservoirs and water development, all of these things have to be done to manage livestock on range. If you take a look at some of the country that goes in that lease, it takes about 25 acres to an animal unit just to run them.

It has been said that grazing on public lands reduces available feed for wild animals. Mr. President, I believe quite the opposite to be true. The development of those lands has been at the cost of the stockgrower. He knows where his money comes from. The better that range produces, the better it is for him. The faster the domestic animals gain and grow, the better for the wildlife around them.

Cattle help promote range conditions that enhance wild animal feed. A loss of grazing on public lands can result in poor grazing conditions on much of our public lands.

A few years ago the Northern Agriculture Network owned by Taylor Brown now, we started sponsoring Montana Days. The whole design of that program is range improvement. We are aware of what grass can do in grass country. That has been very successful. You talk to BLM and talk to anybody that knows the West, and they will tell you that the range conditions in this country today are the best they have been in the last century.

As a Member of the other body from Montana said yesterday, grazing cattle are more important to the economy of Montana than oranges are to California and wheat to Kansas. It accounts for over half of the cash receipts in my State in agriculture. It is our State's biggest industry.

I thought of a bumper sticker the other day that would say in agriculture, "Earth Day is Every Day." Each AUM contributes some $75 to the Montana economy. Currently, we have nearly 1,500 Forest Service permits and nearly 4,000 Bureau of Land Management permits. If you assume that each permittee has one allotment, only 30 percent of the livestock producers have Forest Service or BLM permits. It is key to our State.

I realize it is hard for those who come from States that have very little Federal land to realize the impact that this would have on the semiarid Western States. Of 93 million acres of the land in Montana, over 28 million are federally owned. That is some 30 percent of the land. Livestock production on Federal lands in Montana constitutes some $125 million, based on 1988 cattle prices.

Let us talk about the formula they operate under now. When that was put into place in 1986, it said if the market went up on cattle, they are going to pay more to graze them. That has worked because it went up 40-some percent in the last 3 years.

Do you not hear any complaints from the cowman? Cattle markets are good. The current grazing fee based on that formula has been tested and has been proven fair. That is the issue—fairness. Mr. SYNAR's proposed 500-percent increase on grazing fee is not fair and should not be included in the appropriations package.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article by John Lacey and Jim Johnston titled "Livestock Grazing on Federal Lands: A Boon to Montana's Economy," be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LIVESTOCK GRAZING ON FEDERAL LANDS: A BOON TO MONTANA'S ECONOMY

(By John R. Lacey and James B. Johnson)

During the livestock industry's early years in the West, stockmen basically had almost unlimited access to huge amounts of land (Clawson 1950). During periods of intense settlement like the years 1867 to 1885, when herds of cattle were moved into the northern plains, use of the huge acreages they passed through was free. Only the presence of Indians restrained use of the land.

Some ranches eventually began to protect their grazing land from other stockmen by acquiring "key tracts" or base property. A key track usually contained the only water available to stock in the area. By preventing trespass on the land he owned, a rancher could obtain exclusive use of all the land that could be used by livestock watering on his land. Although public land adjacent to ranches was often useless for grazing because of a lack of water, the key tracts themselves were usually too small to sustain a viable livestock operation. Since stockmen lived in these areas, while the federal presence was at best a distant one, the former were able to make use of both types of land (Clawson 1950).

The first real regulation began when the federal government—through the U.S. Forest Service in 1906 and the Grazing Service in 1934—implemented formal range management policies. They began regulating the number of stock allowed on public lands, the season of use, the way livestock should be managed, etc. To control grazing, use of rangelands was reserved for specific livestock operation. The initial recipients of "right-to-graze" permits were usually established stockmen who could demonstrate historical use of the range. Even then, grazing fees were controversial, although at the time it was because of their very existence rather than their level.

Yet those fees were initially quite low. As noted by Secretary of Agriculture Henry C. Wallace in 1923:

"When the first grazing fees were established in 1906 they were designedly low, representing approximately the cost of administration rather than the intrinsic value of the forage consumed."

Early in its history, the Forest Service set monthly fees at about twelve cents per head for cattle and three cents for sheep; the Grazing Service established fees of five cents for cattle and one cent for sheep.

The land management policy that dominated those early years was expressed in a 1932 Forest Service report:

"In the administration of this vast domain, every effort is made to follow a sound national land-management policy. Ignoring passing expediences of the moment, this policy projects itself into the future; puts land management on a long-time basis. Conservation through use, rather than by "hoarding, is the very backbone of that policy. Its object is to devote every acre to the greatest public usefulness in the long run."

As a result of the process that established grazing fees and the way grazing permits on federal lands are transferred, permits acquired economic value. When a rancher sells private land that is the base property for the federal land, the grazing permit is waived back to the government. The government has the authority to reissue the permit to any qualified party but, almost without exception, reissues it to the purchaser of the base-property.

The difference between the value of the forage and the combined fee and non-fee costs of using the forage is capitalized into the value of the base property. In effect, the original owners of base properties reaped a windfall when permits were assigned to that property. In the market, grazing permit values are often calculated separately and bound and sold as assets with the ranches.

Although neither the Forest Service nor the Bureau of Land Management recognize the permits as vested rights, they are considered capital assets by ranchers, lending institutions and local governments. Permits values are reflected in the value of ranches when estates are settled and property taxes levied (McConnen 1976).

The escalating controversy surrounding livestock grazing on public lands reflects increasing public skepticism about the benefits of this particular land use. Public lands are now expected to provide everything from sustained timber harvest and high quality water sources to unspoiled opportunities for recreation. In light of the competition for public resources, some critics have singled out grazing as a particularly expensive use, one that returns benefits to a very small group of ranchers, most of whom purchased properties where the value of the permits was capitalized into the economic value of the base properties.

However, the benefits of grazing on public land go way beyond the leasees themselves. The income generated by this use of public lands, and its progress through local economies, makes a substantial contribution to the economic well-being of Western states. This article presents a brief analysis of the economic contributions of livestock grazing on federal lands in Montana, where nearly 25 million of the state's 93 million acres are managed by the U.S. Forest Service or the Bureau of Land Management. The state, like several of its Western counterparts, is quite dependent on agriculture.

Montana's livestock inventory, averaged for the 1986-88 period, included 1,317,000 beef cows and heifers that calved and 484,333 stock sheep and lambs. This inventory is equivalent to 1,413,868 AUs, which, as noted above, would require 16,966,416 AUMs annually.

Forest Service lands in Montana total 16,796,703 acres, some of which are used for grazing in addition to other uses. Of BLM land, 8,126,033 acres are managed for livestock grazing and other uses. Most of the Forest Service lands are located in the mountains of western Montana. Most of the BLM lands are in the plains and river breaks of north central and southeast Montana.

The Forest Service issues 1,499 permits and the BLM 3,939 permits to graze public lands in Montana (U.S. Forest Service 1987, Bureau of Land Management 1989). Assuming that each operator has only one permit, about 35 percent of the 13,000 farms with beef cows and the 2,600 with sheep are allowed to graze/ on federal land (U.S. Census of Agriculture 1989).

Federal lands supply 1,666,210 AUMs annually (Table 1). This represents 9.8 percent of the total forage needed by the range livestock inventory (where total forage requirements reflect forage for the grazing period plus harvested forage and other feeds during the feeding season).

The importance of forage from federal lands varied among regions in Montana. Much of the variation was directly related to distribution of federal lands. These lands supplied 17 and 14 percent, respectively, of the total forage requirements in the southeast and southwest regions. Federal lands supplied 25 percent or more of the total forage in six counties (Petroleum, Phillips, Powder River, Prairie, Siverlbow and Valley).

A representative 100-cow ranch runs one bull for every 20 cows, or a total of five bulls, which are kept in the herd for three years and then replaced. Cows are bred in June and July, and calves are born in March and April. Calves are weaned about mid-October. With the exception of heifer calves kept to replace cows in the herd, the calves are sold around November 1 at an average age of seven months. About 15 percent of the cowherd is culled annually, and the replacement heifers are bred at about 14 months, giving birth to their first calf at about 23 months.

Calf-crop percentage, expressed as the number of calves weaned in October and divided by the number of breeding cows the preceding January 1, averages 90 percent (this reflects the calf losses at birth, cows without calves and other calf deaths before weaning). Thus, 90 calves in our typical herd are weaned October 15. To simplify calculations (and because cow and bull mortality is quite low in most Montana livestock operations), we assumed zero percent cow and bull death rates. The total value of gross output generated per cow was $375.

The Forest Service appropriated $2.3 million and the BLM $2.5 million for annual range management programs in Montana. Additional funds, derived from grazing fees and invested in range improvements average $342,477 for the Forest Service and $1,747,737 for the BLM. The two agencies' expenditures for management and investments in range improvements totaled nearly $7 million annually (Bureau of Land Management 1986-88, U.S. Forest Service 1986-88).

The Forest Service and the BLM share of the total value of gross output per cow, based on the forage supplied as a percent of total forage required, was $12.38 and $24.38, respectively (0.033 × $375 and 0.065 × $375). Thus, forage from federal lands accounted for $52 million of the total value of gross output from Montana's 1,413,868 cows.

The total value of gross output attributable to livestock grazing on federal lands was $51,973,786. Forest Service and BLM expenditures and investments were $6,952,933. When the respective output multipliers were applied, the total economic activity attributable to livestock production was $111,743,639 and $12,793,507 to agency expenditures. Thus, the total economic activity attributable to livestock grazing on federal lands and to associated agency expenditures was $124.5 million.

The two agencies had similar economic impacts per AUM of grazing: $75.30 for the Forest Service and $74.46 for the BLM. According to total contribution by AUM, grazing on federal lands contributed more than $8 million to six counties (Beaverhead, Carter, Madison, Phillips, Powder River, Valley).

Obviously, grazing on public lands provides benefits that go way beyond the holders of grazing permits. To emphasize that point, it's worth reiterating the observations we've made in this article:

Federal lands supplied 1,664,210 AUMs, or 9.8 percent of the total forage required by 1,413,868 cows.

$375 in cash receipts was generated annually pet cow. Based on the federal land contribution of 9.8 percent of the total AUM requirements, the federal land share of the receipts was $36.75.

Based on a multiplier of 2.15, the total economic activity attributable to the Montana economy from grazing federal lands was $111.7 million.

The Forest Service and BLM annually invest $2.6 million and $4.3 million in their respective range management programs. Based on a multiplier of 1.84, the total economic activity attributable to the Montana economy from these expenditures and investments was $12.7 million.

On an AUM basis, the total economic activity attributable to grazing federal land and agency expenditures was $75.30 for the Forest Service and $74.46 for the BLM.

The total economic activity attributable to livestock production on federal lands in Montana and to agency expenditures on administration and investments in range improvements was $124.5 million annually.

METHODS

The estimated total economic activity attributable to livestock grazing on federal land to Montana's economy has not been fully addressed in recent years. The analysis reported in this article required use of certain procedures and assumptions to approximate the current situation:

The number of beef cows and sheep was summarized by county (Montana Department of Agriculture 1989). By considering five sheep to be the equivalent of a cow, the mean number of cows was calculated for a three-year period (1986-88). This average was multiplied by 12 to derive AUMs. An AUM is the amount of dry forage required by one animal unit (AU) for one month, based on a forage allowance of 26 pounds per day. As AU was defined as one mature cow weighing about 1,000 pounds, either dry or with a calf up to six months old, based on a standardized amount of forage consumed.

The number AUMs of grazing supplied from Forest Service and BLM lands was summarized by county (Bureau of Land Management 1986-88, U.S. Forest Service 1986-88). An average annual number of AUMs was calculated for the three-year period.

The federal land's share of the total AUMs needed to sustain the Montana range livestock inventory was calculated by dividing the AUMs provided from federal land by the total AUMs required to sustain the livestock inventory on federal and non-federal lands.

The direct economic contribution of livestock grazing of public land to the Montana economy was estimated by assuming that all grazing was by cow-calf pairs (sheep were converted to cow units in step 1). The total value of gross output per cow—the cash receipts received by a rancher—was calculated for a 100-cow herd. Production data were derived from records at Montana State University. Sale weights for November 1988 and mean prices for the 1986-88 period (adjusted to constant dollars) were used (Montana Department of Agriculture 1989).

The federal land's share of the value of gross output per cow was calculated by multiplying the value of gross output per cow by the percent of total AUM's supplied by federal land.

Funds expended by the Forest Service and the BLM for administration of range management programs and investments in range improvements were summarized (Bureau of Land Management 1986-88; U.S. Forest Service 1986-88). These are considered additional benefits to the Montana economy associated with livestock grazing on federal lands.

Total contribution of livestock grazing on federal land in Montana to total state economic activity was estimated by using multipliers. Output multipliers were applied to the value of total gross output attributable to livestock production on federal lands and to agency expenditures and investment for range management and improvement. These multipliers trace the economic activity associated with range livestock production and Forest Service/BLM expenditures made in that sector of the economy into other affected sectors, such as business providing production materials used by livestock producers. The specific multipliers employed were the "meat animals and miscellaneous livestock" output multiplier (2.15) and the Federal Government Enterprises output multiplier (1.84) (Brester et al. 1986). This procedure accounts for the indirect and direct contribution to the state's total economic activity attributable to livestock grazing on federal lands and the two agencies' expenditures and investments.

Mr. BURNS. I reiterate that this is the heart and soul of the West, the ability of people to feed themselves. We must never forget to feed the rest of society, too. Grass is a crop. It can only be harvested by cattle or by sheep, so that it may be used for we animals called humans.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAHAM). Without objection, it is so ordered.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1990—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, is the pending business the so-called Civil Rights Act of 1990?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report thereon.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have been a Member of Congress for nearly 30 years now, and I have voted for every piece of civil rights legislation that has come to the floor.

The Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Voting Rights Act of 1965, the Civil Rights Act of 1968, the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, the Voting Rights Act Extension of 1982, the Fair Housing Amendments Act of 1988, the Hate Crimes Statistics Act of 1989, and earlier this year, the Americans with Disabilities Act—I have voted for all these bills and have had some role to play in the legislation, and I have done so proudly and without hesitation.

But this year, Mr. President, the term "civil rights" has—regrettably—taken on a strange new meaning.

It is a meaning that has little to do with principles we all share as Americans—principles like fair play, and equal opportunity, and racial justice.

Instead, this bill—despite its great-sounding name and despite some of the positive changes made in conference—is still about quota justice. About protecting group rights, not individual rights. And about encouraging time-consuming and expensive litigation that will line the pockets of the plaintiff's bar and the lawyers for decades to come.

So, calling legislation the "Civil Rights Act of 1990" may be good strategy, good public relations, and it is certainly good politics. But labels are one thing. And the reality behind the label is something quite different.

The reality here is unlimited jury trials, unlimited compensatory damages, and a punitive damages provision that does little to diminish the possibility of multimillion-dollar jury verdicts but does much to transform title VII into a national tort law.

The reality here is that employers will be forced to abandon hiring by merit for a new standard—hiring by the numbers.

The reality here is that due process, the time-honored right to one's day in court, has been tossed into the legal junk heap for the sake of something called finality.

The reality is this bill does not restore title VII, as some of my colleagues have suggested. It distorts title VII and it transforms title VII into a gravy train for lawyers and for those who want an America where skin color is paramount and merit and good character are nothing more than little extras.

I commend my distinguished colleagues, Senator KASSEBAUM and Senator GORTON, for their leadership in drafting a strong, but responsible alternative civil rights bill. No doubt about it, Kassebaum-Gorton alternative has civil rights muscle and plenty of it. It overturns the Patterson versus McLean Credit Union decision by expanding the coverage of section 1981 to include racial harassment on the job. It overturns the Lorance versus AT&T decision by allowing workers to challenge discriminatory seniority plans at the time that the discrimination actually occurs, and not only at the time of the plan's adoption. It fine tunes the Martin versus Wilks decision in a way that protects court-ordered consent decrees without running roughshod over the due process rights of the citizens of this country. It expands title VII by creating for the first time in our Nation's history a strong Federal remedy, up to $100,000 in damages, that will deter sexual harassment in the workplace. Finally, the Kassebaum-Gorton alternative adopts a definition of business necessity that codifies the Griggs versus Duke Power decision, that is entirely consistent with title VII case law, and one that is not so restrictive that employers will be forced to adopt racial and ethnic quotas in the workplace.

Mr. President, the legislation of my distinguished colleagues, Senator NANCY KASSEBAUM and the Senator from Washington, Senator SLADE GORTON, was the real civil rights bill in this debate. It is a bill that would have guaranteed a Rose Garden signing ceremony sometime later this week.

Early this morning, I received a letter from President Bush, and just received a phone call a few moments ago, expressing his hope that he could sign a civil rights bill. He wants to sign a civil rights bill. He, too, has an exemplary record in the civil rights field.

As he indicated in his letter, he would have to veto this conference report, but that he would sign the Kassebaum-Gorton alternative if it were presented to him.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of President Bush's letter be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, October 16, 1990.

Hon. BOB DOLE,
Republican Leader, U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR BOB: I have consistently expressed my desire to sign into law a civil rights bill. I have also consistently worked with both the Senate and the House to forge a bipartisan consensus to address these issues in a constructive manner.

I understand that the Senate may soon consider the conference report on the Kennedy-Hawkins bill. The bill as amended in conference is neither sound nor practical. I am convinced it will have the effect of forcing businesses to adopt quotas in hiring and promotion. It will also foster divisiveness and litigation rather than conciliation and do more to promote legal fees than civil rights. If this bill is presented to me, I will be compelled to veto it.

I also understand that a motion may be offered to recommit to conference with instructions to adopt a substitute along the lines of the one proposed by Senators Kassebaum and Gorton last July. This approach represents a sound, practical compromise, and I will sign such a bill if it is presented to me.

I commend you, Senator Kassebaum, Senator Gorton, and all the Others who are working to produce sound civil rights legislation.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I know there are a lot of people who deserve much credit. There have been a lot of meetings and hundreds of hours of work. I know there have been efforts to reach negotiated settlements with representatives of the NAACP and the Urban League; distinguished American leaders, black leaders; distinguished Members of the Senate; and distinguished members of the administration, the Attorney General, Boyden Gray, counsel to the President, Chief of Staff John Sununu, and others. They have told me, and I have listened to them and, as I have said, I attended some of the meetings, and there is no doubt in my mind that from the start the administration wanted a bill.

I recall discussions on the ADA bill, the American With Disabilities Act. There was a lot of suspicion around here whether the administration wanted a bill even though the President mentioned his support of the ADA in his campaign.

I recall the first time there was an effort by the White House negotiators to reach some accord, it was fluffed off: "They are not serious, they are not concerned about America's disabled," some said. A strange thing happened, though Congress and the administration compromised because there was a willingness to negotiate and to make compromises.

That bill has been signed into law and there is nothing more heartwarming than to see the 2,000 or 3,000 wheelchairs on the lawn of the White House on the day the President signed the ADA bill.

Maybe I am an eternal optimist, but I still believe there is some hope to resolve the real differences in this package, even though we have a conference report on the floor. One way to do that is to adopt my motion to recommit, which I will make in a few minutes, and bring back the Kassebaum-Gorton bill. The President will sign it immediately.

I also want to commend my Republican colleagues, Senator HATCH, Senator JEFFORDS, Senator SPECTER, and Senator DANFORTH, and my good friend, the Senator from Massachusetts, Senator KENNEDY, and others who have spent a lot of time in an effort to bring about a resolution of the major sticking points.

So far the efforts have failed. But I believe the President has given this his best shot. I believe, just as he did in the ADA bill, he has shown his real commitment to real reform of the civil rights laws. There is no doubt in my mind. The President said he wants to sign an acceptable bill. That is precisely what he means. I do not believe he should have any regrets in having to veto a bill like this.

Last August, I wrote a letter to my good friend Art Fletcher, who is now serving as Chairman of the United States Civil Rights Commission. The letter outlined some of my objections to the Civil Rights Act of 1990 in more detail, and I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the letter be printed in the RECORD immediately after my remarks.

Mr. DOLE. In an effort to get outside the Government, outside the Senate Chamber, I asked my staff to contact a number of practicing lawyers, people out in the real world, not in the U.S. Senate, not in the bureaucracy, not in the White House, to get their views on this legislation and the suggested changes. They are experts on title VII law.

Although the responses differed in tone and context, they all share one common theme. Even with the changes accepted by the conference committee, the Civil Rights Act of 1990 is still a quota bill, a lawyer's bill, and a bill that distorts and not restores the underlying purpose of title VII.

I ask unanimous consent that the full text of these responses be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follow:

PAUL, HASTINGS, JANOFSKY
& WALKER,
Washington, DC, October 10, 1990.

Re Civil Rights Act of 1990.

Senator ROBERT DOLE,
U.S. Senate, Office of the Republican Leader, U.S. Capitol, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: Thank you for sending me proposed alternative language on the Civil Rights Act of 1990. I have reviewed that language carefully, and it raises several serious concerns. I have addressed the most important of these below. I am troubled by other provisions and omissions in this language, and would be pleased to explore those with you or your staff at your convenience.

1. Remedies. My major concern about the Civil Rights Act of 1990 lies in its potential to spur litigation and reduce the level of settlement in Title VII cases.[1] My views are set forth in detail in the attached article from the editorial page of the Washington Post.

The proposed alternative language (like the bills as passed) does not deal meaningfully with this problem. Under the alternative language, large damage awards and jury trials would remain available, and their potential to disrupt Title VII's remedial scheme would remain undiminished. I suspect that omission of any provision on remedies in the proposal is due to the belief that the cap placed on punitive damages in the bills as passed resolves the litigation problem. That simply is not the case.

The cap placed in the bills limits recovery of punitive damages only. It does not affect the ability of plaintiffs, in every individual Title VII case, to recover compensatory (pain and suffering) damages. Thus, one of the major problems I envision in Title VII litigation—the routine introduction of psychiatric or other expert testimony attempting to quantify pain and suffering and thus support a large jury verdict—remains undiminished. Indeed, because the cap on punitive damages is $150,000 or the amount of compensatory damages plus back pay, whichever is greater, there is a premium placed on proof of compensatory damages and the role of the psychiatrist in Title VII litigation would be highlighted.

[1] These comments apply equally to the new Americans with Disabilities Act, which will be enforced under Title VII procedures. With 43,000,000 disabled citizens who may become potential plaintiffs in ADA litigation, enforcement issues assume even greater importance.

Moreover, the cap placed on punitive damages hardly will diminish the amount of damages that can be recovered in Title VII litigation. A jury convinced that an employer committed serious wrongs easily could evade the punitive damages cap by awarding a large sum for pain and suffering, and then awarding a matching amount in punitive damages. Juries are notorious for allocating relief between compensatory and punitive damages in just such mysterious ways. The possibility for multi-million dollar liability remains undiminished under the bills as passed and under the proposed alternative language.

I am firmly convinced that the basic Title VII remedial structure—administrative conciliation, restorative relief rather than damages and bench rather than jury trials—remains appropriate for the vast majority of Title VII cases. There may be situations where some variance from this scheme is called for; for example, in harassment cases where there is no economic remedy available under current law. If Congress wishes to supplement existing remedies in these areas, it should do so specifically. It should not turn Title VII into a national tort law, at a time when tort law has shown itself so troublesome in so many areas of our society.

2. Definition of business necessity. An appropriate definition of "business necessity" is central to this legislation. An unduly strict definition of business necessity would lead employers to abandon attempts to use merit-related selection criteria, because the standards for their justification would be too stringent. There seems to be general agreement, reflected in language in the bills as passed and in the alternative proposal, that the business necessity standard initially enunciated in Griggs v. Duke Power Company, 401 U.S. 424 (1971), and developed by the federal courts during the 19 years since the Griggs decision, represents an appropriate accommodation of the competing interests involved.

Unfortunately, I do not believe either the alternative language that you sent to me, or the language in the bills as passed, effectively restores the Griggs standard. Section 3(o) of the alternative language continues to distinguish between employment practices involving selection and other employment practices, creating two different business necessity standards. I never have understood the need for two business necessity standards; the Court's decision in Griggs created only one standard. Two standards surely will lead to uncertainty and increased litigation, especially concerning what definition applies in any given case. For example, does a discharge fall within the clause for "selection practices" (Section 1(A)) or does it fall under paragraph 1(B)? Should some discharges (for example, discharges occasioned by theft) be treated differently than discharges based upon poor performance? Deciding what types of practices fall outside of the job performance criteria discussed in Section 1(A) needlessly will occupy the courts and employment lawyers for many years.

The Griggs test was clear and simple. The court held that where an employment practice is shown to have a disparate impact upon the employment opportunities of a protected group, "Congress has placed on the employer the burden of showing that any given requirement must have a manifest relationship to the employment in question." 401 U.S., at 432. That concept has been elucidated by the federal courts during the past twenty years, and until the controversy over Wards Cove Packing Co. v. Atonio, 109 S.Ct. 2115 (1989), no one (in my memory) in the civil rights community argued that Griggs was not stringent enough. A return to Griggs would embody a very simple definition of business necessity.

"1. The term 'required by business necessity' shall mean having a manifest relationship to the employment in question."

That definition is consistent with the paragraph of the proposed language, and of the bills, stating that the intent of the bill is to restore the Griggs standard and overturn Wards Cove.

Even if there was a need to create two business necessity standards, the proposed alternative language raises serious problems. For example, requiring a showing that the practice or practices "must bear a significant relationship to successful performance of the job", as in Section 1(A), could be construed to penalize employers who attempt to set their standards for "optimal" rather than "successful" performance. The Supreme Court in Griggs stated that "Congress has not commanded that the less qualified be preferred over the better qualified simply because of minority origins", 401 U.S., at 436, a proposition that remains equally vital today. Moreover, "successful job performance' does not seem to take into account concepts such as absenteeism, tardiness, accident rates or misconduct, which may not involve "job performance" but which are related directly to business needs and should be acceptable measures for employment criteria. Finally, by concentrating solely on "job performance", the proposed definition seems to exclude consideration of financial and safety concerns applied by many courts in business necessity cases. In transportation cases particularly, the courts have held that the risk to public safety justifies a somewhat less stringent approach to business necessity.

Others commenting on this language (including Division 14 of the American Psychological Association, a professional group composed of experts who deal with test validation and selection criteria for a living) having pointed out that use of the term "significant" may cause problems if it is understood to impose a requirement that employers establish the relationship between the test and the job by measures of statistical significance. This view is set forth in a recent letter from the President of Division 14, Dr. Frank Landy, to Rep. Augustus Hawkins, which I attach for your review.

I also commend to you the proposed definition of business necessity endorsed by Division 14, which states:

"The term 'required for business necessity' means shown to be (1) predictive of or significantly correlated with work behavior(s) comprising or relevant to the job or job family for which the procedure or combination of procedures is in use, or (2) representative of one or more important components of the job, or (3) otherwise manifestly and demonstrably job related."

I believe this language tracks the Griggs principle fairly closely, and embodies standards currently accepted by the professional community most familiar with this area. It also solves the difficult problem of justification of subjective employment criteria, which I believe led the Supreme Court to rule as it did in Wards Cove. I also cannot help but believe that this language would be acceptable to civil rights groups who in fact wish to see a restoration of Griggs.

The other basic problem I see with the business necessity section of the proposed compromise, and of the language contained in the bills themselves, lies in Section 2's specification of the types of evidence that a court may consider. I can recall no other statute in which Congress has attempted to instruct the federal courts on admission of evidence. In particular, I disagree with a requirement that an employer produce "demonstrable evidence" of business necessity. If Congress believes that the courts are likely to accept "unsubstantiated opinion and hearsay" as proof of business necessity (a fear that I believe has no basis under the Federal Rules of Evidence), Congress ought to say that and no more. Must an employer produce charts or other documents under the "demonstrable evidence" language? A "demonstrable evidence" requirement seems to command that a federal court to accept only a portion of the evidence that may be relevant to the issue before it, and illustrates the problems that undoubtedly will arise when Congress begins telling the federal courts what types of evidence they may receive and consider in any given case.

3. Particularity. Closely tied to the business necessity definition is the issue of proving which practice causes the disparate impact. In Wards Cove, the Supreme Court held that a plaintiff was required to demonstrate which employment practice caused the adverse impact, thus shifting the burden to the employer to validate that practice. Allowing the plaintiff to establish his or her prima facie case merely by showing that the employer's practices, taken as a whole, create an adverse impact would be a significant incentive for employers to abandon merit-based hiring and merely ensure that their work forces are racially and gender balanced.

The bills as passed seem to reflect an understanding of this problem. S. 2104 as passed requires that a plaintiff demonstrate which specific practice or practices contributed to the disparate impact if the court finds that this information can be identified from records or other information available through discovery or otherwise.

The alternative language on this issue wisely builds on this concept by requiring that the plaintiff demonstrate "which specific practice or practices are responsible for the disparate impact . . ." Further, the alternative language clearly states that plaintiffs bear this burden in all cases, a proposition that S. 2104 endorses in recondite fashion. The intent of the alternative language appears to be that this requirement holds true in all cases except where the employer has impeded access to information necessary for the plaintiff to meet this burden.

While this approach makes sense and is an improvement over the bills, I believe the proposed language is unwise in two respects. First, I am troubled by the proposition that the plaintiff may avoid his or her burden where an employer fails to keep records necessary to enable plantiff to demonstrate adverse impact. There is no existing requirement that employers keep any such records. If an employer must keep records on this issue, and the plaintiff may obtain such records through discovery, why place the burden on the plaintiff in the first place? Moreover, this language seems to assume that proof of impact can be generated only through employer records, which simply is not true. While proof of impact in the individual workplace is preferable, statistical showings of adverse impact that do not depend upon employer records are routinely made and accept under Title VII.

Second, I believe it is unnecessary to specify particular acts of employer misconduct, as in subsection (a) (destruction, concealment or refusal to produce necessary records). Such misconduct normally warrants severe sanctions under existing law, including issue preclusion where appropriate. Rather than go into such detail, I suggest that this paragraph be rephrased to read:

(iii) the complaining party shall be required to demonstrate which specific practice or practices are responsible for the disparate impact in all cases, unless the court finds that the employer has wilfully impeded the complaining party's access to information necessary to make this showing.

4. Price Waterhouse. The proposed language is a substantial improvement over the bills in this area. The restoration of "motivating" factor language reflects the general rules applied in mixed motive cases, and is taken from the heart of the Price Waterhouse opinion itself.

My concern with this clause lies in its potential to spur reverse discrimination lawsuits. Almost by definition, employers engaged in lawful affirmative action regularly consider the race or sex of applicants or employees in their decisions. This does not mean they are engaged in quota hiring or promotion; rather, they consider race or sex as part of their decisional process. As I understand the motivating factor analysis created by the proposal, such consideration would be a violation of Title VII.

Proponents of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 have told me that they assume the courts will follow existing law and not find an employer liable for action taken pursuant to a lawful affirmative action program. I believe it is wrong to leave such an important proposition implicit in this bill. The federal government cannot in good conscience expect employers to undertake affirmative action efforts, as they must under Executive Order 11,246 and other federal laws, yet expose themselves to Title VII liability for doing so. To void this result, I would suggest that an additional sentence by added to the end of proposed section 703(1), stating:

It shall not be unlawful under this section or this title for an employer to take actions pursuant to the provisions of a lawful affirmative action plan.

As I stated above, these are not the only problems with the proposed language, or with the bills as passed. In the interest of brevity, I have addressed only the issues that seem central to me. I would be pleased to discuss these comments, or any other aspects of the bills or the proposed language, with you or your staff at your convenience.

Very truly yours,

ZACHARY D. FASMAN.

PRACTICAL PROBLEMS OF THE CIVIL RIGHTS ACT

(By Zachary D. Fasman)

The quota issue continues to dominate debate about the Civil Rights Act of 1990, obscuring several serious practical problems presented by the bill. Foremost among these is the propopsal to allow compensatory and punitive damages under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The omnibus federal employment discrimination statute, Title VII currently allows monetary relief for economic injuries alone. An employee improperly discharged because of his race can be reinstated to his job and recover lost wages and benefits; a woman wrongfully refused promotion because of her sex can obtain the lost promotion and back pay as well. Neither can recover damages for mental anguish or pain and suffering, nor can either obtain punitive damages. The Civil Rights Act of 1990 would change this, and allow their claims to be tried before a jury rather than before a judge.

This proposal to create a federal tort law system for employment discrimination cases is likely to benefit no one but lawyers. Authorizing recovery of compensatory and punitive damages will lead to a dramatic increase in Title VII litigation, with accompanying judicial delays. At present, Title VII emphasizes obtaining full economic redress quickly and without litigation. Discrimination charges must be filed promptly, the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission is supposed to investigate expeditiously and if reasonable cause exists to believe that the statute has been violated, the EEOC must attempt to conciliate prior to suit.

Early in the process, even full recompense for an employee's economic injury is relatively slight in comparison to the employer's projected litigation costs, to say nothing of the plaintiff's legal fees that the employer will incure in the event of a loss. While some cases involve matters of principle, most cases are resolved early in the process because the employer has strong economic incentives to settle rather than to litigate.

An employer's economic incentive to settle is largely destroyed if compensatory and punitive damages become available. Experience in state wrongful discharge litigation reveals that compensatory and punitive damage awards regularly average in the hundreds of thousands of dollars. Six-figure liability automatically will increase settlement costs in most individual cases beyond the employer's projected litigation costs, and thus employers will have an economic incentive to litigate rather than settle. In cases where an employer believes he has a reasonable chance of prevailing, the proverbial reasonable person would choose litigation on the basis of economics alone, contrary to the current situation.

Such an increase in litigation is not justified by the claim that Title VII remedies are inadequate. Title VII's remedial structure certainly is not unique. Congress repeatedly has concluded that employment principally is an economic relationship and that employment injuries do not require tort remedies. Almost every federal statute addressed specifically to the employment relationship—the National Labor Relations Act and ERISA spring to mind—provides relief for economic injuries alone rather than pain and suffering or punitive damages. These statutes, like Title VII, long have been regarded as successful. The multimillion-dollar Title VII class actions that have resulted in redesign of so many employment practices have not required the enhanced remedial scheme envisioned by the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

Our tort system, long renowned for its unfairness and glacial pace, has little to recommend it in employment discrimination cases. It is ironic that a majority of the Senate and at least 180 representatives apparently support creating a new federal tort system for employment discrimination cases at the same time that legislators on both the federal and state levels actively are seeking alternatives to the tort system itself in areas such as products liability and medical malpractice.

This irony is even more pronounced given the increasing congestion in the federal courts, evidenced by the recent Report of the Federal Courts Study Commission, which concluded that the "recent surge in federal criminal trials . . . is preventing federal judges in major metropolitan areas from scheduling civil trials, especially civil jury trials, of which there is a rapidly growing backlog." That report recommended arbitration rather than federal litigation of individual employment discrimination cases.

Proponents of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 argue that compensatory and punitive damages and jury trials already are available to blacks under the Civil Rights Act of 1866 and that the new law merely seeks to preserve parity among groups by making such remedies available to all victims of employment discrimination. But this argument does not address whether it makes practical sense to extend tort remedies any further. The Civil Rights Act of 1866 initially was extended to employment discrimination by a Supreme Court decision in 1976, more than a century after its passage, and there is no evidence that Congress (either in 1866 or subsequently) ever debated the wisdom of applying the statute to the workplace.

More thoughtful proponents of the bill claim that certain injuries actionable under Title VII have no economic component. In 1986, the Supreme Court held that pervasive racial or sexual harassment in the workplace was actionable under Title VII even absent an economic injury. Shouldn't there be some financial remedy for this conduct?

Perhaps so. But even assuming it is appropriate to create a greater financial remedy for harassment in the workplace, surely this limited lacuna in the law does not justify creating a federal tort system that would apply to almost every employment discrimination case.

That certainly is the purport of this legislation. Courts traditionally distinguish between disparate treatment cases—in which an individual claims to have been treated less favorably because of his race or her sex—and disparate impact cases, which generally involve systemic barriers to equality. The Civil Rights Act of 1990 would provide compensatory relief in all disparate treatment cases, not just those involving egregious intentional misconduct. Thus a run of the mill absenteeism discharge, in which a black or a woman claims that his or her absenteeism record was not as bad as that of another employee who was retained, would fall within the ambit of compensatory relief even though there was no direct evidence of race or sex animus in the workplace. So would broadly based class actions that allege that the employer engages in a "pattern or practice' of discrimination, thus inveigling juries in adjudicating sophisticated statistical issues with millions in compensatory and punitive damages hanging in the balance.

The monumental delays and the inordinate expense involved in litigating such cases before juries are daunting. Only lawyers would want to multiply this type of litigation by making settlements less likely or making it normal to introduce psychiatric testimony attempting to quantify the pain and suffering of an employee who has been discharged. The remedial provisions of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 need to be amended if the bill is to benefit anyone but members of the bar.

SOCIETY FOR INDUSTRIAL AND ORGANIZATIONAL PSYCHOLOGY, INC.,

Arlington Heights, IL, September 7, 1990.
Representative AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS,
Chairman, Committee on Education and Labor, Rayburn House Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE HAWKINS: As you may remember from earlier correspondence, the Society of Industrial and Organizational Psychology is a 2,400-member organization and a Division of the American Psychological Association, an association of over 90,000 psychologists. The members of our Society are centrally involved in employee selection issues. Our Society's publication entitled, "Principles for the Validation and Use of Personnel Selection Procedures" is commonly referred as a leading statement of the most current scientific thinking on personnel selection issues. They are frequently cited in Federal District Court cases on issues related to employment discrimination. In addition, our members conduct the research and practice that underlies legislative, judicial and administrative action at the local, state and federal level. Thus, we have followed with great interest the development of the Kennedy-Hawkins Civil Rights Act of 1990.

We have been monitoring the progress of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 as closely as possible during the discussions of this bill in both the House and Senate. On a number of occasions, we have suggested wording changes that would make the bill compatible with the current thinking of scientists who are expert in the area of selection testing. Unfortunately, our suggestions have not yet been implemented into the language of the bill. It appears to us that the language of H.R. 4000 exceeds the Griggs doctrine and, further, that this non-Griggs language is technically unacceptable and at odds with professional standards. Even though there are legislative disclaimers to the contrary, it is still possible that employers might choose to adopt quotas rather than challenge what might appear to be an impossible standard of proof. For that reason, I would like to urge members of the conference committee to make the appropriate changes. Any influence you might bring to bear on this issue would be greatly appreciated. Below, I have listed our concerns.

1. In H.R. 4000, the term "group of practices" is ambiguous. On many (if not most) occasions, employers use combinations of tests, or test "batteries" to make hiring decisions. It is well accepted in measurement theory that a combination is often more valid than any of its pieces. In other words, the predictive power accumulates across the different components of the combination. Our concern centers on Section 4(B), i. and ii. It is our fear that this important combination principle is lost and that employers will be required to show that each of the tests in the battery either has no adverse impact or sufficient validity to stand on its own, even though the battery combination is demonstrably job related. In this case, we have drowned the baby in the bathwater. The employer, once again, might be tempted to either eliminate a procedure that contributes to validity or to simply make sure that there is no adverse impact. It is obvious that the best way to eliminate adverse impact is through the adoption of quotas.

2. As before, we are concerned about the eventual interpretation of the term "significant" relationship. If this is interpreted as statistical significance, then it substantially alters the Griggs doctrine. Rather than lay the groundwork for later confusion, we continue to urge the use of the term "mainfest" relationship. As I indicated in an earlier letter, this battle has been fought long ago and a compromise has been reached between those representing the interests of plaintiffs and defendants in Title VII cases. The language of H.R. 4000 simply creates new chaos to replace order and understanding.

3. The use of the term successful to describe job performance creates an inappropriate dichotomy. It is a well accepted principle in our profession (a principle with wide empirical support) that performance is continuous and not dichotomous. There is no magic line that separates successful from unsuccessful performance. Rather, the generally accepted principle is that higher scores imply higher performance. This principle is clearly stated in the document that has been widely cited in Title VII litigation and published by our Society. The document to which I refer is titled "Principles for the Validation and Use of Personnel Selection Procedures" published in 1987. The following statement appears on p. 24 of that document:

"If a selection instrument measures a substantial and important part of the job reliably, and provides adequate discrimination in the score ranges involved, persons may be ranked on the basis of its results."

It is clear from this statement that ranking of candidates from the top scorer to the bottom scorer should be the rule rather than the exception. For this reason, we are concerned about the implications of the term "successful" performance in H.R. 4000. In addition, this terminology might suggest that the standard for comparison is minimal qualifications necessary to perform the job. Griggs, on the other hand, permitted employers to adopt higher standards rather than only minimal ones.

4. The term "performance on the job" also creates problems. As we have stated previously, many employers have legitimate concerns with employee behaviors such as absenteeism, tardiness, accident rate, and turnover. In fact, many of these outcomes are more closely related to employer profitability or effectiveness than more traditional measures of performance. For that reason, we fear that the term "job performance" is too restrictive and would like to see the concept expanded to include all relevant job behaviors (including those listed above).

5. Finally, one might construe the language in H.R. 4000 specifying performance on the job to imply that a new validation study must be conducted for each and every job in each and every situation. This principle has been dubbed "situational specificity" and has been clearly abandoned by our profession. The corner stone of applied prediction (and in fact, of all science) is the notion of generalizability. We conduct research in order to apply the results to similar situations. This is just as true in employee testing as it is in cancer research. In medical research, when the clinical trials are completed and the results satisfactory, the drug is presented for use in a range of situations that involve particular symptoms. One does not conduct new clinical trials in each city with reach doctor for each patient. The same is true in testing. When we have gathered sufficient evidence to demonstrate that a particular test is predictive of performance for a job title or job family, it is not necessary to "re-validate" that test for similar uses in other settings. To be sure, one would require that the test user demonstrate the similarity of the situations (e.g. through a comparison of job analysis results) but a new validation study would not be required. This principle is the cornerstone of the concept of validity transport, a concept well recognized in both professional (e.g. SIOP Principles) and administrative (e.g. Uniform Guidelines) documents. We urge that the use of the term "the" job be clarified so that there will be no argument about the concept of validity transportability, as currently addressed in the Uniform Guidelines.

ESPTEIN BECKER & GREEN, P.C.,
Washington, DC, October 10, 1990.
Hon. BOB DOLE,
Office of the Republican Leader, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: Pursuant to your request, I have examined the proposed revisions to the Civil Rights Act of 1990 (the "Act") which purport to modify the Act's definition of "business necessity", the "particularity requirement" for plaintiffs alleging an unlawful "disparate impact" in an employer's workforce, the section of the Act overturning the Price Waterhouse decision, and add several new exceptions to the section of the Act that overturns Martin v. Wilks. In this endeavor, I was assisted by my partner, Tom Bagby, who prosecuted Title VII cases for the Justice Department from 1977 to 1981.

The proposed revisions simply fail to reduce the likelihood that employers would be forced to hire workers according to rigid racial and ethnic quotas and would lead to increased litigation since the Act, as now proposed (even with the revisions), is structured in such a way as to discourage settlement of cases prior to suit being filed. In addition, the litigation that would result from the adoption of the Act would be even more costly, complex and time-consuming due to the total reliance the Act places on the vast amounts of statistical and documentary evidence that would be necessary to justify each and every employment decision an employer makes in the normal course of business, from the number of employees needed to do the available work to the amount the employer will pay his/her employees. Logic and common sense would no longer be applicable in disparate impact cases.

The version of the Act adopted by the Conference Report, as a practical, matter would still compel employers to adopt quotas to avoid costly and time-consuming litigation. The revisions as a whole fail to restore the meaning and intent of Title VII, which is to provide equal employment opportunity (and not necessarily equal results) for the persons protected by the law. Finally, the revisions go far beyond restoring Griggs v. Duke Power Company and subsequent Supreme Court cases.

In particular the proposed defintion of "business necessity" will not eliminate the previously expressed concerns that the legislation may force employers to engage in "quota" hiring. Moreover, certain aspects of the proposed "business necessity" language may create additional concerns not previously present in earlier versions.

First, there is a strong implication, at least, that formal, detailed validation studies will be required to meet the stringent requirements of (o)(1)(A). Such validation studies simply are beyond the economic means or capabilities of most employers. Morever, the language of (o)(1)(A) arguably would preclude the use of "content" validation strategies and allow only more costly and complex "criteria-related" studies. (Historically, there has been an antipathy in the civil rights community toward otherwise generally accepted "content" validation strategies.) The language in the proposal is sufficiently onerous that it may force the few remaining employers who use written tests to abandon their use, with the consequent significant loss of productivity associated with the use of less objective selection procedures.

Second certain portions of the proposal may contain terms of art that could result in substantial unforeseen problems for employers in defending against disparate impact claims. For example, "significant" may be interpreted to mean "statistically significant", in which case the burden on an employer of demonstrating the required relationship to successful job performance would be dramatically greater. In addition, to the extent "demonstrable" evidence is interpreted to mean "demonstrative" evidence, it may require written evidence (such as formal validation studies) in addition to otherwise the wholly acceptable and sufficient testimony from witnesses. Moreover, a single standard of businiess necessity would appear to be preferable to the current bifurcated approach.

Finally, the inclusion in (o)(1)(B) of a "plant closing or bankruptcy" as examples of employment decisions that could be challenged on a disparate impact basis is quite disturbing. Presumably, this means that a decision to close down a plant that had a largely minority workforce could be challenged on a disparate impact basis. This is a dramatic expansion of Title VII into areas which it previously has not covered and would impinge significantly on areas of employer prerogative that the courts previously have been unwilling to disturb.

From a practitioner's standpoint, perhaps the most significant aspect of the proposed legislation relates to the availability of jury trials and compensatory and punitive damages. While disparate impact cases remain important under Title VII, the vast majority of cases filed today are disparate treatment cases. All disparate treatment would be subject to jury trials and compensatory and punitive damages under the proposed amendments to title VII. The proposed cap on punitive damages is of little practical value given the availability of unlimited compensatory damages for pain and suffering, embarrassment, humiliation, and the like.

The case of Rawson v. Sears, Roebuck & Co., 615 F. Supp. 1546 (D. Colo. 1985), rev'd on other grounds, Nos. 85-1223 and 2366 (10th Cir. 1986), provides an illustration of how Title VII may be affected by the availability of such unlimited damage awards. Rawson involved a claim asserting a private right of action of age discrimination under a Colorado criminal misdemeanor age discrimination statute by an individual whose employment had been terminated. Following a jury verdict, a judgment was entered against the employer in the amount of $19,096,495.01. Of this amount, $5,000,000 ($5 million) was for pain, suffering and humiliation and $10,000,000 ($10 million) was for exemplary or punitive damages. While the verdict was overturned on appeal because the lower court improperly had approved a civil cause of action under the state criminal misdemeanor statute, the decision nonetheless demonstrates the significant potential for nearly unlimited jury verdicts under Title VII for compensatory damages in the form of pain and suffering, humiliation, embarrassment, and the like. The capping of punitive damages, of course, under the proposed amendments to Title VII would have absolutely no effect on limiting the amount of compensatory damages which could be awarded in similar EEO cases brought under Title VII.

In sum, we believe significant problems remain with the proposed legislation that tip the scales decidely against employers in defending against not only disparate impact but also disparate treatment claims. The onerous requirements for defending against claims of discrimination, when coupled with the availability of jury trials and compensatory and punitive damages, make it likely that many employers will have no alternative but to engage in "quota" hiring or selection. If you have any questions or if you would like to discuss any of these issues further, please do not hesitate to contact me.

Sincerely,

CATHIE A. SHATTUCK.

SHAW, PITTMAN, POTTS
Washington, DC, October 11, 1990.

Hon. ROBERT DOLE,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR DOLE: Thank you for providing me with an opportunity to comment on the suggested revisions to the Civil Rights Act of 1990 ("Act"). Unfortunately, it is quite clear that these suggested revisions do nothing to eliminate the serious problems which led you to vote against the Act in July. Since you have already identified your objections to the original version of the Act, I will not attempt to rehash its deficiencies, but will simply explain why I do not believe the revisions mitigate these faults.

First, and perhaps most important, the revisions do nothing to solve the fundamental flaw in the Act's definition of "business necessity." Under the proposed revision, as under the original Act, all "employment practices involving selection" need be justified as having a "significant relationship to successful performance of the job." The only change is to impose this onerous requirement on either selection devices or "practices primarily related to a measure of job performance," but the revised version does nothing to lift or modify this requirement for selection devices. Accordingly, the revision simply does not address the fundamental objection that an employer should be permitted to take account of business objectives other than job performance when making a hiring or promotion decision. The revised Act's myopic rule would foreclose an employer from considering, for example, whether an applicant had been convicted of a felony or from considering anything else bearing on character, motivation or other intangible attributes not directly linked to the four corners of the job for which he or she is an applicant.

The only other cognizable change in the revised version is its substitution of the word "manifest" for "significant," so that nonselection devices may now be justified if they "bear a significant relationship to a manifest business objective." This does little to alleviate the difficult burden initially imposed by the Act and does much to confuse it. While "manifest" is arguably less demanding than "significant," the dictionary definition of that term is "readily perceived" or "easily understood." Thus, a literal construction of the revised standard would invalidate even important business objectives unless the objective's purpose was readily understood by outsiders—a genuinely bizarre result. This straightforward interpretation is more likely because, so far as I can discern, the phrase "manifest business objective" appears nowhere in Title VII case law and thus has no preexisting judicial meaning or gloss. Substituting the word "manifest" would thus lead only to confusion. Further, because this second category covers so little (all selection practices being judged under the first—often inapposite—standard), change here is often irrelevant in any event.

More important, even if "manifest" were arguably more palatable than "significant" when viewed in isolation, such tinkering with the law's substantive standard accomplishes precisely nothing absent deletion of the Act's directive that the "subsection is meant to codify the meaning of 'business necessity' as used in Griggs . . . and to overrule the treatment of business necessity as a defense in Wards Cove Packing Co. . . ." This plainly requires that courts create a significant distinction between Griggs' and Wards Cove's definition of business necessity, which does not exist under a proper interpretation of Griggs, and reject Wards Cove's practical application of traditional "disparate impact" doctrine. So treating Wards Cove as judicial kryptonite obviously renders its proper understanding of disparate impact a nullity and mandates that courts apply the most extreme, pro-quota understanding of Griggs that can possibly be gleaned from isolated lower court decisions. This Congressional internment of Wards Cove is particularly problematical because that decision was an avowed attempt to ensure that the disparate impact doctrine was not distorted into a standard so onerous that it effectively mandated racial preferences and quotas. This was especially important because the Watson case had vastly expanded the reach of disparate impact theory the year before. Congressional rejection of every aspect of the Wards Cove treatment of business necessity in favor of a "tougher" disparate impact theory would thus likely be taken by the courts to indicate a congressional lack of concern that this "tougher" standard will effectively mandate quotas.

Nor do the revisions make any discernible substantive change in the "particularity" requirements for plaintiffs. The bill currently states that plaintiffs need not isolate the specific employment practice allegedly causing the alleged impact if the relevant records are not "reasonably available" from the defendant. This is objectionable because it establishes the unique rule that a plaintiff is relieved of the obligation of establishing even a prima facie case solely because it cannot gather the evidence to establish that the defendant has caused the alleged injury. This places defendants in the impossible position of being required to demonstrate to the plaintiff how the plaintiff could have identified a particular employment practice in order to show that the plaintiff has not met its burden of identifying a particular practice. The newly proposed revisions to the Act do not change this circular and self-defeating state of affairs. The revised version merely identifies all the situations in which evidence would not be "reasonably available" to the plaintiff; i.e., those situations in which the relevant evidentiary records have never been kept or are no longer in existence. It does not, however, in any way change the rule that the plaintiff need not make his case if there is any difficulty with gathering the evidence necessary to make his case. Moreover, the revised version still does not require the plaintiff to show that a particular employment practice caused any statistical disparity.

Perhaps the most indefensible, and certainly the most cynical, provision of the current Act is the section which prevents nonminority victims of reverse discrimination from even having a day in court to argue that such discrimination is illegal or unconstitutional. The revised version of the bill does virtually nothing to solve this blatant attempt to shield long-standing quotas from any judicial scrutiny. It still closes the courthouse door to persons who were complete strangers to any quota deal signed off on by an employer and the beneficiaries of the quota, so long as these two self-interested parties made "diligent and best," albeit unsuccessful, "efforts" to notify the affected nonminority employee. While "diligent and best efforts" is arguably a slight improvement over the Act's current requirement of "reasonable efforts" to notify affected employees, it still does not cure the basic flaw of denying a person the ability to sue even though that person never received the notice that is an "elementary and fundamental requirement of due process." Mullane v. Central Hanover Bank & Trust Co., 339 U.S. 306, 314 (1950).

Even worse, the revisions, like the current Act, deny access to the courts to a person who was not even born when the quota was installed, so long as some other person "adequately represented" the nonminority plaintiff's interests. The proposed revision here is meaningless because the previous challenge that allegedly "adequately represents" the plaintiff's interest will always be "on the same legal grounds and with a similar factual situation" as the subsequent challenge.

Finally, the revised bill draws an inexplicable distinction between existing and future quota decrees: it holds that those decrees entered within 30 days of enactment are subject to challenge only under the "tougher" standards of the existing Act, while those entered after that time may be challenged under the revised standards just described. This dichotomy drains the revisions of virtually any practical significance and is unsupported by any coherent rationale.

Indeed, the only substantive change in the proposed revisions makes the bill worse. The much ballyhooed concession by the Act's sponsors to change the Price Waterhouse standard from a "motivating factor" to a "contributing factor" is now withdrawn. This, once again the Act penalizes bad thoughts even if they do not have any tangible effect on a civil rights plaintiff.

For these reasons, the various proposed revisions to the bill certainly will not, in response to your specific questions, "reduce the likelihood that employers would be forced to hire workers according to rigid racial and ethnic quotas," or "strike a fair balance between the need to protect our Nation's minorities . . . and the need to protect our Nation's employers from unnecessary litigation " or "restore the meaning of Title VII as it has been interpreted by the Supreme Court in Griggs v. Duke Power Co. and in subsequent cases." Moreover, it remains just as likely, if not more likely, that the Act will lead to "time-consuming and expensive litigation."

Either the revised or the current version of the Act will unquestionably result in a litigation bonanza that will take years to unravel. Juries and judges will be asked to decide questions such as whether an employer has carried his burden of proving [demonstrating, establishing?] that a plaintiff should have to carry its burden of demonstrating that a particular employment practice or group of practices was "responsible for" [even if it did not "cause" or, perhaps, "result in"] a disparate impact [which is nowhere defined but is not satisfied by a "mere statistical imbalance in an employer's workforce," but apparently is satisfied by a statistical imbalance resulting from an employer's practices] such that the employer is required to establish its affirmative defense (rebuttal burden?) of proving, in the case of "employment practices involving selection such as . . . requirements . . . physical characteristics[?]," as opposed to "practices primarily related to a measure of job performance" or "other employment decisions" or "rules relating to methodone [but not other narcotics], alcohol or tobacco," that the practice or group of practices is "required by" or "bears a significant [as opposed to manifest] relationship" [but is not essential] to "successful job performance" [as opposed to "significant (manifest) business objectives"] as shown by "demonstrable evidence," which includes an illustrative, but not comprehensive, list of the "types of evidence [which] is, or is not, in a particular case, sufficient to meet the standards for business necessity . . . as is appropriate under the meaning of 'business necessity' as used in Griggs v. Duke Power Co. . . .," but not under the apparently very different, albeit entirely undefined, standard of Wards Cove, or, alternatively, if the employer shows (on the basis of records that the court has already found were "destroyed" or that the employer "failed to keep") that a "specific employment practice within such group of employment practices is not responsible in whole or significant part for the disparate impact, the respondent shall not be required to demonstrate that such practice is required by business necessity," although perhaps only if the challenged practice was a "motivating," as opposed to a "contributing," factor, in which case an employer must "demonstrate" [as opposed to "establish"] it would have "taken the same action in the absence of any discrimination," all of which is subject to the exception "that an employment practice or group of employment practices demonstrated to be required by business necessity shall be unlawful where a complaining party demonstrates that a different employment practice or group of employment practices with less disparate impact would serve the respondent as well."

Courts must resolve these questions in light of what it thinks Congress believed was the existing state of "disparate impact" law under Griggs, but not Wards Cove, or, presumably, Beazer, although possibly some intervening cases, the state of the law concerning "existing cases involving comparable worth" and in light of Congress' directive that civil rights statutes be "broadly construed to effectuate the purpose of such laws to provide equal opportunity and provide effective remedies," but not so broadly that they would be "construed to require an employer to adopt hiring or promotion quotas" except, of course, for those quotas which are part of "court-ordered remedies, affirmative action, or conciliation agreements that are otherwise in accordance with the law." All these questions must be resolved before the court even reaches the question of remedies or damages, an area that is even more convoluted and contradictory than the rules for liability.

Since the Civil Rights Act of 1990, with or without the proposed revisions, converts Title VII into a law with almost the length, though not the clarity, of the IRS code, and simultaneously increases the potential damages available to a size at which the bar has every incentive to pursue novel legal theories, it will unquestionably lead to an explosion of expensive and drawn-out litigation for those employers foolhardy enough to attempt to defend themselves. The proposed revisions do nothing to ameliorate this problem, nor the more serious and closely related one of effectively mandating racial quotas throughout the Nation's workforce. They therefore leave in place all the concerns that led you to vote against the Act in the first instance.

I hope this has been responsive to your request. Should you need further advice, or further explanation of the foregoing, please do not hesitate to give me a call.

Sincerely,

MICHAEL CARVIN.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I know there has been some very vigorous debate, spirited debate. I know at times in the heat of debate, certain things are said, or inferred, that never should have been inferred or never should have been said.

I must say, as I was in my office this morning, trying to listen to the debate and do something else, I was a little shocked when I heard the distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM], my friend, asked the following question:

> Is the Republican Party truly the party of Lincoln? Or has it become the party of David Duke? That is what the question before us is all about.

This may sum up the debate for my colleague, Senator METZENBAUM. But that statement, in my view, is a new low in an effort to sell this particular legislation, particularly when nine of my colleagues, including this Senator, issued statements supporting a Democrat, Senator BENNETT JOHNSTON, over David Duke in the election just a few days ago.

So, if my friend from Ohio wants to play that kind of a game, he will not get many votes on this side of the aisle. We are proud to be the party of Lincoln. We are not the party of David Duke. If the Senator from Ohio wishes to make this a litmus test, and everything he calls civil rights a litmus test, he can do so. But he has not won any friends on this side of the aisle to even suggest that is the case.

There are a lot of reasons we can disagree. Many of us have different views on many different subjects and sometimes they are not partisan at all.

I must say there are lawyers in this Chamber who I admire and respect and they have much more expertise than I could ever have in determining some of the very fine points that have been discussed over the past months of this legislation. I do not pretend to be an expert.

I consider my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania to be an expert not because he lived in Russell,

KS, my hometown, for a while; not because his brother still lives in Russell, KS; but because he is one of the most able lawyers whom I have ever known. So I respect his opinion and I respect the opinion of my friend from the State of Washington [Mr. GORTON], and many others in the Chamber who really understand the niceties and the fine points that somehow escape the Senator from Kansas.

But it seems to me in the final analysis, there has to be some way to get there. Why should those of us who have never opposed a civil rights bill since we have been in the Congress of the United States be forced to vote against a conference report because we believe there are honest differences that can be resolved? Some have suggested that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle want a political issue. They want President Bush to have a veto civil rights bill so they can go to the civil rights community and voters across America this year, in 1992, whenever, and say, "We told you that President Bush was anti-civil rights." In other words, this is a political vote to some.

I never thought there was much political gain when it came to civil rights, or disability rights, or other basic rights that ought to be accorded to every American, regardless of race, color, creed, disability, whatever. But that is where we are now.

The President has made his statement.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT

Mr. DOLE. Because he has said that he would immediately sign something along the lines of the Kassebaum-Gorton measure, I now move to recommit the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990 to the committee of conference with instructions that the conferees consider the following amendment as a compromise between the disagreeing votes of the two Houses. That amendment, for information purposes, is the Kassebaum-Gorton alternative.

The motion is as follows:

Mr. DOLE moves to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference with instructions that the conferees consider the following amendment as a compromise between the disagreeing votes of the two Houses:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Civil Rights Act of 1990."

SEC. 2. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds that—additional protections and remedies under Federal law are needed to deter unlawful discrimination.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purpose of this Act is—to strengthen existing protections and remedies available under Federal civil rights laws to provide more effective deterrence.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

Section 701 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsections:

"(l) The term 'complaining party' means the Commission, the Attorney General, or a person who may bring an action or proceeding under this title.

"(m) The term 'demonstrates' means meets the burden of production and persuasion.

"(n) The term 'justified by business necessity' means that the challenged practice has a manifest relationship to the employment practice in question or that the respondent's legitimate employment goals are significantly served by—even if they do not require—the challenged practice or group of practices.

"(o) The term 'respondent' means an employer, employment agency, labor organization, joint labor-management committee, controlling apprenticeship or other training or retraining program, including on-the-job training programs, or those Federal entities subject to the provisions of section 717 (or the heads thereof)."

SEC. 4. DISPARATE IMPACT CASES.

Section 703 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-2) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(k) PROOF OF UNLAWFUL EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES IN DISPARATE IMPACT CASES.—

"(1) An unlawful employment practice based on disparate impact is established only when—

"(A) a complaining party identifies a particular employment practice and demonstrates by statistical evidence that that particular employment practice causes a disparate impact on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; and the respondent fails to demonstrate that such practice is justified by business necessity; or

"(B) a complaining party identifies a combination of two or more employment practices and demonstrates by statistical evidence that that combination of two or more employment practices causes a disparate impact on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, and that each employment practice in such combination has contributed to the exclusion; and the respondent fails to demonstrate that such combination would not cause a disparate impact but for employment practices justified by business necessity.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, a rule barring the employment of an individual who currently and knowingly uses or possesses an illegal drug as defined in Schedules I and II of section 102(6) of the Controlled Substances Act (21 U.S.C. 802(6)), other than the use or possession of a drug taken under the supervision of a licensed health care professional, or any other use or possession authorized by the Controlled Substances Act or any other provision under Federal law, shall be considered an unlawful employment practice under this title only if such rule is adopted or applied with an intent to discriminate because of the race, color, religion, sex or national origin except where permitted by 42 U.S.C. 200e-2(i)."

SEC. 5. CLARIFYING PROHIBITION AGAINST IMPERMISSIBLE CONSIDERATION OF RACE, COLOR, RELIGION, SEX OR NATIONAL ORIGIN IN EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 703 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-2) (as amended by section 4) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(m) DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICE NEED NOT BE SOLE CONTRIBUTING FACTOR.—Except as otherwise provided in this title, an unlawful employment practice is established when the complaining party demonstrates that race, color, religion, sex, or national origin was a major contributing factor for any employment practice, even though other factors also contributed to such practice."

(b) ENFORCEMENT PROVISIONS.—Section 706(g) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 2000e-5(g)) is amended by inserting before the period in the last sentence the following: "or, in the case where a violation is esablished under section 703(1), if the respondent establishes that it would have taken the same action in the absence of discrimination.".

SEC. 6 FACILITATING PROMPT AND ORDERLY RESOLUTION OF CHALLENGES TO EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES IMPLEMENTING LITIGATED OR CONSENT JUDGMENTS OR ORDERS.

Section 703 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-2) (as amended by sections 4 and 5) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(n) FINALITY OF LITIGATED OR CONSENT JUDGMENTS OR ORDERS.—

"(1) Nothwithstanding any other provision of law, and except as provided in paragraph (2), an employment practice specifically required by a litigated or consent judgment or order resolving a claim of employment discrimination under this Title may not be challenged in a claim under the United States Constitution or Federal civil rights laws by a person who, at the time of the entry of such judgment or order, was an applicant for employment with or an employee of the entity covered by such decree, whose interests would likely be affected by the consent decree, and who had

"(A) actual notice that such judgment or order would likely affect the interests of such person and that later challenge by such person would be barred; and

"(B) a reasonable opportunity to challenge such judgment or order;

"(2) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to—

"(A) alter the standards for intervention under rule 24 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure;

"(B) apply to the rights of parties to the action in which the litigated or consent judgment or order was entered, or of members of a class represented or sought to be represented in such action, or of members of a group on whose behalf relief was sought in such action by the Federal government; or

"(C) prevent challenges to a litigated or consent judgment or order on the ground that such judgment or order was obtained through collusion or fraud, or is transparently invalid or was entered by a court lacking subject matter jurisdiction.

SEC. 7. EXPANSION OF RIGHT TO CHALLENGE DISCRIMINATORY SENIORITY SYSTEMS.

Section 706(e) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-5(e)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following language—

"For purposes of this section, an alleged unlawful employment practice occurs when a seniority system is adopted, when an individual becomes subject to a seniority system, or when a person aggrieved is injured by the application of a seniority system, or provision thereof, that is alleged to have been adopted for an intentionally discriminatory purpose, in violation of this Title, whether or not that discriminatory purpose is apparent on the face of the seniority provision.".

SEC. 8. PROVIDING FOR ADDITIONAL EQUITABLE RELIEF IN CERTAIN CASES OF INTENTIONAL DISCRIMINATION.

Section 706(g) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-5(g)) is amended by inserting before the last sentence the following new sentences: In fashioning remedies for an unlawful employment practice (other than an unlawful employment practice established in accordance with subsection 703(k)), the court may require the respondent to pay the complaining party an amount not to exceed $100,000 if the court finds that an additional equitable remedy beyond those otherwise available is needed to deter the respondent from continuing to engage in such unlawful employment practices; and (ii) that such an award is otherwise justified by the equities.

All issues in cases arising under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e to 2000e-17) shall be heard and determined by a judge, as specified in section 706(f) of that Title (42 U.S.C. 2000e-5f).

SEC. 9. ALLOWING THE AWARD OF EXPERT FEES.

Section 706(k) of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e-5(k)) is amended by inserting "(including expert fees) and" after "attorney's fee,";

SEC. 10. EXPANSION OF PROTECTIONS AGAINST ALL RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN THE PERFORMANCE OF CONTRACTS.

Section 1977 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (42 U.S.C. 1981) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new language:

"The rights protected by this section are protected against impairment by nongovernmental discrimination as well as against impairment under color of State law. This section affords the same protection against discrimination in the performance, breach, modification or termination of a contract, or in the setting of the terms or conditions thereof, as it does in the making or enforcement of that contract.".

SEC. 11. PROVIDING CIVIL RIGHTS PROTECTIONS TO CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYEES.

Title VII (42 U.S.C. 2000e et seq.) is amended by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 719. CONGRESSIONAL COVERAGE.

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this title, this title shall apply to the Congress of the United States. The means for enforcing this title as the title applies to each House of Congress shall be as determined by the House of Congress.".

SEC. 12. SEVERABILITY.

If any provision of the Act, or an amendment made by this Act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances is held to be invalid, the remainder of this Act and the amendments made by this Act, and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

August 8, 1990.

Mr. ARTHUR A. FLETCHER,
Chairman, U.S. Commission on Civil Rights,
Washington, DC

DEAR ART: Thank you for sending me a copy of the Commission's "Report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990."

Although I have not yet had the opportunity to review the Report, I would like to respond to two points made in your cover letter.

First, you state that "[w]e especially commend the Senate for adopting, as we call for in our report, explicit language clarifying that the bill does not require employers to adopt quotas." As you know, in a last-minute change on the Senate floor, the Kennedy bill was amended to provide that "nothing in the amendments made by this Act shall be construed to require an employer to adopt hiring or promotion quotas on the basis of race, color, religion, sex or national origin."

You do not need to be a lawyer to realize that this language is about as binding as a sense of the Senate resolution. Despite some of the "hype" surrounding the language, it does not in any way "prohibit" employers from adopting quotas. Nor does it address the fact that employers will be "forced" to hire-by-the-numbers simply to avoid expensive and time-consuming lawsuits, lawsuits made even more likely by the prospect of unlimited compensatory and punitive damages.

In an effort to tighten up the so-called "anti-quota" langauge in the bill, I attempted to offer an amendment that specifically prohibited employers and other entities covered by Title VII from adopting or implementing hiring, promotion, or termination quotas. This amendment read as follows:

"Nothing in the amendments made by this Act, or in any statute amended by this Act, shall be construed to require, permit, or result in the adoption or implementation of hiring, promotion, or termination quotas by an employer, employment agency, labor organization, joint labor-management committee controlling apprenticeship or other training programs, or those federal entities subject to the provisions of Section 717 (or the heads thereof), on the basis of race, religion, sex, or national origin."

Unfortunately, Senator Kennedy rejected the amendment out-of-hand, claiming that it was unnecessary in light of the cosmetic change that he had previously made to the bill.

Second, you state that the "Senate has amended the definition of business necessity by adopting a definition that is word-for-word contained in the Griggs decision." As you know, the final version of the Kennedy bill provides that an employment practice is justified by "business necessity" if it "bears a significant relationship to successful performance of the job."

You are absolutely right in pointing out the phrase "significant relationship to successful performance of the job" is contained in the Griggs decision, specifically at 401 U.S. 426.

This phrase, however, is not part of the holding of Griggs. In fact, it can't even be considered judicial dicta, since it is simply a recitation of the question that the Supreme Court was asked to decide by the complaining party in Griggs.

Furthermore, to my knowledge, the phrase "significant relationship to successful performance of the job" has not once—not once—been cited in a subsequent Supreme Court decision interpreting Title VII.

If we are really interested in codifying Griggs, which seems to be everyone's professed aim, then we ought to codify the two definitions of "business necessity" contained in Griggs: a) "manifest relationship to the employment in question (401 U.S. at 432)," or b) "demonstrable relationship to successful peformance of the job (401 U.S. at 431)." Combining these two definitions would be acceptable to me, and I suspect, acceptable to most Republicans. As you probably know, the term "manifest relationship to the employment in question" is the most widely accepted definition of "business necessity," having been cited in numerous subsequent Title VII decisions, including the following Supreme Court decisions: Albermarle Paper Co. v. Moody, Dothard v. Rawlinson, New York Transit Authority v. Beazer, and Connecticut v. Teal.

Art, I hope this letter helps to clarify some of my reservations about the Civil Rights Act of 1990. I am still hopeful that a fair compromise can be achieved, but I do question the willingness of some of the bill's proponents to give up what they perceive to be a winning political issue.

Sincerely,

BOB DOLE.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I will not take a very long time. I see my colleague, Senator JEFFORDS, is on the floor, and I know the Senator from Pennsylvania wants to speak, and perhaps others. I would like to address the substantive issue in the substitute to refresh the recollection of the Members on exactly what the issue is that is before us.

Before doing that, I want to acknowledge the very substantial work of the minority leader, Senator DOLE, in helping this institution, the Senate of the United States, to pass an extremely important and effective legislative remedy to help those who are faced with physical and mental challenge, the Americans With Disabilities Act. I think that will go down as a monumental piece of legislation that will bring some 43 million disabled individuals into the mainstream of American life.

As a member of the Judiciary Committee and Labor Committee, I know Senator DOLE has been very much involved in past pieces of civil rights legislation. I say with all sincerity we certainly would have welcomed his support for this legislation. Those of us who have been involved in a bipartisan way in fashioning the legislation believe that it is certainly consistent both with his own record on civil rights as well as that of the President.

I had stated during the course of the negotiations that in the 28 years I have been here, we have never been as close to reaching a final, successful conclusion on any major piece of legislation as we have on this one without bridging the gaps and reaching a successful conclusion. As he expresses his frustration, I want him and the other Members to know that there is a similar frustration among those of us who have worked on this legislation in a bipartisan way over a long period of time.

We take note that there were 10 Members of the Senator's own party who supported our proposal in its final form previously in the Senate. Subsequently we have made some adjustments and changes to take into consideration the recommendations of the ranking minority member of the Human Resources Committee and also a distinguished member of the Judiciary Committee, Senator HATCH. Senator HATCH is a real leader, principally in opposition to this legislation, but he thought that with a series of changes and alterations, it would no longer be a quota bill. It was not all the things he would desire, but nonetheless it moved the process sufficiently forward to the point where he felt that if the President would support it, he in good conscience, as a matter of principle, could support it as well.

I hope that those who are reviewing the total record, and the give and take of this legislation will note, for instance the early amendments and changes that were made at the request of Senator DANFORTH and others; the continued bipartisan discussions that took place during the course of the summer; the votes that were taken on the floor of the U.S. Senate on the Wilks case and other actions that were taken and important efforts that were made by our colleagues, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. PRYOR], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. BOREN], and others, and a number of recommendations that were made by our colleagues on the opposite side. I would hope that such a review would produce an understanding that there was a very sincere desire by all of those who have been very much involved in the shaping and the fashioning of this legislation that we would have a bipartisan measure.

As I have stated and I think all of those who supported the measure have stated previously, it was our earnest hope that we would be able to have the President's endorsement of this measure. It was out of that consideration, as well as to respond to some of the suggestions made by Members, that we reconvened the conference and made the changes that the Senator from Utah desired.

Nonetheless, we find ourselves where we are this afternoon. We find ourselves in the final hours of this session. This has been an ongoing long and continuing journey. It is time to end discrimination against American workers, whether their skin is white or black, whether they are women or men, whether they have been discriminated against for religious or ethnic reasons—bias in the workplace is unacceptable.

We are talking about simple justice. When this Nation fought the bloody battles in the American Civil War, it was to try and free us from one form of discrimination. That was discrimination based on race. We have seen now the discrimination that exists against women in our society, in the work force in terms of sexual harassment, and in terms of other forms of discrimination. We have found discrimination against those with disabilities. We believe that the simple cause of justice in America, to try and ensure the words "equal justice under law," means we have a continuing responsibility to proceed in that torturous path leading away from the time 200 years ago when the Founding Fathers actually enshrined slavery in the Constitution. That is really what motivated this legislation.

Mr. President, I want to speak very briefly about the substance of the substitute and then to yield the floor for others who want to speak on the issue.

The substitute that has been proposed is not the civil rights bill that our country needs. It does not provide the protections against job discrimination that the working people of our country deserve.

The proposed substitute does not repair the damage which the Supreme Court did last year. In fact, in several areas, it would actually enact into law some of the devastating rules of law announced in these decisions. It would gut this important civil rights legislation.

The section of the substitute addressing Wards Cove versus Atonio actually adopts rather than overruling key elements of that decision's harmful holding that makes it far more difficult for victims of discrimination to prevail in disparate impact cases.

For 18 years, under Griggs versus Duke Power, employers had the burden of proving that practices with a discriminatory impact were justified by business necessity. More than 200 decisions over those 18 years confirmed this fundamental truth.

The substitute would adopt the weakened standards of business necessity used in the Wards Cove decision. It allows any practice—no matter how devastating the impact on women or minorities—to continue as long as it serves some "legitimate employment goals," the same standard the Court used in Wards Cove. Even well-known conservative Judge Richard Posner recognized that the Wards Cove decision diluted the Griggs standard for business necessity. We cannot allow this diluted standard to remain as a barrier to equal opportunity.

One of the most distressing portions of the substitute is the section which addresses the issue of remedies under title VII. Under current law, racial minorities, who can sue under section 1981 of the Civil Rights Act of 1866, can obtain damages for employment discrimination; women and religious minorities, who can sue only under title VII, cannot. This leaves many victims of discrimination without any remedy at all; a victim of sexual harassment may be left without recourse—and may even have to pay the court costs of her harasser.

The substitute claims to address this problem by permitting judges to award up to $100,000 as an equitable remedy in cases where backpay cannot be awarded.

Unfortunately, there are several problems. First, the section is flatly unconstitutional. Under the seventh amendment, in a case where damages may be awarded, the parties have a right to demand a jury trial. No matter what label the substitute would put on its remedy, the Supreme Court would call it damages. And if you can obtain damages in a Federal court—in any amount—you have a constitutional right to a jury trial.

The Justice Department recognized this fundamental fact; they even challenged the constitutionality of fair housing legislation in 1987 on the ground that it did not permit a jury trial in administrative proceedings where damages could be awarded. I previously inserted in the RECORD a memorandum prepared by the Office of Legal Counsel at the Justice Department to that effect.

An unconstitutional remedies provision which would be thrown out of court at its first challenge is no remedies provision at all.

The substitute also fails to address the problem created by the Supreme Court's decision in Lorance versus AT&T Technologies. In the Lorance decision, the Supreme Court unfairly limited the time in which employees could challenge a discriminatory seniority system. Although Lorance can be—and has already been—applied outside of the seniority context, the substitute deals only with seniority systems. This leaves a hole in our civil rights laws through which many workers might fall.

The substitute would also permit disruptive collateral attacks on consent decrees. It does not counteract the damage caused by the Supreme Court decision in Martin versus Wilks. In that decision, the Court laid open to infinite challenges every consent decree settling job discrimination cases. The substitute allows such attacks under virtually all of the same circumstances as Wilks; it carves out only a narrow exception to the rule that anyone who wants to can challenge a consent decree after the fact, no matter how much due process they were accorded. Because of this, it does not provide the finality that businesses need.

In short, our legislation would adopt the Griggs rule; the substitute would codify Wards Cove. Our legislation would give a meaningful remedy to women and religious minorities who suffer intentional discrimination on the job; the substitute would provide a meaningless, unconstitutional remedy. Our legislation would provide both full procedural protections and finality with respect to consent decrees; the substitute would permit endless challenges to those decrees.

Senators who wish to overrule Wards Cove, codify Griggs, and restore fundamental fairness to working men and women should vote to table the motion to recommit.

Mr. GRASSLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, I thank the Chair for the opportunity to speak on this point.

I oppose this last gasp effort by those who have mistaken racial and gender quotas for what ought to be true civil rights and equal opportunity. It pains me to have to say this but despite its attractive title, this bill has little to do with civil rights and equal opportunity but much to do with equal outcomes based upon group entitlement. Most assuredly, it would not end discrimination in the workplace. That can end, in this Senator's humble opinion, only when we end it in each of our hearts. The latest incarnation before us is a product of yet another of the too infrequent back room, closed-door meetings arranged by the insiders and power brokers throughout this town. Unfortunately, it seems that both Republicans and Democrats are doing very little of the public's business in public these days.

Like the budget summit deal, this back-alley deal with civil rights is mostly blue smoke, ambiguity piled upon uncertainty, piled upon legalese, with little consequence for those who expressed genuine concern when this bill was first up on the floor back in July. Instead, this bill, if enacted, would aggravate the resentment and the tensions that are growing too fast in our American society by enshrining a system of quota hiring and job promotion in virtually every workplace in America. The proponents will hasten to tell us—they have done it so many times already today—that nothing in this bill would "require or encourage an employer to adopt hiring or promotion quotas." But as we have pointed out repeatedly, the trouble with the bill is not that it explicitly "encourages" or in fact "requires" quotas. Rather, it will inevitably lead to that result as a way for employers to attempt to avoid certain litigation.

Just because the proponents say they do not want it to happen does not mean that it will not happen that way. Worse, it would ensure costly and protracted litigation over proportional representation in the workplace. At the same time, it ironically shuts the door on others denied opportunity precisely because of their race or gender.

Almost 40 years ago, we shook off the chains of "separate but equal." This bill introduces another odious concept: "unequal but benign."

Civil rights bills were not always like this. There was always a consensus in the past. That is because past laws, whether it be the 1964 Act or the Voting Rights Act of 1965 or Fair Housing Act of 1968—all of these were premised on nondiscrimination. Any selection scheme that was race or gender conscious was to be condemned and was so condemned.

But the conference report before us turns this time-honored doctrine upside down for it is entirely race conscious. It presumes that any racial, gender, religious, or ethnic imbalance or "disparity" in the workplace is unlawful. What is more, no employer can avoid liability by pointing to merit selection as a defense to the charge of disparate impact. Rather, only if the existing work force imbalance due to any employment practice or group of practice as can be shown—"substantially and demonstrably"—to be a matter of business necessity can it then legally continue. In all other circumstances, the bill insists on proportionality—on hiring and promoting by the numbers.

This turns civil rights enforcement over to the statisticians and the numbers crunchers. Not so, say the proponents: "We're just restoring the law to the way it was after the 1971 decision in Griggs, they say, and Griggs didn't lead to quotas, did it?"

The answer is we do not know. And moreover, we are asking the wrong question because the conference report does not use Griggs language. The Griggs test for business necessity is "manifest relationship to the employment in question." This language is nowhere to be seen in the conference report.

Finally, the last 18 years did not have the additional grab-bag full of goodies of the conference report.

Unlike the conference report now before us, Griggs did not demand work force parity as to race, gender, religion, and national origin, unless allowed by business necessity. Rather, it correctly recognized that while the statistical makeup of a work force may have some relevance in a title VII case, it was only one of several factors to consider. The burden of proof—as in all civil cases—is on the plaintiff.

In addition, the imbalance under Griggs must be linked to some employer misconduct before it assumes legal significance. An employer's competing evidence that the employment decision was based on merit was always—up to now—a good defense.

Thus all the incentives under Griggs point toward merit hiring and promotion. The conference report, by contrast, tells employers that merit selection is insufficient to justify numerical imbalances in the work force; such imbalances must be compelled by a so-called significant relationship to successful job performance, with the burden of proof on the employer—not by the employer's opinion, but rather by "demonstrable evidence"—a burden that cannot be met.

Thus all of the incentives move in precisely the opposite direction from Griggs—also reported to us here on the Senate floor——toward group affiliations, rather than individual character, and toward equality of results, not equal opportunity.

Let us be clear on who are the real winners under this conference report: They happen to be the lawyers of America. If this bill becomes the law, a law degree becomes a license to print money. Perhaps that is acceptable to a Chamber where two-thirds of the Members are lawyers, but it is not acceptable to this Senator.

An orgy of litigation will surely follow enactment of this bill, because it is a plaintiff lawyer's dream: Jury trials, compensatory and punitive damages, and of course, unlimited attorney's fees.

By the way, though this bill is styled as a response to a handful—I believe five or six—of Supreme Court decisions, ask the proponents to tell you what cases they are overturning with the addition of compensatory and punitive damages.

Twenty-five years of resolving complaints under a workable conciliation and negotiation process are thrown overboard, transformed into an engine of litigation—costly, protracted litigation which will toss most claimants into an inescapable judicial gridlock.

One wonders if the proponents have checked the dockets of the Federal district courts lately. These new title VII cases are not going to go to trial anytime soon, and the proponents ought to know it, because every district court in America is choked with priority criminal and drug cases.

But the lawyers—who are involved in these cases and in future cases—can worry not. Their every prayer is answered by the conference report. It is a loaded gun with which to extort favorable settlements.

Mr. President, let me get back to the low end of the food chain—the lawyers of America. The bill permits recovery of attorney's fees in title VII cases, incurred after the rejection of a settlement offer which exceeds the plaintiff's ultimate judgment, thus overturning civil procedure rule 68, and a 5-year-old decision by Justice Stevens. This is a bald incentive for plaintiffs and their lawyers to keep litigating.

The bill prohibits a party from waiving an attorney fee award in exchange for a favorable settlement in a title VII case, thus making the interests of settlement, and the victim, come secondary to the lawyer's fee.

The bill even permits the recovery of legal fees from original title VII defendants in actions by third party intervenors, overturning yet another case the proponents never mention.

Mr. President, let me illustrate this one, because this is one of the so-called improvements in the conference report.

Suppose a plaintiff sues an employer for discrimination. They settle on terms agreeable to both sides. Then later, a third party, such as a union, unsuccessfully challenges the settlement, saying it disturbed its seniority rules. Under current law, everybody pays their own lawyer—employee, union and employer. Under current law, losing intervenors like the union pay legal fees for the winner only if their action was frivolous.

The conference report changes all that, but with a particularly perverse twist. It says that the original plaintiff can recover legal fees incurred defending the settlement, not against the intervenor, like the union, who caused the suit, but against the blameless employer. Thus the employer pays the plaintiff lawyer both in the original case and potentially every time thereafter. If you are a plaintiff's lawyer, it just does not get any better than this. If you are an employer, you can never breathe easy.

But wait, there is yet another unmentioned supreme court case that the conference report overturns. The result is to uncap recovery for so-called expert witness fees in title VII cases and allow recovery of actual fees, regardless of how exorbitant they might be.

Hard to believe, Mr. President, but there is even more to this conference report: It gratuitously extends the statute of limitations in title VII cases from 6 months to 2 years. Moreover, it provides that the statute runs not from the time of the alleged illegality, but from the time of its alleged bad effect, whichever is later, thus overturning not one, but three more Supreme Court cases.

Stale claims are thus encouraged, even to the detriment of all other employees, who have been accruing seniority in the meantime.

At the same time, it would slam the courthouse door shut on those alleging that an affirmative action settlement violated their constitutional rights, even when they lacked notice of the original settlement.

Finally, it allows employers to be held liable for damages—even punitive damages—not because of anything they said or did, but simply for the thoughts that passed through their minds, even when these thoughts were not the cause of the employment action taken. This is a preemptive strike against impure thinking, and it reverses a decision by Justice Brennan in so-called mixed motive cases. Thus, I hope everybody in this body realizes that even decisions by a liberal icon get savaged, if the reasoning suggests anything less than total plaintiff victory. As our own Attorney General has pointed out, this section is now worse than it was before.

I have to mention one final irony of this conference report that offends me deeply, Mr. President. In the Senate, as you will recall, because it was a very hotly debated item, the only amendment adopted in July was one by the Senator from Kentucky that gutted my landmark amendment to the ADA, to finally, after many decades of civil rights legislation, apply the civil rights laws to the Senate, and to give Senate employees and prospective employees the same rights in court that every other American has.

Thus, this so-called civil rights bill actually takes away the hard-fought civil rights we had won for these employees in conference on the ADA. It is enough to make one ask: "What kind of a civil rights bill is this?"

The President has said he will veto this bill, despite the cosmetic surgery of the inside operators. Ironically, this may well suit some of the proponents, who may think they benefit more from a veto than a bill anyway. If the President vetoes this bill, I predict we in the Senate will sustain him. And at that time, I hope the President seizes the opportunity to set out clearly a new agenda for civil rights in the 1990's and beyond; an agenda that focuses on economic liberties for all Americans, and the right to live and prosper in a crime-free and drug-free neighborhood, the most important civil right of all.

Mr. President, let me leave you with one idea which might more accurately reflect a true restoration of civil rights. It challenges the special interests of this bill. It would require us to repeal a law passed in 1931. With this law, you do not even need to resort to disparate impact to see how harmful it is to minorities, or to guess about a bad motive. With this law, the sponsors spelled out their discriminatory intent right in the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of 1931.

It seems that the proponents of this law, the Davis-Bacon Act, did not like the idea of black workers competing with white workers. Congressman Bacon introduced the act after an Alabama contractor won a bid to build a hospital in his district. In the debate Bacon stated:

> The bid was let to a firm from Alabama who brought some thousand non-union laborers into my congressional district.

A key supporter of the bill, Representative Allgood chimed in on the House floor:

> That contractor has cheap colored labor * * * in competition with white labor * * * this bill has merit * * * it is very important that we enact this measure.

Ever since, Davis-Bacon has, unfortunately, worked to raise the cost of Federal construction jobs, and it also shut out minority contractors from bidding on Government contracts. Do not take my word for it, Mr. President. Ask Ralph Thomas, the executive director of the National Association of Minority Contractors. As he put it:

> The law is poison to minority contractors and to minority employment in general * * * the law stifles minority contractors' efforts to not only hire as many minority workers as possible, but also hinders minority contractors' efforts to introduce new workers to the construction fields."

Let me suggest to my colleagues that we will know we are in a new age of civil rights, when we vote on bills to end this type of overt discrimination. I look forward to the day when our discussion of civil rights encompasses all of our civil rights.

I yield the floor.

Mr. JEFFORDS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Thank you. I listened carefully to the Senator from Iowa. I say that I disagree with many of the issues that he has stated and raised. However, the time is short, and I will be brief.

I will say that there is, obviously, considerable confusion over what this bill does. In fact, even the sponsor of the substitute for the recommit motion, which the administration has agreed to would be at odds with the Senator from Iowa. There is considerable confusion over the use of the term "quotas." I think the most obvious confusion is the reference which the Senator from Iowa alluded to in the latter part of his talk about quotas or affirmative action type programs. This has nothing to do with that. Those are contracts through the Federal Government wherein there is an affirmative action required to reduce discrimination. This has nothing to do with that.

What it does have to do with is the question of what happens when a business decides that it will have a hiring practice which is not related to the performance of the job, but which, innocently perhaps, or at least on its face innocently, results in discrimination against a group. Quotas in the term used, for instance, are illegal. You could not do as the Senator from Iowa suggested—hire according to quotas. That is a violation.

This country is based upon equal opportunity. Every person ought to have an equal opportunity to get a job. That is what the basis is here. To insist that a quota is filled without consideration of equal opportunity would be a violation of the law, a violation of title VII. That is a confusion which rings around this bill. The Hatch substitute, which was adopted in the conference committee, goes out of its way to ensure that we are not referring to quotas.

Let me just run through, very briefly, the substitute which is being offered. This was basically the same substitute which Members voted for and defeated at the time the bill was up for action.

It does have some changes, for instance, on the burden of proof issue which the Senator from Iowa alluded to. It is not as stated. The burden of proof is on the complainant in these cases. It only shifts to the employer when it appears that there is a discrimination taking place and the business necessity defense is used. There it does shift. Everyone agrees that it shifts, including the substitute here, that it shifts then to the employer.

With respect to the Price Waterhouse situation, where someone is discriminated against in promotion, there is a little difference now between the two bills, the one which is being offered as a substitute here and the one that is being offered. The old language, a major contributing fact for any employing practice, is used in the substitute from Hatch, substitute motivating factor. If there is a difference, I am not sure what it is.

The other changes also are not significant. In the Lorance case, it admits the system should be changed, but limits to the seniority system rather than broadening to all systems.

With respect to the critical question of disparate impact for women, it takes a much different tack, which would result in the minds of those who have studied this issue, constitutional solution, by saying you do not have to have a trial by jury for compensatory damages. And that is by an Attorney General opinion back when the housing bill was stated, that such a compensation without a jury trial is unconstitutional.

It is also different where it treats women differently by racial majority, by capping compensatory damages at $100,000. That is not disparate, not someone who may have suffered hundreds of thousands of dollars of damages as a result of harassment, or whatever. There is no problem, no difference between the two with respect to the Patterson case, which was alluded to which was an 1866 case. There is nothing there. Where are the differences? We are right back at the same one we have with the administration and that basically was the Wards Cove case.

As I went into some length this morning indicating the problems with that, basically it is this: If you want to go away from a hiring practice which is substantially related to the employment aspects, performance of the job, then you have to show a business necessity for it, and what is allowed is the question.

We have argued and argued and argued and agreed that some exemptions should be allowed. If it is a plant closing matter, we agreed that exemptions could be allowed. If you close one plant that has more women than men, blacks or whites, or whatever, you have created an unlawful situation as far as disparate impact conduct. We went on to say the same as bankruptcy. We agreed on another loophole. We agreed on a loophole for the question of drug usage, alcohol, and tobacco. There are some more loopholes, but that was not enough.

It is wide open after that, according to the administration proposal in that anything, including all sorts of health care cost issues and things which women are deeply concerned about, discrimination against single parents and heads of households on health cost issues, all these matters are allowed under the option suggested by the administration.

I think this is a way, and I remain eternally optimistic that we can find a solution. Yes, we have carefully delineated compensation in the proposal we have here. But it is wide open in the administration proposal.

It is possible we could look and go the other way and say let us agree on things that should not be in here. I have discussed some of these with the administration. We saw we do not want to include those. You are right, we should not allow those things to occur. It may be possible if we sit down and say OK, these are specifically allowed and these are specifically now allowed and perhaps allow some wiggle room, as the expression goes, in between.

I wanted to just say, in concluding here, that in my mind we have done as good a job as possible. You just take a look at the results of the votes in the last conference committee. Both the right and the left fell off. We just barely had a majority to get out of the conference committee. That, to me, indicates that we have reached that kind of a solution that is one that we can and should live with, where you have the middle ground, where you have neither side, the right nor the left, happy with the solution.

This is what we bring to you today. It is not perfect. We may be able to improve it. But to me it is more important at this point that we move forward to stop the discrimination which will be allowed under the present situation which we are under right now. I urge my colleagues to vote against the motion to recommit and to support the conference report.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BRYAN). The Senator from Washington [Mr. GORTON] is recognized.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, Morris Abram, who is a permanent representative to the United Nations in Geneva, was Vice Chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights from 1984 to 1986. He was also one of the earliest and bravest of the fighters for civil rights in the South at a time in which that was not only a matter which was likely to cost one monetarily and within one's profession, but at a time at which it also would cause risk to life and limb.

Mr. Abram has written an essay which appeared a month or so ago in the Wall Street Journal, from which I would like to quote the initial paragraph.

> If I were still practicing law, I would love the Kennedy-Hawkins Bill—the so-called "Civil Rights Act of 1990." It may enrich contingency fee lawyers. But it will also impoverish the principle of equality of all Americans. All my life, beginning in the darkest days of segregation in my home state of Georgia, I have fought against the principle of color preference, then known as "white supremacy." This bill institutionalizes color preference under the false flag of civil rights. It is not a civil rights bill. It is a quota bill that will achieve precisely what the landmark 1984 Civil Rights Act stood foursquare against.

I will return to Mr. Abram's article a bit later in my remarks on the motion to recommit the substitute, the Kassebaum-Gorton proposal, for this one.

I should like to begin my own remarks by saying that this debate, this difference of opinion takes place on three distinct levels. The first and most philosophic of those levels is whether or not we now find in the Civil Rights Act of 1964 with its broad and sweeping requirements of equality of treatment and nondiscrimination on the basis of race, ethnicity, sex, and the like, still to state the American dream and the American goal, or whether we feel that our problems are so great that we need a series of quotas, that the primary factors and the primary characteristic of each American is another part of a hyphen rather than simply being an American.

The second level on which this proposal is being debated is what, in fact, the effect of the Kennedy-Hawkins bill as it has been amended by the committee of conference will be on the state of law in the United States.

From the very beginning of this debate, from the initial draft of Kennedy-Hawkins, it has been advertised that it simply seeks to restore the status quo of some previous time. It is sometimes stated to be the intention of the authors of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, more frequently stated to be the state of the law in the early 1970's when a decision under the title of Griggs was handed down by the Supreme Court, but clearly designed to reverse at least some aspects of a number of decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States since the early 1970's dealing with the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

These differences of opinion exist on a number of levels and they are treated in a number of different ways by this motion to recommit. But clearly, the single level of difference which is most important to the American people on which has been concentrated some 90 percent of the attention in the public press and, for that matter, in the private sector, has been the question as to whether or not this bill as it was originally, or as it is drafted, as it appears before us now, encourages or mandates the use of quotas in hiring decisions on the part of employers across the United States.

The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts says that that issue has been laid to rest by the conference committee in adding an express section stating that nothing in this act requires quotas.

Mr. President, I submit to you that that addition is totally and completely meaningless. As far as I know, no Member of the Senate at any time, even with the very drastic and far-reaching original version of Kennedy-Hawkins, made the claim that it require quotas. Of course it does not. No one in the professional civil rights community would make an attempt to do that in so many words, given the negative attitude of the American people toward quotas.

The true question in this connection is whether or not the complex and convoluted language, either of the original bill or of the bill as it appears before us today, makes the imposition of quotas by employers nearly inevitable. In that respect, Mr. President, I submit that it did when it was introduced and that it does today.

The question revolves around two rather obscure terms, one entitled business necessity and the other the question of particularity with respect to employment practices.

Mr. President, neither of those phrases, to the best of my knowledge, appears in the Civil Rights Act of 1964. As I have already stated, that act is in broad and general terms and simply prohibits discrimination in employment. I believe that that general language was wise in 1964 and is equally wise today.

In our system, we have a series of Federal courts the duty of which it is to interpret the statutes which we write and to apply them to the myriad of specific situations and precise controversies which come before those courts. And in the course of settling those controversies, a body of law goes up which gives guidance to individuals, employers and employees, as to what the law requires. It is literally impossible here for Members of this body or of the House of Representatives to anticipate every kind of controversy which will arise out of any of our acts, and most particularly those relating to civil rights. The more we attempt to nail down every specific instance, the more we are likely to miss important points and to create unintended consequences, and most particularly to encourage endless litigation.

So it is the definition of business necessity primarily as it has been interpreted and established by the Supreme Court of the United States which this bill is designed to change. It states very explicitly in the language of the bill itself that it is meant to codify the meaning of business necessity as used in Griggs versus Duke Power Co., a Supreme Court case to which I have already referred, and overrule the treatment of business necessity as a defense in the Supreme Court case of Wards Cove Packing Co. versus Atonio.

One of the grave differences between the bill and the motion to recommit is just how much in that Wards Cove case ought to be reversed. It has been the position of the administration and of this Senator that a portion of that decision which dealt with the burden of proof shifting that burden from the employer to the employee was to a certain degree at least inequitable and could appropriately be reversed.

This bill, however, expressly proposes to reverse the decision of the Supreme Court at that time in the Wards Cove case with respect to its definition of "business necessity." Well, what is it that the Supreme Court said in that section? I have not heard it discussed, expressly or explicitly, previously during the course of this debate or on the debate of the earlier bill.

In speaking of business necessity, the Supreme Court said this:

> Though we have phrased the query differently in different cases, it is generally well established that at the justification stage of a disparate impact case the dispositive issue is whether a challenged practice serves in a significant way the legitimate employment goals of the employer.

And for that proposition it cites the very Griggs decision which this bill purportedly restores.

The Supreme Court goes on to say:

> The touchstone of this inquiry is a reasoned review of the employer's justification for his use of the challenged practice. A mere insubstantial justification in this regard will not suffice because such a low standard of review would permit discrimination to be practiced through the use of spurious, seemingly neutral, employment practices. At the same time, though, there is no requirement that the challenged practice be essential or indispensable to the employer's business for it to pass muster. This degree of scrutiny would be almost impossible for most employers to meet and would result in a host of evils we have identified above.

Mr. President, it is curious, but not accidental, that it is exactly that standard—a standard almost impossible for employers to meet—which was expressly included in the original Kennedy-Hawkins bill. The design of Kennedy-Hawkins was to create a standard employers could not meet; a standard which would result in success on the part of plaintiffs in almost every case, whether justified or not.

It is, of course, true that since the introduction of that bill, the description or definition of business necessity has grown longer, less precise, and perhaps, I would say, more subject to misinterpretation, and more encouraging of litigation.

We now have a definition of business necessity which is some 36 lines long, and which I submit, Mr. President, cannot be interpreted identically by any two lawyers who look into it, and cannot be interpreted adequately by any employer seeking to determine what it is the law requires or the law permits.

In addition, Mr. President, in almost every case which has reached the courts since the Civil Rights Act of 1964, there has been at least the allegation on the part of the employee, that a particular business practice or particularly identified business practices have resulted in a disparate impact and, therefore, in that potential employee not being hired.

Here, again, we move in the direction that Mr. Abram so eloquently denounced under the standards of this act. Here we say that once an employee, once a complaining party, has proved that the employee mix in a particular employer's plant is not reflective of the demographics of the area from which those employees are drawn, there is a disparate impact, and that disparate impact itself will require a demonstration that any of the practices which have any relation to it be justified on the difficult business necessity standard, which I have already set out.

There is one exception in this bill to that subject, and that is that the complaining party shall be required to demonstrate which specific practice or practices are responsible for the disparate impact in all cases, unless the employer has destroyed records—and that is a perfectly justified exception to the rule—or that there are not total and complete records which have ever been kept to show what those business practices were.

The net result is to remove this exception; it is to make the exception swallow up the rule in its entirety and to change the system of litigation in which, generally speaking, an identification of some practice which resulted in disparate impact had an impact on the hiring or nonhiring of the employee to simply a general allegation, which will require the employer to defend each and every one of these employment practices as being justified or required, in the terms of this statute by business necessity.

What does that mean? It means that originally employers simply would not have been able to defend the standard of essentiality, as the Kennedy-Hawkins bill has originally been written. As it has been modified, some employers clearly will be able to establish that their employment practices are required by business necessity.

Generally speaking, in such a lawsuit, they will only do so at the end of long and protracted and risky litigation, much riskier than has been the case under the Civil Rights Act of 1964, because now it is replete with jury trials and lawyers who have available to them unlimited compensatory damages and punitive damages and the like. But, clearly, some employers who are willing to carry these cases on long enough, and are willing to risk an adverse verdict from a jury, will be able to prevail.

But, Mr. President, what rational employer is going to want to take that risk or undergo that expense? Very few. The only way to protect totally and completely and safely against the risk of such litigation is, in fact, to have a body of employees which reflects or mirrors precisely the composition of the surrounding population. In other words, Mr. President, if this bill becomes law, it will not require quotas. Employers will impose quotas in order to keep from being sued, probably successfully, but in any case, expensively, in case, after case, after case.

Moreover, Mr. President, in any event, even for the employer who is careful enough in his recordkeeping to be able to state that his practices were required by business necessity, we will move drastically away from a system in which hiring decisions are based on merit because, Mr. President, under this bill, once a complaining employee—or a complaining potential employee—can show that he or she was qualified, it will not be a defense that the employer thought that the person who was hired was more qualified.

Once minimum qualification levels have been reached, an employer will, for all practical purposes, be forced to take that potential employee who lessens whatever disparate impact is, rather than to increase it. We will move sharply away from a system which is based on merit.

There are other major elements to this proposal, only a few of which I wish to cover at this point. I do want to get back, however, to the motion to recommit. The Kassebaum-Gorton bill was discussed at length during the time at which the Senate debated the passage of this bill in its original form. It did not come to a vote at that time, and it was not perfected at that time. As the President will remember, there was a major objection on this side of the aisle to the immediate attempt, after bringing up the bill, to limit debate in time and to limit amendments to those which were entirely germane.

This side of the aisle reacted by barring the modification of the original bill in ways in which its sponsors wished and they retaliated by refusing to agree to changes in the Kassebaum-Gorton proposal with which the Senator from Kansas and I agreed.

The net consequence of that is the Kassebaum-Gorton bill, which was criticized by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts a few moments ago, was not what it is in this motion to recommit. Because our initial vote will be on Kassebaum-Gorton itself, I wish to discuss for a few minutes the precise ways in which it differs from the Kennedy-Hawkins bill, which is the subject of this conference report.

Like Kennedy-Hawkins, the Kassebaum bill would address the Supreme Court's decisions in both the Patterson and the Lorance cases. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts said it did not address Lorance. It very clearly does. That was an oversight in the earlier draft of this proposal. It has been corrected in this one.

Those two proposals would ensure that on-the-job racial harassment is covered by section 1981 of the Civil Rights Act and that individuals who may not have been employed by a company at the time it adopted the discriminatory seniority system will still be allowed to challenge it once they do start to work there.

Both of those proposals, incidentally, for the first time, cover the Congress of the United States.

There are, however, major differences between Kassebaum-Gorton and Kennedy-Hawkins. Each would shift the burden of proof, as it was established in the Wards Cove decision, to the defendant in important elements of litigation arising out of discrimination claims. On two other points, however, the Kassebaum-Gorton proposal much more faithfully reflects established case law than does Kennedy-Hawkins, and is much less likely to drive employers to use quotas.

With respect to the definition of "business necessity," the Kassebaum-Gorton proposal codifies the standards taken from Griggs and the Beazer case in the Supreme Court in precisely the way in which those tests were formulated by the Supreme Court of the United States. I have found it curious and without adequate explanation, that during all of the months we have debated this bill, during all of the time that the proponents of Kennedy-Hawkins have said it proposes to codify Griggs, they have, nevertheless, refused to utilize the language which is the principal holding in Griggs itself. Their use of different language inevitably calls for a different result, not for the codification of Griggs but for something much more strict.

In this connection, Kassebaum-Gorton simply takes the definition of "business necessity" from the Griggs decision and places it in statute law. So if the goals originally announced for Kennedy-Hawkins are the codification of Griggs, Kassebaum-Gorton does it; Kennedy-Hawkins does not.

I have already discussed the difference with respect to the language of Wards Cove on the subject of business necessity. Wards Cove does not reverse Griggs. It cites Griggs; it builds on Griggs. In fact, in the long set of negotiations which have been unsuccessful so far involving the administration and the sponsors of Kennedy-Hawkins, the administration has even offered to take some of the language of the dissent in the Wards Cove case, which in our view, in that respect at least, is entirely consistent, both with Griggs and with the majority position in Wards Cove. That offer, too, has been turned down.

We have been told continuously, since this bill was introduced, that the Wards Cove decision, which is a relatively recent vintage, simply destroyed the Civil Rights Act of 1964, and the disparate impact cases could no longer be won by plaintiffs because the standards were so difficult.

Mr. President, even with no changes in the Wards Cove decision, even without the change or shifting of the burden of proof, which is included in Kassebaum-Gorton, there have been 27 major Federal court decisions since the Wards Cove decision came down by lower courts, who were obligated to follow the document of the Wards Cove Supreme Court decision.

So far, 12 of those cases have been won by plaintiffs, the complaining employees or their representatives; 13 by defendants; and 2 have been remanded for further action. That is roughly the same 50 percent batting average for plaintiffs which plaintiffs had before the Wards Cove decision was rendered by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Nothing could more dramatically illustrate the proposition that Wards Cove has not sounded the death knell to the enforcement of the Civil Rights Act. It has not sounded the death knell even to disparate impact cases itself. It is, in fact, an outgrowth of and totally consistent with prior decisions, including Griggs.

There are, of course, a number of other subjects which are dealt with in both versions of this bill, though they have not created as great a degree of attention as has Wards Cove and the entire question of quotas.

Both bills, for example, deal with the Supreme Court's decision in a case called Martin versus Wilks. The Kassebaum-Gorton bill, however, denies to no individual his or her day in court, his or her right to challenge a judgment or consent decree as discriminatory, unless the individual was an applicant or current employee, had actual notice, both that a practice specifically required by the judgment or decree would be likely to affect his or her interests, and that a later challenge would be precluded, or had a reasonable opportunity to challenge such a judgment or an order.

Many such people are denied any such right to challenge a decree adversely affecting them when they have no part and no opportunity to challenge it at an earlier time by the Kennedy-Hawkins proposal.

With respect to the Supreme Court's decision in Price-Waterhouse, both bills overturned that decision insofar as it would allow proven discriminators to escape litigation. The Kassebaum-Gorton proposal considers the consideration of race, ethnicity, religion, or sex to be a major contributing factor as opposed to the Kennedy-Hawkins proposal that it be a mere motivating factor to establish and require liability.

The significance of this is the Kennedy-Hawkins bill may well create liability for an employer even when discrimination did not cause the wrong about which the plaintiff is suing. The result reached in Price-Waterhouse is as favorable or more favorable to plaintiffs than what had been adopted by the vast majority of U.S. circuit courts of appeals.

Unsurprisingly, since Price-Waterhouse, all but 2 of 13 decisions have been favorable to plaintiffs. It is obviously not necessary to protect the rights of plaintiffs, that we do what the Kennedy-Hawkins bill counsels.

Finally, with respect to damages, we are dealing with a subject which represents, if anything, a more profound change in the direction of the law than do the substantive provisions.

With respect to remedies, title 7 in the 1964 Civil Rights Act depends primarily on conciliation, on the work of administrative bodies in attempting to right wrongs which have been committed.

The so-called Civil Rights Act of 1990 lurches—it does not simply turn; it lurches—dramatically in the direction of controversy and litigation. At a time when many thoughful people in our society question the adverse impact on our society of widespread litigation on product liability and on medical malpractice, this proposal provides, once again, a bonanza for trial lawyers.

It discourages settlements. It calls for attorneys fees to be awarded to successful plaintiffs, even when they have turned down a settlement which would offer them more than their eventual winning litigation offers to them. It vastly increases the risks to employers, and it vastly increases the length of time during which employees will receive an answer to their claims.

Again, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts misstated the impact of the bill. The bill with respect to harassment, which the Senator stated granted a payment in lieu of damages only where back pay could not be awarded, simply does not state the case. That is changed.

The court may require the respondent, our proposal states, to pay the complaining party in an amount not to exceed $100,000 if the court finds that an additional equitable remedy, beyond those otherwise available, is needed to deter the respondent from continuing to engage in unlawful employment practices, and that such award is otherwise justified by the inequities.

Mr. President, there is widespread precedent of the constitutionality of such an award in equity. The distinguished Senator from Massachusetts claims it to be blatantly unconstitutional. The Attorney General of the United States believe this provision to be constitutional. With all due respect to my colleague, I believe that the Attorney General of the United States has the better part of that argument.

Let me now, Mr. President, in concluding, go back to Mr. Abrams' essay, because it seems to me that much of the argument involving lawyers' definitions of what constitutes business necessity and the degree of particularity with which employment practices must be alleged is simply lawyers' talk and very little more, as important as it may be to the outcome of litigation, which most people would seek to avoid.

The profound nature of this proposal, however, is in its general philosphy of entitlement by reason of race, and I wish now to read several paragraphs of Mr. Abrams' essay on that subject. Mr. Abrams said:

. . . The proposed standard requires the employer to demonstrate that every one of his hiring promotion criteria "bear(s) a significant relationship to successful performance of the job" by means of "demonstrable evidence." How many employers can "prove" that their hiring criteria—whether they be standardized tests, job interviews, written or oral skills, education or experience—definitively correlate with successful job performance? Could a Supreme Court justice prove by "demonstrable evidence"—whatever that means—a "significant relationship"—whatever that means—between law review experience and successful performance as a Supreme Court clerk—especially when seeking out the best is no defense? Could a college faculty show that tenure track candidates who publish articles always make better teachers or advance the cause of knowledge?

Under this test, merit and high standards go out the window, impairing not only the principle of American equality but, inevitably, American efficiency and productivity. Together, the bill's presumption of guilt and its high hurdle of proof will force employers to avoid lawsuits and potential liability by hiring and promoting by quota.

Kennedy-Hawkins wages war on objective standards at a time when this society can least afford a lesser measure of achievement. Objective criteria may not be perfect; some may mask discriminatory intent, or have little relation to the job. But Kennedy-Hawkins wields a bludgeon where a scalpel would do. Existing law already walks the fine line between protecting standards and weeding out potentially discriminatory criteria. The Supreme Court's 1989 Ward's Cove v. Atonio decision, the case Kennedy-Hawkins would overturn, already demands an exacting standard of business necessity; Why fix it if it's not broken?

But the social costs of a quota bill go beyond loss of productivity and efficiency. It balkanizes and tribalizes our nation by raising the color line; it stigmatizes and demoralizes those it supposedly helps, Kennedy-Hawkins may be a middle-class minority ride to preferential treatment; but it won't solve our real minority problems. It won't help fight the crack epidemic ravaging our minority youth; it won't stem the tide of unwed minority teen pregnancies; it won't stop the breakdown of our inner-city education system.

Congress and this administration have the opportunity, perhaps more than any other in recent years, to forge a new and lasting civil rights consensus. Every opinion poll confirms that the vast majority of Americans of all races share the goals of equal opportunity and color blindness and will support the vision of Martin Luther King, who urged that we judge ourselves "not by the color of our skin but by the content of our character." Let's not miss this chance by endorsing a quota bill.

Mr. President, there is a third level on which this debate takes place. It was mentioned by the distinguished Republican leader an hour or so ago during the course of making this motion, and that is the question as to whether or not we want a civil rights bill this year. I had, as did he and I think every other Senator, a letter from the President of the United States. The distinguished Republican leader asked that it be printed in the RECORD. I will read my own copy of it, which is identical to everyone else's. It is dated today, and it says:

DEAR SLADE: I have consistently expressed my desire to sign into law a civil rights bill. I have also consistently worked with both the Senate and the House to forge a bipartisan consensus to address these issues in a constructive manner.

I understand that the Senate may soon consider the conference report on the Kennedy-Hawkins bill. The bill as amended in conference is neither sound nor practical. I am convinced it will have the effect of forcing businesses to adopt quotas in hiring and promotion. It will also foster divisiveness and litigation rather than conciliation and do more to promote legal fees than civil rights. If this bill is presented to me, I will be compelled to veto it.

I also understand that a motion may be offered to recommit to conference with instructions to adopt a substitute along the lines of the one proposed by Senators Kassebaum and Gorton last July. This approach represents a sound, practical compromise, and I will sign such a bill if it is presented to me.

I commend you, Senator Kassebaum, and all the others who are working to produce sound civil rights legislation.

Sincerely,

GEORGE BUSH.

So the basic question on which we will be voting, Mr. President, at this third level as we vote on this motion to recommit, is whether or not we wish to have a civil rights bill pass in this session. I certainly can understand some elements of criticism of some portions of the bill which the Senator from Kansas and I have sponsored. Obviously, there are many who would go further. The bill, however, goes a long way in the direction which they desire; further, I suspect, than I would have gone had I been in charge of writing such a bill on my own.

But the Kassebaum-Gorton bill does not encourage the use of quotas. It does use, in its precise language, the words of the Griggs decision and the finding of business necessity. It does solve the real problems created by a number of other Supreme Court decisions. And it can become law within a week or 10 days if this Congress should adopt it.

So for true civil rights reform, Mr. President, I strongly suggest the passage of the motion by the distinguished leader of the Republican Party and the recommittal of this bill to conference.

Mr. President, am I correct in understanding that the yeas and nays have not been ordered on the motion to recommit?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. GORTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. METZENBAUM] is recognized.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, I rise to respond to the minority leader's remarks made a little bit earlier this afternoon. I do so because, although I have oftentimes differed with the minority leader, I have always found him to be fair, and I certainly do not want to insult him or any other Member on either side of the aisle.

I am fully aware of the fact that it was the distinguished minority leader who, on the floor of the Senate, stood up for this Senator when I was unfairly and unjustifiably smeared several years ago. So I am particularly sensitive about any suggestion that in some way I have broad-brushed all Republicans, including the minority leader, with anything that might be considered inappropriate and putting them in bed with David Duke. I can well understand his resentment in objecting to that kind of description.

Let me say how this matter came up. Senator HATCH, who is a very good friend of mine and with whom I have worked on many matters, and who is the last person in the world coming close to being a bigot or anything like that, certainly one of the most honorable Members of this body, in handling this bill on the floor raised the matter of David Duke in an effort to demonstrate the volatile climate in this country with respect to race relations and civil rights. There is no secret about that because these issues have always aroused great passions on both sides.

My own deep feeling on this matter I now see caused me to react and to make that which I believe was an unfair connection, one that was inappropriate. Any suggestion that all Republicans and even a great body of Republicans or even a small group of Republicans are identified with David Duke is not fair, whether I am speaking about the President or any other Member of the Republican Party.

I am aware of the fact that nine Republican Senators came out against David Duke. I do not know whether they went down to Louisiana or said so in a statement, but they certainly made it clear that they were not supporting him, and the Republican Party indicated that they were not supporting him. There is no argument; Republicans are not Nazis; they are not Ku Klux Klanners; they are not anti-Semites; they are not antiblacks.

We come to the floor differing about this bill, a bill that the President, according to the distinguished Senator from Washington, would veto if the bill were to come to his desk in its present form. We have a right to disagree as to the merits and whether or not there should or should not be so-called quotas. There are no quotas in this bill, but somehow the President and some of his advisers came to that conclusion. It is not a quota bill, nor is it a David Duke bill.

Therefore, I come to this floor to say this is a civil rights bill that should be enacted into law. Those who are opposed to it should not be identified unfairly, as in this case, by me or by any other person. The Republicans are not in bed with David Duke, and to put them in that category is inappropriate and improper.

I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

Mr. SYMMS. Mr. President, I rise to support the motion that Senator DOLE has offered, largely for the reasons my good friend from the neighboring State of Washington has outlined.

I would like to put just a little different perspective on this. There is one thing that is oftentimes overlooked in this mad rush to pass legislation to try to make an effort to help certain disadvantaged groups of people. The one thing that we sometimes overlook is economic growth.

It is interesting that just before I left my office to come to the floor, I had a delegation of people in my office from the American Farm Bureau from my State who oftentimes feel that they are a minority group because of the less and less numbers of farmers that we have and the direction they see things going here in Washington with excessive regulation, more paperwork to fill out, more forms to do, more accounting procedures to fill out to the Government, their ability to use certain products, they see there are great efforts to raise their taxes, and then they have to pay taxes to support the regulatory activities of the Government, and so on and so forth.

But it was interesting that the disposition was that not only with respect to this civil rights legislation but the general argument that is going on in Washington this week between tax and tax, or else tax and reduce spending, or else do not tax but try to freeze the budget and hold the line on spending and allow people an opportunity for economic growth.

These people from the American Farm Bureau told me. They said, Senator the President was right when he had the idea of a flexible freeze and no new taxes. That is the position that we have taken at the National Farm Bureau. We, furthermore, support the efforts of the Republican leader on the floor of the Senate to try to moderate, if you will, the civil rights legislation so that there will not be so many lawsuits and litigation. I will leave that discussion and argument to some of the fine lawyers and attorneys that are here on this floor.

I had another group which gave me a news release today, the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. It is interesting that as this debate is going on on the Senate floor about what we should do in the Congress with respect to civil rights legislation, whether we should take the extreme position that my friend from Ohio is calling for—"extreme" in my opinion—which puts us in a position of more litigation, more interference or take the more moderate position that the Senators from Washington State and Kansas, the distinguished minority leader, are taking with the motion to recommit.

I would like to read for my colleagues a statement that came out of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights. I am told the vote was 6 in favor, 1 abstention, and 1 not present.

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights urges the President and the Congess—

This is what they are interested in—

The U.S. Commission on Civil Rights urges the President and Congress, in their efforts to reduce the federal deficit, to be fully cognizant of the importance of continued economic growth to the advancement of civil rights in this country. In bad economic times, black and Hispanic unemployment rates rise the fastest. In good times, a tight labor market encourages employers to cast a wider net when hiring, thus breaking barriers that have traditionally prevented minorities, women and persons with disabilities from gaining better paying jobs. Civil rights laws can do little to expand opportunities for members of historically disadvantaged groups when opportunities for all Americans shrink. Strong economic growth is important for creating a climate for effective civil rights policies.

Strong economic growth can also be a powerful force for cutting the federal deficit. A growing economy means more and better payng jobs, which expands the tax base. Policies that encourage savings and entrepreneurial initiative create a growth dividend which will reduce the deficit.

The Commission recognizes that deficit-spending can stifle economic growth, and encourages deficit-reduction efforts. However, plans for balancing the budget that would also reduce the incentives for individuals to work, save, and invest are likely to be self-defeating. This is the great danger in trying to control the deficit through new taxes.

We therefore call on the President and Congress to adopt only those deficit-reducing proposals consistent with economic growth. Specifically, we recommend freezing real total government expenditure at the fiscal 1990 level.

The Commission recommends that the President and Congress focus on developing policies that will spur both general economic growth and, in particular, growth in the depressed urban and rural areas of our nation. For those who live, work and invest in the depressed areas of our inner cities, for example, we urge cutting the capital gains tax rate to zero, establishing enterprise zones, and other social and job-creating initiatives to help restore economic prosperity to these areas. Overwhelmingly, the residents of these areas suffer the legacy of past discrimination and the limitations of current civil rights laws and policies to promote equality of opportunities. Policies to stimulate growth in depressed areas would not only foster the economic opportunities of residents of these communities, but would benefit many other Americans by helping to realize the full potential of our nation's wealth. Economic growth is not a panacea for this nation's civil rights problems, but economic stagnation will surely exacerbate them. Progress toward eliminating these problems can be accelerated by sustained economic growth and, equally important, aggressive enforcement of all civil rights laws and effective programs to provide educational and economic opportunities to those who have been denied.

In summary, we request, on behalf of America's disadvantaged, no general spending increase and no general tax increase.

Mr. President, the reason I bring that to the attention of my colleagues right now is oftentimes, I think, when we get into debates such as this, there is always an attempt made to somehow pass that one group of people who are asking for a slightly more moderate, less regulatory position, if you will—which is the position the Senator from Washington State so eloquently defined here on the floor, and the Senator from Kansas; that their position is somehow a little less humanitarian than my good friend from Ohio or Massachusetts who want a restrictive, stronger, more-quotas-assigned, more-regulatory, if you will, bigger, stronger, heavier handed Government involved to be sure that all civil rights are kept equal.

All I say to my colleagues is I think it is very interesting that the issues the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights is talking about are economic growth, jobs, opportunities for the minorities and the disadvantaged in this country. I believe that we could well serve our constituencies throughout this country by taking a moderate position on this issue which the President of the United States, in my view, is taking.

So I shall vote for the motion to recommit with instructions, for largely those reasons, and because I think it is fair. I think it will best serve the needs of the country. Then I will fight for a budget freeze and no new taxes on working minorities or any other Americans so that we can have economic growth and continued prosperity in this country; so we can get on with the job of seeing that all Americans have the opportunity, Mr. President, to come along on the train of economic growth and rise with the tide, if you will—in a rising tide of economic growth.

So I commend my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee who are much more learned in the technicalities of these laws than this Senator. But I can only say as one of the businessmen in the Senate that all of these excessive regulations that come from these well-intended laws oftentimes are detrimental to the very people we wish to help.

So I urge my colleagues to vote for the motion to recommit with instructions. If that is not successful, the other side may choose an issue so somehow they think they can paint Republicans in a corner, that somehow we Republicans are not for civil rights. They may choose to do that. I hope that will not be done.

I hope this motion to recommit will pass, and the President stated he will sign the bill. Then it would be a finished product. We would be all better served, and we would have a better position to go into the rest of the work that we have to do in the coming weeks ahead to resolve the big issues of tax and spending with relation to the working men and women of this country.

I compliment my colleague from Pennsylvania for the efforts he made, the countless hours he spent trying to resolve this issue. I am sure it is very frustrating for Senators, who would like to find a reasonable, rational solution to some of these problems, to find that the other side continues to push—and continues to push for an issue, Mr. President, rather than try to push for some reasonable workable solution that can be accommodated by the small businesses of this country that, after all, are the biggest employers in the country.

Mr. President, I will vote, as I said, for the motion to recommit.

If it is not successful, then I shall vote against this bill and hope that we can see that we can have sound economic growth, true economic opportunities for all of our people, whether they be black, white, Hispanic, disadvantaged, or whatever; that they can have economic growth and an opportunity to be given a chance that we would like to see for all our citizens; and that we can start over on this project next year to try to get a more moderate bill that the small business people in this country can live with.

Mr. President, I thank my colleague from Pennsylvania. I compliment him on all his efforts on this bill.

I yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, the hour is exactly 6 o'clock. We started on this bill this morning at 9:30, and I have been on and off the floor most of the day engaged in negotiations on this bill to see if there might be a compromise worked out, and I am still hopeful that we will work out a compromise on this bill.

But for those who may have been listening to the debate—and I do not think the few people in the gallery here at 6:10 were here at 9:30; there may be some who have listened intermittently on C-SPAN or those who may read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD—will wonder what is the appropriate resolution of the complex issues which have been discussed.

I suggest, Mr. President, that it is not possible really for anyone to wind his or her way through all of those arguments and to come to a conclusion.

Mr. President, that is why I believe it is so important for all of the parties to reach an agreement, and the differences are very, very narrow, indeed, really focusing on only one section, what we call the "particularity section."

Mr. President, my own efforts on this bill were caused by a request by Governor Sununu, Chief of Staff, and then President Bush, who asked Senator DANFORTH, Senator JEFFORDS, and myself to try to find an answer to the complex issues. We worked for countless hours over many weeks trying to negotiate a compromise, which was not to be found, before the Senate earlier this year passed this bill by a vote of 65 to 35. It seemed to this Senator—actually 65 to 34; one Senator not voting but who would have voted against the bill.

It seemed to this Senator that it would be very unfortunate if a civil rights bill passed by 65 percent in this body, a similar percentage in the House of Representatives, and was then vetoed by the President, and we did not have a civil rights bill, because minorities and women have good reason to believe that they are not getting a fair share of the economic opportunity in this country today. And the Supreme Court of the United States, last year, overturned long-standing precedent of some 18 years in reversing congressional intent in handing down the decision in the Wards Cove case.

I sought out Senator HATCH after Labor Day and former Secretary of Transportation William T. Coleman, Jr., thinking that those two distinguished representatives of the civil rights community—Mr. Coleman, former Secretary Coleman, and Senator HATCH, who is the ranking Republican on the key committee, Labor and Human Resources Committee—I thought that if those two men could be brought together on their views, that we would have a bill which would be accepted on all sides.

We worked around the clock, Mr. President, and finally, a week ago last Thursday, in the early morning hours, we came to terms. We agreed to a substitute on the key provisions. Senator HATCH, at the time of the agreement, said that he found the bill acceptable, not perfect. Little that we do here or elsewhere is perfect. He would recommend it to the President, but he reserved the right to vote against it if the President decided not to agree to the bill as it was finally crafted.

Senator HATCH and I had a discussion on the floor earlier today, and Senator HATCH agreed with the substance of what I have just said. It was my thought, and still is my hope, that Senators will look to what Senator HATCH has said on substance, that he has found it acceptable, because of the importance of having a civil rights bill, and will vote to support what you might caption now the Hatch-Specter substitute.

Mr. President, there is a lot of talk about Kennedy-Hawkins and about Kassebaum-Gorton, and in our body we use those shorthand expressions because they provide some characterization of where individual Senators stand on the issues. I believe that the imprimatur that Senator HATCH has placed on the key provisions of this bill does stand.

Mr. President, I had occasion to talk to President Bush over the weekend, and he stated that he was very anxious to have a bill. It is my hope to see the President tomorrow, along with other Senators, who have been working on this measure, and it is my hope that while we vote on the motion to recommit, which I think will be defeated, that we do not tonight vote on the final passage of the civil rights bill, in the hope that the very extensive negotiations that were in process most of the day today involving top ranking representatives of the President, along with Senators on the Republican side of the aisle, together with former Secretary Coleman, will continue because we are very, very close. When I put my fingers together as to how close we are, I leave virtually no room because there is only one provision which is outstanding, Mr. President, and that is the provision which relates to particularlity.

There has been a great deal of talk about whether this is or is not a quota bill, Mr. President, I submit to you that it is not a quota bill, and I cite in support of that the specifics of the bill which place the burden of proof on the complaining party to establish with particularity the specific practice or practices which have resulted in the disparate impact.

People have heard a lot of talk about disparate impact and some may wonder what it is. There are two ways to establish a violation of title VII of the Civil Rights Act. One is to show specific intent to discriminate. If that is shown, it is a violation of the law. But specific intent is very hard to prove, virtually impossible in most cases. So the Supreme Court of the United States interpreted the Civil Rights Act in a landmark decision called Griggs in 1971 and said that if there was a showing of disparate impact, that a civil rights violation could be proved.

In our pending legislation, Mr. President, we have been very careful to place the burden of proof on the complaining party, the plaintiff-employee, to show the specific practice or practices which resulted in the disparate impact. At that stage, the defendant-employer can avoid liability by proving business necessity as the reason for the practice or practices which result in that disparate impact.

Mr. President, there are some quota bills. A set-aside is a quota bill. For example, if you have a requirement that a certain percentage, say, 30 percent is set aside for minority contractors, as was the case in the Croson decision by the Supreme Court of the United States. But there is no set-aside here.

Mr. President, I for one, am totally opposed to a quota bill. When I was a younger man growing up, the quota concept was an anathema to me and other young Jewish students who were concerned about their opportunities to get into medical school or law school where there were quotas which were used to exclude minorities like Jews and others. We are all opposed to a quota bill which would exclude deserving applicants of any color, race, or national origin. What this bill does is to eliminate discrimination, whether it is established by specific intent or by this disparate impact standard.

(Mr. ROCKEFELLER assumed the chair.)

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I do not think anyone could accuse Senator HATCH of being a proponent of a quota bill. The legislation which is pending before the Senate is the legislation which Senator HATCH found acceptable and which he recommended to the President under the terms which I previously have described.

When we talk about a motion to recommit for the legislation advocated by Senator KASSEBAUM and Senator GORTON, we might as well do nothing at all, because their legislation incorporates, and it was a key part, the definition of "business necessity" under Wards Cove, which is the 1989 decision.

That is the principal reason for this legislation, because in Wards Cove the Supreme Court of the United States reversed the 18-year-old precedent in Griggs. If we are going to codify Wards Cove, we may as well not bother; there is no reason to recommit, no reason to have a civil rights bill, if we are going to have the Supreme Court decision in Wards Cove and the Wards Cove definition of "business necessity" as the cornerstone of the Gorton-Kassebaum bill.

Mr. President, there are many reasons why Wards Cove ought to be repudiated. It ought to be repudiated on the merits because it is a major step backward on civil rights. But it also ought to be repudiated because it is a flagrant example of judicial usurpation where the Supreme Court has stepped into what is a legislative prerogative on legislative intent on the statute which we have passed.

Let me explain why. If you have a constitutional interpretation, the Supreme Court is the final arbiter of the Constitution. If you have a statute which is passed and you have a question as to what is the intent of the Congress, that is up to the Congress. When the Supreme Court of the United States, by a unanimous court, in an opinion written by Chief Justice Burger, who is not known to be a flaming liberal, hands down the Griggs decision and Congress lets it stand for 18 years, that establishes conclusively the congressional stamp of approval that that definition of business necessity and that definition of the Civil Rights Act is what Congress intended.

Now, what happens in 1989? Five Supreme Court Justices, by a 5-to-4 vote, come along and say "Never mind what Congress has approved. We know better; we are going to interpret the Civil Rights Act of 1964 differently from what is the conclusive congressional intent on the subject."

That decision is particularly troubling to this Senator, Mr. President, because four of those Justices, who were confirmed during the 10 years that this Senator has served on the Judiciary Committee in the Senate, placed their hand on the Bible in confirmation hearings in the past decade and swore that they would exercise judicial restraint, they would not legislate, and they would interpret the law and not make the law. And in as clear a case as could be devised, the Supreme Court in Wards Cove usurped the congressional function in taking over and making the law.

For that reason, and that reason alone, we ought to show the Supreme Court that we are not going to tolerate that kind of judicial usurpation. It is more than judicial activism. It is the Court taking over the function of the Congress. So when we have Kassebaum-Gorton on an alternative on this motion to recommittee, Mr. President, it does not make any sense at all.

Where Senator HATCH restructured the original provisions of the pending legislation, there were very important improvements for the business community which Senator HATCH achieved.

The Martin versus Wilks case allows anyone to challenge consent decrees. And there has been a moderation by what Senator HATCH achieved in conjunction with former Secretary Coleman and myself in allowing consent decrees to be challenged only in circumstances where the challenging party was not a member of the work force at that time or not adequately and competently represented by another person. So there is a significant achievement for the business community in what Senator HATCH, Secretary Coleman, and I crafted in that important respect.

Price Waterhouse, the so-called mixed motive case—and I am not going to go into the details—but our crafting here again was a step in the moderate direction so that there would not be damages, either compensatory or punitive, and the plaintiff's remedy is limited to declaratory relief or injunction; that is to say, do not do it again; and cost and attorneys' fees. It is a considerable step back from where this legislation had been.

Mr. President, I believe that the pending legislation is the most important bill we will have this year and perhaps the most important bill of the decade.

We are right now preoccupied with the budget, but we have this controversy on the budget year in and year out. In 1985 we passed Gramm-Rudman-Hollings and every year we have had contentions circumstances illustrated by our passing a budget on December 22 at 3 a.m. And if we could have postponed Christmas we would have. And now as we are standing here at 6:15 p.m. on October 16, some 10 days past the stated adjournment time, not knowing when we will be finished with this session, having a target date this Friday, the 19th, which may be extended to 26th, which may be extended beyond that, we have a budget crisis and we will solve it ultimately one way or another.

We have very troubled times in the world and we have had in the past decade since this Senator has been present: Grenada, Panama, and Libya for example. If you take a look at what really stands out in marked contrast to what has happened of real importance, it would be the civil rights legislation of 1964 where finally in this Chamber other Senators overcame the tradition of a filibuster and the defeat of civil rights prompted by the landmark decision by the Supreme Court in Brown versus Board of Education in 1954 to finally craft a civil rights bill.

I believe, Mr. President, that the Federal Government has a very heavy duty to see to it that minorities and women have equal opportunity and a fair chance for a livelihood. In the past decade, we have cut back very substantially on what the Federal Government does. Without getting into the merits of any of our cutbacks that has been what we have done in an effort to restrain spending and restrain growth in the Federal Government. And those programs by and large have been cut back for the national welfare.

But if we expect minorities and women to assert themselves in our society and pull themselves up by their bootstraps, they at least have to have bootstraps; they at least have to have an opportunity to get a job and an opportunity for promotion. That is what this legislation does.

When Secretary Coleman crafted this legislation and Senator HATCH commented earlier, Secretary Coleman was first in his class at Harvard Law School and was a clerk for Supreme Court Justice Frankfurter. When it came time to get a job in the early 1950's he could not get a job in Philadelphia, PA. He had to commute to New York City. Discrimination still exists in this country today, and what we are asking employers to do is to take a look at the situation they have when there is disparate impact, and what we are asking for is a fair and equitable standard. The burden of proof is on the plaintiff, so that we do not have a quota bill or a set-aside bill. If there is a disparate impact, that simple fact alone does not establish the case. The employer-defendant can avoid liability by showing business necessity. And on the issue of business necessity, Mr. President, there have been many, many definitions advanced, and the finest lawyers could not slice them apart with endless arguments over "significantly related to job performance" as opposed to a "demonstrable relationship to successful performance of the job" to the word "manifest," "demonstrable," "manifest," "significant" and the difference between what the opponents of this legislation want on business necessity are nonexistent when you talk about the so-called Kennedy-Sununu compromise. There was a significant difference there. There was a demonstrable difference there. They were talking about what was intended, and if you import intent into a civil rights bill, there is enormous difference between the results, the effects test as opposed to intention so that could not appropriately be accepted by the proponents of this bill.

We are, Mr. President, as I say, very, very close, and when this debate is brought to a close, I believe that our efforts to reach a compromise ought to be continued. This is simply too important to do anything but to bring all the parties together, because, after we have 65 percent of the Congress in favor of such legislation, and we may have 67 or 68 or maybe 70 Senators ultimately voting for this bill, we should not have a veto. I know that there are more than 70 U.S. Senators, counting the 55 Democrats who voted for it and the 10 Republicans who voted for it, and many, many other Republicans who have said to me, "Let us get this resolved. I like this bill. I want to vote for a civil rights bill. I want to see a civil rights bill signed."

I think that is the spirit we have to maintain to close the remaining very, very narrow difference on particularity and come together in this country on this very important piece of legislation.

I thank the Chair, and I yield the floor.

Mrs. KASSEBAUM. Mr. President, I rise in support of the motion to recommit S. 2104 to conference, with instructions. This motion would instruct the conference committee to amend the bill with a substitute which Senators GORTON, WILSON, MURKOWSKI, MCCAIN, SIMPSON, LUGAR, and I introduced earlier this year.

Mr. President, there is no need for extensive debate on this motion. The substitute, as well as S. 2104, has already been debated at length, not only here on the floor but in meeting after meeting, negotiation after negotiation. While refinements have been made to S. 2104, I think the only point on which the experts, in this case lawyers, can agree is that S. 2104 has become even more complex.

But the issue now before us is really quite simple. The only question we need to ask ourselves is: Do we want to enact a civil rights bill this year? The President has made himself clear. He will veto S. 2104, even with the latest changes. He would sign into law the substitute. The choice is simple: If we want a civil rights bill this year, we should adopt the substitute.

Not only will we have a bill, we will also accomplish the two basic goals I outlined when our proposal was first introduced. The first goal is to restore our civil rights laws to the same strength and clarity that existed before a series of Supreme Court decisions last year. I think many would agree that those decisions have significantly increased the difficulty of proving discrimination and, if allowed to stand, weaken our civil rights laws.

The second, equally important goal of this proposal is to maintain the balance first struck by the Civil Rights Act of 1964 and to preserve the basic philosophy of conciliation, cooperation, and equitable relief that is the foundation of all of our civil rights laws.

My concern about S. 2104 is that it has become a vehicle not merely to correct the problems created by recent Supreme Court decisions but to go far beyond that goal. Taken as a whole, S. 2104 represents a basic change in our civil rights laws and undermines the structure created in 1964 and affirmed by succeeding sessions of Congress.

If S. 2104 were to become law, our philosophy of conciliation would eventually be replaced by one of confrontation. Our goal of prompt, mediated settlements that assure certainty for both the victims and the perpetrators of discrimination would be replaced by protracted, divisive, and radically inconsistent judgments.

Mr. President, I understand the frustration that lies behind S. 2104. Many Senators believe there must be more effective and aggressive enforcement of our civil rights laws. But even with its imperfections, the current system has been remarkably successful. It is a real deterrent to discrimination. We should think long and hard before we sweep away this structure of Government-enforced settlements and move to a tort-based system of jury trials and jackpot judgments.

I believe a more appropriate balance is best struck by the compromise language we are offering and that this basic approach achieves the two goals we have set—restoring protections that existed before recent Supreme Court decisions and preserving the fundamental structure of current civil rights law. If we really want to have a civil rights bill this year, I urge my colleagues to support this motion to recommit.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. President, I rise today to voice my opposition to Senate bill 2104, the 1990 Civil Rights Act.

No one in this Congress will stand before his constituents and the Nation and announce he or she is against civil rights. Everyone believes in equal rights for all Americans regardless of race, sex, religion, or ethnicity, as required by title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. I am no different.

However, I have some problems with this piece of legislation.

First and foremost, under this bill, employers who have not filled their jobs by quota would be presumed to be guilty of discrimination in every instance, and they would bear the burden of proving their innocence. The notion that a person should be judged and hired or promoted because he or she is the most qualified, regardless of sex, race, national origin, or religion, would be discarded.

Instead, employers are being told that race, sex, national origin and religion must become the paramount factor in every employment decision.

Second, this bill adds compensatory and punitive damages and jury trials for certain cases. If a person is a member of a protected class and if that person applies for an open position but is not offered a job, that person can file suit alleging an international discrimination.

Undoubtedly, the opportunity to recover damages under these circumstances will create an explosion of expensive, unnecessary litigation.

Third, this bill would eliminate the right of nonminority members to challenge court-imposed racial quotas that discriminate against them.

This bill is a quota bill. It would allow a plaintiff to win a civil rights case by simply showing that an employer is not hiring in proportion to the number of available minority workers.

This bill allows a plaintiff to prevail on the bases of statistical imbalance without requiring evidence of intentional discrimination.

For that reason, the bill creates an obvious, powerful pressure toward quota hiring.

This bill would force employers to adopt hiring and promotion quotas to avoid court fights they cannot win.

Mr. President, I believe that the Kennedy quota bill does more harm than good in its attempt to help civil rights.

If this bill passes it would place another regulation upon small businesses in America. This bill would also apply to State and local governments. The Federal Government would once again pass a law that is costly and cumbersome for local governments, placing further strain on local budgets and forcing an increase in the local tax base to enforce the Federal mandate.

Unfortunately, there is the Kassebaum-Gorton alternative that the President has said he will sign. Obviously, it is just three weeks before an election, and politicking and posturing, rather than sound public policy, have become the primary focus of the debate.

I intend to vote against this bill, and vote for the motion to recommit the conferees, and support the Kassebaum-Gorton alternative.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to proceed as if in morning business for not longer than 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPLACEMENT FUELS BILL

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. President, yesterday I introduced a bill to establish a replacement fuels program in this country. My bill would encourage the development of nonconventional domestic energy sources by requiring petroleum refiners to use a certain percentage of alternative or other domestic fuel sources in their gasoline formulas. The bill sets targets of 10 percent replacement fuel by 1998 and 30 percent by 2005.

To allow refiners flexibility in meeting these requirements, the bill establishes a system of marketable credits so each individual gallon of fuel sold need not be 10 percent replacement fuel, but rather refiners may average the requirement across their annual totals. In addition, refiners who fall short of the percentage goals can purchase credits from others who exceed the goals.

Further, the bill extends this marketable credit program to distributors of fuels that are not readily mixable gasoline, but are yet alternative fuels whose promotion is consistent with the purposes of this program.

Let me run through a couple scenarios that exemplify how this program would work.

One way refiners could meet their percentage mandate is by producing fuels from nonoil sources to be mixed during the refinery process. For example, there are existing pilot projects producing crude oil from domestic sources that is then refined for consumer use. In Colorado, oil is being manufactured from oil shale; in Alabama, oil is being manufactured from coal. Methanol is now used in reformulated gasoline produced by Arco in California. Ethanol, produced from corn, could be used as well.

The reason that these programs have not expanded is not for reasons of technology—it is because of cost. Imported oil has been much cheaper than other supply options. At today's oil price, these technologies are cost-effective, or nearly so, but without a guaranteed price, or an assured demand, the industry is unwilling to make the investments necessary to develop these domestic resources.

My bill would require the use of such fuel sources, stimulating the development of these promising resources regardless of the volatility of crude oil prices by mandating a demand.

Mr. President, I want to remind my colleagues that this country is blessed with huge reserves of mineral resources that can be converted to transportation fuels. Our current excess coal production capacity is about 125 million tons—enough to produce about 1 million barrels per day of gasoline. This is just for the excess capacity. Reserves of oil shale and tar sands are also huge, with the only barrier to their development being a demand of the product. The Department of Energy estimates that there is a larger reserve of fuel in Colorado's oil shale than there is in Saudi Arabia's oilfields.

A second scenario envisions refiners meeting their percentage requirements by mixing refined gasoline with stocks such as ethanol, produced from domestic corn surpluses or from biomass resources.

Current ethanol production capacity in the United States is about a billion gallons per year. Although a recent GAO report found that the industry is capable of tripling domestic production to an excess of 3 billion gallons per year during the next 8 years, without adequate assurances for sales the industry may not expand. My bill assures demand.

Some experts have estimated that fuel from all domestic biomass sources, including corn, could yield up to 3 million barrels per day of hydrocarbon fuel equivalent. If this were accurate, biomass sources alone could satisfy the demands of my bill.

A third scenario envisions expansion of the development of natural gas, propane and electricity as transportation fuels. To the extent that the major oil companies are vertifically integrated with retailers as well as gasoline refineries, sales of natural gas through their gas stations into the transportation sector could count toward the percentage requirement.

The same would be true for an arrangement of independent refiners, with natural gas producers and independent retailers. Independent natural gas and propane producers would generate credits for their sales of fuel for motor vehicle use, which would then be available for refiners to use toward their percentage requirements.

Such a system is consistent with the alternative fuels provisions of the clean air bill, currently in conference with the House of Representatives. The Environmental Protection Agency has estimated that the Clean Air Act will stimulate development of the equivalent of 800,000 to 1.5 million barrels per day of alternative fuel products. This is in the ballpark for phase I of my program.

So, there are three scenarios envisioned by my bill. I note that each of these situations are currently being practiced, with varying degrees of development. Under my replacement fuels program, these programs, which have the dual benefit of promoting energy security and enhancing environmental protection, would flourish.

Mr. President, our current and increasing reliance on imported oil threatens our domestic security and is large reason why we find ourselves in such a precarious position in the Middle East.

Our national cost for imported oil accounts for about half of our national trade deficit. This cost continues to grow as consumption increases and domestic production declines.

By all accounts, it is in our national interest to promote cleaner, available domestic reserves. Indeed, most analysts agree that the sorts of fuels my bill would encourage are the very fuels that will eventually replace imported oil.

The barrier to the technological advancement of these products is the traditionally low and volatile cost of imported oil. I propose it is in the national interest to promote fuels that will replace imported oil. That will require that we get our act together so we can get out from under being hostage to the situation in the Middle East.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my bill be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3203

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REPLACEMENT AND NONPETROLEUM MOTOR FUELS PROGRAM.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) in order to have a comprehensive program to reduce pollution and reduce our dependence on foreign oil, it is important to coordinate programs relating to the production of automobiles and the production of fuels;

(2) the achievement of long-term energy security for the United States is essential to the health of the national economy, the well-being of our citizens, and the maintenance of national security;

(3) the displacement of energy derived from imported oil with alternative fuels will help to achieve energy security and improve air quality;

(4) transportation uses account for more than 60 percent of the oil consumption of the Nation; and

(5) the Nation's security, economic, and environmental interests require that the Federal Government should assist clean-burning, nonpetroleum transportation fuels to reach a threshold level of commercial application and consumer acceptability at which they can successfully compete with petroleum based fuels.

(b) PURPOSE.—The purposes of this Act are to enhance energy security and promote environmental protection through the gradual replacement of gasoline with cleaner, domestic nonpetroleum energy sources.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "Administrator" means the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency;

(2) the term "alcohol" means methanol, ethanol, or any other alcohol which is produced from renewable resources or coal and which is suitable for use by itself or in combination with other fuels as a motor fuel;

(3) the term "nonpetroleum motor fuel" includes any motor fuel other than a petroleum fuel, including natural gas, propane, hydrogen, and electricity;

(4) the term "replacement fuel" means alcohol or other liquid produced from coal, or other nonpetroleum substance as may be determined by the Secretary, for the purpose of mixing with gasoline to be used as a motor fuel;

(5) the term "replacement motor fuel" means any fuel described in paragraph (3) mixed with gasoline for use as a motor fuel;

(6) the term "commerce" means any trade, traffic, transportation, exchange, or other commerce—

(A) between any State and any place outside of such State; or

(B) which affects any trade, traffic, transportation, exchange, or other commerce described in subparagraph (A);

(7) the term "motor fuel" means any substance suitable as a fuel for self-propelled vehicles designed primarily for use on public streets, roads, and highways;

(8) the term "refiner" means any person engaged in the refining of crude oil to produce motor fuel, including any affiliate of such person, or any importer of gasoline for use as a motor fuel;

(9) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Energy;

(10) the term "United States" means such State of the several States and the District of Columbia; and

(11) the term "renewable" means any source of energy which is available in an inexhaustible supply in the foreseeable future.

(d) REPLACEMENT FUEL AND OTHER NONPETROLEUM MOTOR FUEL PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall establish, pursuant to this section, a program to promote the development and use in the United States of replacement fuels produced in the United States. Such program shall be designed to promote the replacement of gasoline to be used as a motor fuel with replacement motor fuel containing the maximum percentage of replacement fuel as is economically and technically feasible for use as a motor fuel, and to promote the use of other nonpetroleum motor fuels. Such program, shall, to the extent practicable, ensure the availability of those replacement fuels and nonpetroleum motor fuels which will have the greatest impact in improving air quality in urban areas, along transportation corridors and nationwide.

(e) DEVELOPMENT PLAN AND PRODUCTION GOALS.—Under the program established under subsection (d), the Secretary, in consultation with the Administrator, the Secretary of Transportation, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of Commerce, and the heads of other appropriate agencies, shall review appropriate information and determine—

(1) the most suitable raw materials, other than petroleum, for the production in the United States of replacement fuels;

(2) the nature of the replacement motor fuel distribution systems, and the various production processes which use feedstock other than petroleum, necessary for the rapid development of a replacement motor fuel industry in the United States, including a proposed timetable for the development of such systems and processes;

(3) the most suitable means and methods of developing and encouraging the production, distribution, and use of other nonpetroleum motor fuels;

(4) the technical and economic feasibility of producing in the United States sufficient replacement fuels, by the calendar year

2005 in order to replace 30 percent or more, by volume, of the projected consumption of gasoline used as a motor fuel in the United States for that year.

The Secretary shall prescribe, by rule, a substitute percentage goal for purposes of paragraph (4) if he determines that 30 percent is inappropriate.

(f) RULE.—The Secretary shall, by rule, establish production goals for the optimal production of replacement fuel in the United States in each of calendar years 1996 and 1997. In establishing such goals, the Secretary shall—

(1) take into account the availability of reliable sources of replacement fuel produced from renewable resources, coal, and substances other than petroleum; and

(2) provide that the production goal for replacement fuel for calendar year 1998 and thereafter shall be not less than 10 percent by volume of the projected consumption of gasoline used as a motor fuel in the United States for each year.

(g) RELIABLE REPLACEMENT FUEL INDUSTRY.—In carrying out subsection (d), the Secretary shall—

(1) identify ways to encourage the development of a reliable replacement fuel industry in the United States, and the technical, economic, and institutional barriers to such development;

(2) include an estimation of the production capacity in the United States of replacement fuel needed to implement the provisions of this section; and

(3) identify ways to encourage the development of a reliable nonpetroleum motor fuel industry.

(h) REVIEW.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall complete his review and determinations under this section and prepare and transmit a report thereon to each House of the Congress.

(i) GASOLINE AND REPLACEMENT FUEL REQUIREMENTS.—Of the total quantity of gasoline and replacement fuel sold in commerce during any of the following years by any refiner (including sales to the Federal Government), replacement fuel produced in the United States shall constitute the minimum percentage determined in accordance with the following table:

In the calendar year:	The minimum percentage of that volume which replacement fuel constitutes, shall be—
1996, 1997	Determined by the Secretary under subsection (i) of this section.
1998, 1999, 2000, 2001, 2002, 2003, 2004.	10 percent.
2005 and each year thereafter.	The percentage determined feasible under subsection (d)(4).

(j) MINIMUM PERCENTAGE.—Not later than January 1, 1993, the Secretary shall prescribe, by rule, the minimum percentage of United States produced replacement fuel, by volume, required to be contained in the total quantity of gasoline sold each year in commerce in the United States in calendar years 1996 and 1997 by any refiner for use as a motor fuel. Such percentage shall apply to each refiner, and shall be set for each such calendar year at a level which the Secretary determines—

(1) is technically and economically feasible, and

(2) will result in steady progress toward meeting the requirements under this section for calendar year 1998.

(k) REPORT.—Each refiner shall report annually to the Secretary the percentage of United States produced replacement fuel by volume contained on the average in the total quantity of gasoline for use as a motor fuel that such refiner sold during the preceding calendar year, and the amount of nonpetroleum motor fuels, sold and distributed by such refiner during such year. Each manufacturer of nonpetroleum fuel shall report annually to the Secretary the amount of nonpetroleum fuel manufactured and sold into commerce for transportation purposes by such manufacturer during such year.

(1) refiners;

(2) manufacturers of replacement fuels; and

(3) distributors of nonpetroleum motor fuels sold into commerce for transportation purposes;

in order to satisfy the requirements of subsection (i), and to further the purposes of this Act. In establishing such credits, the Secretary shall consider, among other things, energy content, the environmental impact, and domestic availability of such fuel sources.

(m) APPLICATION.—The Secretary may, on the application of any person, make adjustments to reduce the minimum percentage requirement as it applies to that person, but only if and to the extent that such adjustments are consistent with the purposes of this section.

(n) ENFORCEMENT BY THE SECRETARY.—(1) Any person who violates any requirement of subsection (i) is subject to a civil penalty of not more than $1 per gallon for each gallon of fuel sold that is not in compliance with subsection (i). Such penalties shall be assessed by the Secretary.

(2) Any person against whom a penalty is assessed under this paragraph may, within 60 calendar days after the date of the order of the Secretary assessing such penalty, institute an action in the United States Court of Appeals for the appropriate judicial circuit for judicial review of such order in accordance with chapter 7 of title 5, United States Code. The court shall have jurisdiction to enter a judgment affirming, modifying, or setting aside in whole or in part, the order of the Secretary, or the court may remand the proceeding to the Secretary for such further action as the court may direct.

(o) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary to carry out this Act not to exceed $10,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

(p) COORDINATION WITH OTHER ACTS.—This Act shall be administered and enforced in coordination with the administration and enforcement of the Energy Security Act, as amended, and the Clean Air Act, as amended.

(q) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall issue such regulations as may be necessary to require retailers of gasoline fuel to have available for sale, in addition to replacement motor fuels, other nonpetroleum motor fuels, for the transportation needs of consumers.

(r) REPORT TO CONGRESS.—The Administrator shall report to Congress not later than 24 months after the date of the enactment of this Act on the environmental impact potential of developing replacement fuels and nonpetroleum motor fuels. Such report shall analyze benefits and detriments to air and water quality, the ramifications on solid and hazardous waste management, and implications for public land management.

The Senate continued with the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. SIMPSON. I know we don't have a time agreement. I know we are ready to go right ahead and get to this, for it is such a critical issue. I need just 5 to 7 minutes to comment.

I want to sincerely and heartily commend Senator SLADE GORTON and Senator NANCY KASSEBAUM for their work. They have really put something before us which should not be rejected on any partisan basis. It is very thoughtful. I am opposed to the conference report. That is still a quota bill and we all know that. It does not matter how much new rhetoric the sponsors use in an attempt to disguise that fact. Nothing has changed the substance.

I am a lawyer. I practiced that craft for 18 years. We love that kind of legislation because it is particularly well suited to our profession. When we look at this measure, it is easy to see why. There is a lot of "legalese" mixed in with a healthy measure of impatience and a dose of ambiguity thrown in for flavor. The result is now, I think, really that only lawyers can read the thing without throwing up their arms in frustration and leaving the room. Some did just that during the negotiations.

The truth is, most lawyers feel the same frustration and disgust, but we are just too vain to admit it. I will admit it. This measure is a hodgepodge of sophistry and "staff-speak." My colleague was right on target when he said that S. 2104 is chock full of both intended and unintended results.

The results he spoke of, are quotas. Quiet, covert and coerced—quotas! We need equal opportunity, not result-based bureaucratic facades of equality.

I understand the Senator from Ohio was here earlier in the day and made a rather sincere—and I know him well—apology about the Duke situation and the Ku Klux Klan. We do not have to get into that stuff! I was saddened to hear that reference on the floor this morning. I have known the Senator far too long and know he did not mean that reference the way it sounded—I know he did not—and he said he did not, but it is unfortunate that the passion of this issue has now been couched in terms of racism and hatred. That is not what we are about here, and I am very surprised that occurred—and very saddened. The Senator from Ohio and I come at each other like Mack trucks with six headlights, but I certainly enjoy him. He is a special friend and a delightful companion.

If we are going to get into that, then we are in the old stuff about lawyers and who they represent. If you represent a murderer, are you a murderer? If you represent some churlish boob, are you connected with him or her? That is not the issue.

I was wondering if Farrakhan is a Democrat. I think he is. Are we going to play that game? Boy, that is then the end of the Earth around this place! That is firebrand stuff, and it is not very becoming to us. None of us are racist; what the devil is this? It is unbelievable. Who is a racist in this Chamber? Nobody! I do not know any racists in this Chamber. I know compassionate people on both sides of the aisle and no racists at all!

So what in the world is this tinge that is presented to us on this? I give eager support to the minority leader's motion to recommit this to committee with instructions to consider this remarkable Kassebaum-Gorton measure. We are all for civil rights and equal employment opportunity for all Americans. That is our goal. That is our aspiration for all of us—whether we are in Wyoming or Washington or Kansas or New York or wherever we are. That is what this country stands for.

The President has indicated that he, too, is eager to sign a civil rights bill and said he will sign the Kassebaum-Gorton measure. That is the chance I think we all want. Here is our chance to enact into law a true civil rights bill that will avoid any suggestion of a quota, however subtle that quota suggestion might be. And it is more than subtle in the conference committee report. This is our chance to join as a united Senate, in a bipartisan effort, in favor of equal opportunity in the workplace. We can now let the passion, I hope, of the debate cool—I think the Senator from Ohio led us to this ending. Let us set aside the innuendo, set aside the crude suggestion that George Bush, President of these fine United States, somehow has a tinge of some kind of racism! That has been a kind of underground theme here. What kind of thing is that? How absolutely pathetic to let emotion, fear, guilt, or racism cloud the debate. People get tired of my talking and saying this, but I have been saying it for 12 years now.

There are four engines that drive legislation in this place. You use a deft blend of emotion, fear, guilt or racism. What a sad thing it is when we use that as a tool to legislate. We see that right here—racism; no, more than one: emotion, fear, guilt in there, too. They are all four here.

So, now we can set aside our fears and the innuendo and take a positive step toward achieving the goal every one of us works for. I urge my colleagues to vote favorably on this motion to recommit.

I have just one last point, Mr. President. I am as committed to civil rights as any other Member of this body. I am also convinced that S. 2104 would do serious harm to race relations and fair employment in this country in its present form. It will. If our motion to recommit is not successful I will support the President's decision to veto that bill because of what I think it will do to disrupt our society. If that does happen, I call upon my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to work together in the next session. We surely had a long time to do this and never did get anything started until recently. Some people have been working for hundreds of hours but many have been content to wait and see what they come up with. So, to them I say join with me and other Members, Democrats and Republicans alike who have risen to speak today, and work very hard to craft a true civil rights bill that we can make the first order of business in the next session.

I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I rise in support of this bill. I happen to believe that it is not a quota bill, as many have read and feel is indicated. In fact, I come from an ethnic background where we absolutely oppose quotas because quotas were never used to get us into anything. Quotas were to keep us out.

My background is that of a Roman Catholic. I am the first woman of Polish-American heritage to serve in the U.S. Congress. Those are cultural aspects that I enthusiastically am proud to embrace. But for years people with last names that ended in "ski," or an "i" or an "o" or a "y" were called the most despicable names. And I will not use those names on the Senate floor.

If we wanted to go to a good university or we wanted to be admitted to law school, or we wanted to be admitted to medical school, there were quotas; that kept us out.

And then, also, often on the basis of religion, we found that those same quotas kept us out of certain schools and educational opportunities and even jobs after we received the qualifications. Often we were told, get the qualifications, and when we did, the jobs were not there. So anyone whose last name ends in "ski," is absolutely opposed to the quota system, but anybody who has the first name of Barbara, as is mine, is absolutely for this civil rights bill.

Mr. President, all this legislation does is restore certain civil rights that were overturned by certain other legal cases. I am not going to argue the law. I am not going to argue the precedents, what it does to Griggs, what it does to Wards Cove.

What I want to talk about is what we always hear when it comes to equal opportunity in this country. We explicitly deny it in our public policy. Equal opportunity has been one in this country only under the most grudging of circumstances. It goes back to the original compromise of 1776 when we allowed the despicable practice of slavery to continue. So that we could get a Constitution, we said, "oh, give us a Constitution and we will work it out in the amendments." We got a Constitution, but it took the Civil War and, finally, the 14th amendment to extend protection under the law to African Americans and other people of color.

It took until the 1920's to get another constitutional amendment to give women the right to vote. Almost 170 years after the first compromise where they said, do not worry about it, we are going to work it out in the amendments, 170 years later women finally got the opportunity to participate in a democracy of which they themselves were citizens.

Then in the 1970's, we offered an equal rights amendment. When we were debating the equal rights amendment, they often said, "Oh, we are for the E, and we are for the R, but we are not for the A. We are for equal rights. We do not want the amendment." Let us work it out one law at a time."

Here we are now at the end of the 1980's and into the 1990's, on the brink of a whole new century, and we are still trying to work it out in the amendments.

Mr. President, I think our own American history calls us to a different attitude, a different attitude toward each other. When we talk about people of color and we talk about women, we come with these biological characteristics that God has endowed us with. But God also endowed us with the fact that we are equal in God's eyes. All we are asking is that if we are equal in God's eyes, let us be equal in the eyes of employers. Is that too much for American citizens to ask of their Government? Is that too much to ask of American citizens on the closing days of a Congress of the last decade of this century? I think not. And as we sit around and tinker and twitter over this word and this semicolon, we actually demean ourselves in terms of what this country is all about.

We find that there is discrimination in this country. Sometimes it is intended and sometimes it is unintended, but nevertheless, it does exist. What people want to do is to be able to apply for jobs and not face discrimination. We women do not want to reach glass ceilings nor close doors. That is also true of people of color and people of a variety of religious backgrounds.

Demography tells us that with our new population, we have probably the broadest spectrum of ethnic diversity in this country than we have ever had. This means that we will need to have that protection under the law to make sure that equal opportunity is there.

All my life I have heard said to women and people of ethnic background, just get the qualifications. I have seen people get the qualifications, go through the chairs, work hard, only to be rejected because they were not one of the crowd, you know what I mean? They just were not one of the club. We find that is just intolerable anymore.

So tonight, here we are at 6:45. I am prepared to stay all night if it means lending my voice and my vote to civil rights, but let us just remember, since 1776, the Civil War, over 20 constitutional amendments, and we are still trying to work it out. If we are not going to work it out one law at a time, give us the equal rights amendment. But, for gosh sakes, do not substitute platitudes for policy. Let us get on with really fulfilling the American dream and the hope of our Founding Fathers. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, at the conclusion of today's debate, I am confident that the Senate will pass the conference report to S. 2104, the Civil Rights Act of 1990. In so doing, we will be taking a significant step toward restoring, and assuring forever, the fundamental right of equal opportunity in the workplace for all Americans. Unfortunately, President Bush's top aides stand ready to turn this progress around with yet another threat of a presidential veto. I hope they are wrong. I hope the President will sign this critical bill into law.

I hope that the President has the courage and wisdom to join with the Congress in sending a strong signal to the working women and men of this country, and to the Supreme Court, that we will not tolerate discrimination—we will not turn away from more than 100 years of slow progress toward equality.

I hope the President will personally examine the provisions of this bill, because I believe that if he does, he will clearly recognize that nothing in this bill will pressure businesses into adopting hiring quotas. If he examines this bill, I believe the President will realize that this bill is simply an antidiscrimination bill. It is not a quota bill. Our distinguished colleagues who worked long and hard as members of the conference committee on this bill have, I believe, responded to every legitimate objection raised against this bill. They have crafted a bill that removes any reasonable doubt about quotas. Yet, the allegations continue, and they trouble me deeply.

Allegations that this is a /quota bill do an incredible disservice to the millions of women and minorities who stand to gain the fundamental right of equality through passage of this legislation. No one—not one member of the Senate, the House, or the administration—supports quotas. I certainly do not. I firmly believe that merit, not race or sex, should determine who is hired for a job. And through the excellent efforts of Senators KENNEDY, JEFFORDS, DANFORTH, DECONCINI, and others, the bill's provisions make clear that quotas are not advocated, mandated, or intended.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the conference committee was able to effectively address two issues important to me and a number of my colleagues: the bill's provisions relating to disparate impact cases and jury awards of punitive damages. During conference, provisions identical to amendments that my colleagues from Arkansas, Senators PRYOR and BUMPERS, attempted to offer on the Senate floor were adopted and, thus, make the bill much stronger. These provisions, specifically designed to help small businesses, limit punitive damage awards and clarify that in cases involving disparate impact, "the mere existence of a statistical imbalance in an employer's work force on account of race, sex, religion, or national origin is not alone sufficient to establish a prima facia case of disparate impact violation."

Both these provisions, I believe, are worthy of our full support; and again, I am pleased that they were incorporated into the bill negotiated in Conference.

Mr. President, in closing, I want to commend Senator KENNEDY and Senator JEFFORDS, Majority Leader MITCHELL, Senator HATCH, Senator DANFORTH, Senator DECONCINI, Senator BUMPERS, Senator PRYOR, and several other colleagues for their dedicated and diligent efforts over the past several weeks and months to craft a bill that will restore our antidiscrimination laws to their full and proper strength without unduly or unfairly burdening America's business community. The degree of effort and patience that went into this bill's drafting, under the capable leadership of Senator KENNEDY, is a testimony to the type of cooperation we can achieve, which benefits all Americans, when we lay aside partisan politics.

Mr. President, the evolution of civil rights laws in this country has been slow and arduous. We have by no means reached a point where we can be complacent, as the Supreme Court's decisions in 1989 illustrate. The burden is on us, the Members of Congress and the President, to restore equality and equal justice for all Americans. That is the goal of the Civil Rights Act of 1990, and that is a goal to which we must always strive. Thank you.

REQUEST FOR GAO STUDY ON IMPLEMENTATION OF CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1990

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am concerned about what effects the Civil Rights Act of 1990 will have on businesses. In order to make a judgment about these effects, we must track its implementation. Accordingly, I am today sending a letter to the Comptroller General—along with Senators BUMPERS, BAUCUS, CONRAD, EXON, BOREN, DECONCINI, and BOB KERREY—requesting that the GAO monitor implementation of the Act over a 3-year period, with regular 6-month updates, to determine what effects the Civil Rights Act of 1990 may have on the workplace. As part of this monitoring process, the GAO will measure both the burdens that may be placed upon employers and the benefits that may accrue to minorities, women, and persons with disabilities as a result of the Act. I would intend for this study to serve as a major determinant of whether the Act should be amended, and if so, how.

No one in this body desires for discrimination to take place in any American business, no one wants to deny any person who has been the target of discrimination his or her access to achieving ultimate justice. My only purpose in requesting this GAO report in periodic intervals is to make certain that fairness for both employer and employee is achieved in the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a copy of my letter to the Comptroller appear at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, October 16, 1990.

Mr. CHARLES BOWSHER,
Comptroller General, General Accounting Office, Washington, DC.

DEAR COMPTROLLER BOWSHER: We are writing to ask the General Accounting Office to conduct a study of the effects on the work place of the Civil Rights Act of 1990, should the Act become law.

Businesses have expressed concern that the Act will encourage a great deal of litigation. We do not believe litigation, itself, is necessarily a bad thing. The purpose of this Act is to provide access to the courts so that individuals with legitimate claims of employment discrimination can seek redress. We support this aim. However, we are concerned that the Act will result in a large increase in litigation of weak and insubstantial claims of employment discrimination, and that businesses will have to implement expensive, complicated employment policies, and in some cases be forced to make unwise business decisions to avoid such litigation.

Accordingly, we would like the GAO to conduct a study which measures the quantitative and qualitative changes in litigation, equal employment opportunities, and employment practices resulting from the Civil Rights Act of 1990. Such a study should compare the amount of employment discrimination litigation undertaken before and after implementation of the Civil Rights Act of 1990, the average duration of such litigation, the average cost of initiating and defending such litigation, the average damage award granted to successful plaintiffs, and the average time elapsed between occurrence of an alleged act of discrimination and the filing of a claim of discrimination. When measuring statistics related to litigation, the study should distinguish between litigation over claims of disparate impact and claims of intentional discrimination.

The study should also compare the number of employment discrimination cases settled before and after the Act, and the average size of the settlement. One particularly important statistic that we would like the study to contain is a measure of the ratio of total cases settled or won by plaintiffs to the number of total cases brought by plaintiffs, both before and after the Act.

We believe it is particularly important for the GAO to study the effects of the Civil Rights Act of 1990 on litigation and employment practices, in view of the improvements in equal employment opportunities conferred by the Act. The study should include statistics measuring hiring of minorities, women, and persons with disabilities, career advancement of individuals in such groups, and salary figures for such individuals, both before and after enactment of the Civil Rights Act of 1990. The GAO should, to the greatest extent possible, tie changes in these statistics to the Civil Rights Act of 1990. We also encourage the GAO to develop other statistics which would measure the changes in equal employment opportunities resulting from the Act.

We would also like for the GAO to report on the effects that the 1990 Civil Rights Act would have on employment practices, personnel policies, and other business decisions. Throughout the study, we would like for the GAO to focus its study on smaller businesses.

We would like the GAO to conduct this study over a three year period, commencing on the date of implementation of the Act, with regular reports from the study provided every six months. The study should ultimately include recommendations for amendments to the Act, should undesirable consequences be discovered.

We look forward to talking further with the GAO about undertaking this study.

Sincerely,

David Pryor, Max Baucus, Dale Bumpers, Kent Conrad, Jim Exon, Dennis DeConcini, Sam Nunn, David Berin, Ed Perry.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I rise today in strong opposition to the so-called conference report compromise on S. 2104.

Following recent Supreme Court decisions in the area of employment discrimination, the proponents of the original bill claimed it was necessary to restore the basic protections under title VII. No one denies that there should be protection from discrimination in the workplace.

However, the legislation passed by the Senate and the House went far beyond their stated goals of restoration and protecting employees from discriminatory practices. It would have created a system where employers must hire by quotas or face litigation. In adopting title VII in 1964 Congress specifically rejected quota hiring and the idea that preferential treatment should be granted in employment practice based on statistics.

Unfortunately, the conference report now before us with its cosmetic changes to the Kennedy-Hawkins bill is still a quota bill and would continue to create a violation based on statistics. The report language would continue to encourage plaintiff attorneys to file discrimination suits whenever they can show a mere statistical imbalance in an employer's work force.

It is my belief that the changes to redefine "business necessity" have not adequately addressed the problems from the original bill. The current language would still put an employer at substantial risk, even when hiring is done based on legitimate business reasons, which have long been established by prior Surpeme Court decisions.

In a letter from Attorney General Thornburgh to Senator DOLE outlining the administration's strong objections to the so-called compromise, the Attorney General stated and I quote:

The definition of business necessity is essentially unchanged. (It) prohibits (employers) from offering other legitimate business justifications that have been recognized as permissible by the Supreme Court for many years.

It is clear the "business necessity" language does not address the administration's major concern that an employer be allowed to defend a challenged business practice based on the reason for adopting the challenged practice.

Mr. President, this bill would still shift the burden to employers with a statistical imbalance of workers to justify their employment practices, even where the plaintiff cannot show that any particular practice led to the disparity.

There have been some changes requiring a complainant to allege with particularity the specific practice or practices which are discriminatory. However, these changes were more in form than substance and the exception to the particularity requirement completely swallows the rule.

Under the so-called compromise, a complaining party can still prove a violation merely by showing a statistical imbalance attributed to a group of employment practices.

Also, in an effort to blunt criticism, new language has been added to assert that nothing in the bill would "require or encourage an employer to adopt hiring or promotion quotas. * * *" The Attorney General responded to this new language in his letter, which I mentioned earlier, to Senator DOLE. He stated, and I quote:

As we have repeatedly pointed out, * * * the trouble with the bill is not that it explicitly encourages or requires quotas, but that it will inevitably result in quotas being adopted * * * to avoid the cost and trouble of disparate impact lawsuits under the bill. * * *

Mr. President, I have briefly discussed some of the major problems with the conference report. Other, equally important and objectionable language, is in the conference report concerning compensatory and punitive damages, attorney fees provisions, retroactivity, and other issues.

In short, the problems with this bill have not been cured and the Attorney General stated, and I quote, "Accordingly, the President will be compelled to veto S. 2104 in its current form." End of quote.

Mr. President, the Senate is on notice that the President will not sign this bill into law. The proper course now is to return this bill to the conference committee with instructions to accept the Kassebaum/Gorton alternative which he will sign.

I yield the floor.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise today to join my colleagues in commending the conferees in reaching a compromise on the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

We have made great gains over the years protecting the civil liberties for the people of the United States. Everybody, regardless of race, ethnicity, religion, sex or physical handicap, deserves fair and equal treatment. This legislation before us today would restore and strengthen antidiscriminatory laws in the workplace. In addition, it enables victims of intentional discriminatory practices to be awarded up to $150,000 in punitive damages.

The intention of this body is to codify the landmark 1971 U.S. Supreme Court decision on overt or unintentional job discrimination cases as set forth in Griggs versus Duke Power. The 1989 Wards Cove interpretation challenged this 18-year-old precedent and shifted the burden of proof from the employer to the victim of discrimination.

In 1964, Congress passed the first sweeping Civil Rights bill to secure civil liberties for all Americans. This feat would not have been possible without the strong and judicious guidance of the high court. Recent rulings, however, indicate a departure from the once revered practices of the Supreme Court. Where we once turned towards the Court to safeguard our basic rights and freedoms, we must now turn to Congress.

Mr. President, civil rights must be preserved and strengthened. Some critics argue that this bill is about quotas. This is untrue because quotas were neither enforced nor mandated under the previous Griggs ruling. And, I do not foresee this happening now.

Therefore, businesses will not be unduly burdened. What this bill is about is the right of the working people of the United States to fair and equal treatment in the workplace.

I urge my colleagues to support the adoption of the conference report language on S. 2104, the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise today to indicate my support for the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990. I compliment the sponsors of the bill and the Senate and House conferees for their tireless work over the past days, weeks, and months. In particular, I commend the recent efforts of Senator SPECTER and Senator HATCH to incorporate compromise language in the conference report that addresses many of the concerns of the Bush administration and the business community.

In cases of disparate impact, the Hatch-Specter compromise language clarifies the definition of "business necessity," and requires employees filing complaints to prove the specific practice responsible for disparate impact, except where an employee does not make relevant records available. The bill is also amended to allay fears regarding the quota issue by providing that nothing in the bill should be interpreted even to encourage an employer to adopt quotas. The compromise language also removes this bill from the current debate over "comparable worth."

Some have raised the concern that this legislation will prohibit employers from hiring on the basis of ability. Unfortunately, some employers still do not look past a person's color or gender to take ability into consideration. The Civil Rights Act of 1990 ensures that race and sex are not barriers to participation in the workplace. Instead, employers will be asked to evaluate employees solely on the basis of their abilities and qualifications.

Over the past year, I have been involved with the Workforce 2000 Task Force, a working group on the Labor and Human Resources Committee that is examining ways that our Nation should respond to the changing composition of the work force, as we approach the year 2000. Between now and the end of this century, women and minorities will account for 91 percent of the net growth in America's work force. By the year 2000, 47 percent of our work force will be women and 15 percent will be nonwhite. In an era of increasing competitiveness, America's future will depend on its ability to utilize the talents and productive capability of all its citizens. Equal employment opportunity for women and racial minorities is a matter of simple justice and fairness. But it is also a matter of economic necessity, if we are to remain competitive in the world.

Mr. President, I know President Bush to be a principled man who believes in justice, fairness, and equal employment opportunities for all Americans. For this reason, I am disturbed by Attorney General Thornburgh's recent communication expressing the President's intent to veto the Civil Rights Act, even with the Hatch-Specter compromise language. I respectfully request that the President reevaluate his position on the Civil Rights Act, and sign this critical civil rights legislation into law.

Mr. ADAMS. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the swift passage of the conference report of the Civil Rights Act. This bill reaffirms our commitment, not just as a legislative body, but as a society, to the fundamental issues of fairness and equality in employment.

I am amazed that in 1990 we are still hearing many of the same tired arguments used to deny minorities and women the right to fight injustice, prejudice, and inequality in the work place. For over 25 years, opponents of civil rights legislation have argued that the effect of these bills will be the imposition of hiring quotas. Over and over they have made their arguments, and over and over they come up short.

As an original cosponsor of this legislation, I have, once again, witnessed the resurrection of the quota argument, and again it does not apply. This bill will not impose or encourage quotas, but it will return a sense of equality and justice to the employment arena that has been lost since the Supreme Court's decisions in Martin versus Wilks, Patterson versus McLean, and Wards Cove versus Atonio.

These rulings marked an erosion of the more than 25 years of progress made in eliminating discrimination in the workplace. I am proud that today we will reverse this trend, and again send a message to employers throughout this country that the American people will not tolerate discrimination.

The intent of Congress in previous civil rights legislation was not to allow business the loopholes and trap doors by which they might discriminate. Our intent has been, and must continue to be, to guarantee every citizen, regardless of race, color, national origin, religious affiliation, or sex, the right to seek employment based upon their abilities. I am confident that the conference report before us will maintain this commitment.

For over a year, we have struggled to develop a comprehensive, effective bill that resolves many of the concerns voiced by the business community without altering the intent of impact of this bill. To achieve this end, the bill has been modified to specifically reject the use of quotas, and redefine the process under which a discrimination case can be brought. And yet, we are told it is not enough. Well, Mr. President, it is enough.

As we watch the people of Eastern Europe tear down the totalitarian infrastructure which once judged individuals more by their political and ethnic affiliation, than their abilities, we must rededicate ourselves to the principle of full equality. For too long, our society divided itself by race and gender. We have begun to overcome this injustice, and while much remains to be done, this will at least right the wrongs of the past few years. I will vote for the conference report, and should the President choose to veto the Civil Rights Act, I will vote to override.

Mr. President, during the many months this legislation has been before the Senate, initially before the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, of which I am a member, I have had the most capable assistance of Mike Riley of my staff. Like many of the talented young individuals who serve on the staff here in the U.S. Senate, Mike has worked many long and hard hours during the 101st Congress. Mike Riley recently informed me of his decision to return to his hometown of Seattle, and will be leaving my staff when our legislative work for the year is completed. I am confident that Mike Riley's talent and dedication, witnessed so splendidly on this bill, and other legislation that came before the Labor Committee, will serve him well in the years to come. But I wanted to take this opportunity to thank him, in particular, for his work on this historically important legislation.

STATUTORY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, with respect to section 11(a) of the conference report, I share the concerns expressed by many interested persons that Federal courts in some recent cases have given civil rights laws an unfairly cramped interpretation, for example, Patterson v. McLean Credit Union, 109 S. Ct. 2363 (1989).

However, I also fear that the statutory construction provision contained in section 11 of this conference report could be misconstrued to go too far in responding to some of these recent court decisions. I am concerned this broad statutory construction provision could be misinterpreted as directing the Federal courts to give civil rights laws an unduly expansive reading inconsistent with the intent of Congress.

In my view, all laws should be interpreted consistent with their legislative intent and the applicable canons of statutory construction.

Senator KENNEDY, in light of my comments, can you further explain section 11(a) of the conference report?

Mr. KENNEDY. Subsection 11(a) represents a codification of the time-honored principle of statutory construction that "a remedial statute should be liberally construed in order to effectuate the remedial purpose for which it was established." Sutherland Stat. Const., Sec. 60.01 (4th Ed. 1986). Section 11(a) simply puts into law a canon of statutory construction that has been traditionally applied.

Therefore, when interpreting civil rights statutes, courts should be guided by Congress' clear intent of assuring equal rights and opportunity for all Americans and providing effective remedies against discrimination, and should regard section 11(a) as authority for an interpretation of the civil rights laws which effectuates that intent. On the other hand, this broad construction provision should not be construed to require an unduly expansive reading inconsistent with the intent of Congress, as reflected in the statute and the legislative history.

EVIDENTIARY RULES

Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I am concerned that paragraph (2) of the definition of "business necessity" contained in the conference report may result in confusion when courts interpret this important term.

Paragraph (2) provides:

In deciding whether the standards for business necessity have been met, unsubstantiated opinion and hearsay are not sufficient; demonstrable evidence is required. The defendant may offer as evidence statistical reports, validation studies, expert testimony, performance evaluations, written records or notes related to the practice or decision, testimony of individuals with knowledge of the practice or decision involved, other evidence relevant to the employment decision, prior successful experience and other evidence as permitted by the Federal Rules of Evidence, and the court shall give such weight, if any, to such evidence as is appropriate.

While I agree that title VII should explicitly provide that an employer must use demonstrable evidence in order to meet its burden with respect to business necessity, the remaining portions of this paragraph trouble me.

During consideration of this bill, I asked Mr. Steve Jones, an attorney from Little Rock who has both initiated and defended civil rights cases, to review the proposed legislation. Mr. Jones wrote me that, in his view, much of the remaining language in paragraph 2 is "unnecessary surplusage" and that "in (his) experience such unnecessary surplusage in statutes only leads to confusion and ambiguity on the part of the courts having to interpret and implement those statutes."

In particular, it could be argued that the remaining language contained in paragraph 2 may serve as authority for applying special rules regarding the admissibility of evidence that may be offered by an employer to meet its burden with respect to "business necessity."

Senator KENNEDY, in light of these concerns, can you further explain paragraph 2 of the subsection which defines "business necessity" contained in the conference report?

Mr. KENNEDY. The purpose of paragraph 2 is to state expressly that demonstrable evidence is required to prove "business necessity," and to list examples of the types of evidence that may be received by the court "as permitted by the Federal Rules of Evidence" on the issue of business necessity, making it clear that the court shall give such weight, if any, to such evidence as is appropriate. Therefore, the additional language contained in paragraph 2, to which Mr. Jones referred, is simply illustrative and should not cause confusion.

Moreover, paragraph 2 is not intended to alter the application of the Federal Rules of Evidence when evidence is offered on the issue of business necessity.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, today the Senate is considering the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990. I am proud to be an original cosponsor of this very important piece of legislation which would ensure fair and effective civil rights enforcement. Last year, the Surpreme Court made a sharp departure from precedent and seriously weakened civil rights in this country.

Mr. President, it is time for America to move ahead in civil rights, not backward. I hope that President Bush fulfills his responsibility to the American people by signing this bill and furthering the case of equal opportunity for all.

Mr. President, let me say I am pleased that this bill includes some coverage of congressional employees. But we still have work to do. We have all heard the news stories about the working conditions suffered here on Capitol Hill. By exempting itself—over many years—from important civil rights and labor laws, Congress has denied to the men and women who serve us every day here on Capitol Hill the rights and protections of other American workers.

I have long been an advocate of extending to the Congress the same civil rights and employment protections which are rightly applied to the rest of the country. Congressional workers deserve no less. Last year, for the sixth time, I introduced the Fair Employment in Congress Act to remedy this problem. I know that Senator GLENN and other Members of this body have also discussed ideas and proposals in this area.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990 is an important first step in changing the situation. The bill extends to Senate employees the protections of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Americans With Disabilities Act, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, and the Rehabilitation Act of 1973.

My bill, the Fair Employment in Congress Act, would extend to Congress the coverage of not only these laws, but also the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Occupational Safety and Health Act and the Civil Service Reform Act. The Congress must go further and apply these laws to its own employees. Congressional employees deserve no less than a safe workplace and fair working conditions.

I am hopeful we can work together to build on the positive first steps we have taken today—so that we may bring fairness and equity to the people who serve us faithfully every day.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I have a question about section 4 of the bill, which will govern claims of disparate impact under title VII. There is a new provision, in subsection (k), which was added by the conference committee on October 12, 1990, involving comparable worth. My understanding is that the purpose of that new provision is to make clear that subsection (k) does not overrule existing precedents involving comparable worth. Therefore, this new provision does not affect precedents involving pay or wage discrimination, such as County of Washington v. Gunther, 452 U.S. 161 (1981) and Bazemore v. Friday, 478 U.S. 385 (1986). Moreover, comparable worth cases will be treated as they were before Wards Cove, and therefore this provision does not affect existing precedents involving comparable worth. Do you agree with my statement of the purpose of this provision?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I hope that today we are nearing the end of the lengthy effort to restore the fundamental promise of fairness and equal opportunity for all Americans. The conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990 is the product of thoughtful negotiation among three of my colleagues with unique knowledge about these legal questions, working with the distinguished attorney and former Cabinet member, William T. Coleman, and with the administration. Most of the questions raised about the bill when it came before the Senate last summer have been resolved to the satisfaction of those who had opposed it. And yet, the White House and the Justice Department continue to tell us that the President will veto the bill.

Mr. President, it would be a sad mistake for President Bush to veto this bill, not because it would not become law. I am confident that my colleagues would override a Presidential veto. Rather, a veto by the President would just be wrong.

For minorities, women and others facing shameful discrimination, the Supreme Court indicated several times in the last few terms that the legal protections they had counted on for 18 years or more would no longer be respected by the Court. It then became our turn to act, to write those protections clearly into law so that Americans would not be vulnerable to the ideological drift of any Supreme Court. And I'm proud that we did act so quickly to reassure all Americans that their rights would be held safe by this branch of Government. Now it is time for the President to make clear that the executive branch shares our commitment to justice and equal opportunity for all.

This bill sets our Nation forth once again on the path of continuous progress toward the open and free society envisioned in the Declaration of Independence. This is not a quota bill. It's a basic rights bill. The conference report language makes that clear. If the President vetoes this legislation he will be out of step with the overwhelming sentiment in Congress and most Americans' sense of fair play. I will vote for the Civil Rights Act of 1990 as often as it takes to make it the law of the land.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I rise to express my support for adoption of the conference report on the Civil Rights Act of 1990.

Last year the Supreme Court made a number of decisions which took us backward. The decisions narrowed the application of important civil rights laws and made it more difficult for victims of discrimination to seek judicial remedies. The Civil Rights Act of 1990 would restore and strengthen our civil rights laws in a balanced way.

For example, the Court ruled that a law that had been interpreted for over 100 years as banning all employment discrimination only applied to discrimination in hiring and not discrimination on the job. The bill before us overturns that decision and restores the prior law banning all employment discrimination.

The conference report before us includes several provisions not included in the Senate-passed legislation which re-emphasize that the legislation will promote opportunity.

The bill states explicitly that nothing in it should be construed to require or encourage hiring or promotion quotas. Still, people have asserted that this is a quota bill. They base this contention primarily on the provisions of the bill restoring the 1971 Griggs decision and extending the current right of racial minorities to recover damages for intentional employment discrimination to women, religious and ethnic minorities. I'd like to address both points.

The bill overturns last year's Supreme Court decision in Wards Cove versus Antonio and restores prior law. Since the Supreme Court's unanimous Griggs decision in 1971, the burden of showing that employment practices that have a disparate impact—that affect qualified minority applicants in a disproportionate manner—are required by business necessity has been placed on employers.

For over 18 years the Griggs rule had been the law and did not lead to hiring quotas. Instead, it increased job opportunities. It was a common sense decision that helped people to be treated on the basis of their skills and not on the color of their skin, their sex, or the sound of their last name.

The legislation before us restores Griggs. It takes the definition of business necessity word for word from the Griggs decision and states explicitly that the purpose of the definition of business necessity is to codify Griggs and overturns last year's Supreme Court decision. Given that Griggs did not result in quotas, and that the legislation quotes from Griggs and states that its purpose is to codify Griggs, arguments that this bill will result in quotas are just not credible.

Some have also criticized the provision which strengthens current law by granting women and religious and ethnic minorities the same right to recover damages for intentional employment discrimination that racial minorities currently have.

Discrimination is wrong whether it's on the basis of someone's race, sex, or ethnic or religious background. This legislation will provide people discriminated against because of their religion, ethnicity, or sex the same rights that people discriminated against on the basis of race have had for years. I see no reason to believe that extending equal rights to minorities other than racial minorities should result in a litigation bonanza or hiring quotas, as some have suggested.

Under current law, damage awards for intentional employment discrimination have been infrequent and moderate. A study of cases over the last 10 years found that in over 85 percent of the cases where damages were sought, no damages were awarded at all. Of the cases where they were granted, the average award was about $40,000, and in only three cases were the damage awards more than $200,000.

To reassure employers, the conference report caps punitive damages at $150,000 or the amount of the granted compensatory damages, whichever is greater.

The Civil Rights Act of 1990 will restore and strengthen our civil rights laws to the scope which Congress intended and which the courts had interpreted them to have until the Supreme Court's decisions last term. This legislation takes us forward. It will promote equality of opportunity. It is balanced and needed legislation and I support it.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, today we will take perhaps one of the most important civil rights actions since the passage of the historic Civil Rights Act of 1964.

I hope we make the right choice. Over a quarter century of civil rights progress depends upon it.

Simply put, a vote for the conference report is a vote for quota-based employment decisions.

Proponents label this assertion a red herring, just an excuse to torpedo the civil rights bill.

Mr. President, it is not an excuse. It is a legitimate concern, so much so that proponents have repeatedly modified their proposals.

Indeed, it was not too long ago that we found ourselves considering the Senate version of the Civil Rights Restoration Act on the floor. I believe it actually was the third week in July.

At that time, I argued that language under sections 3 and 4 of the bill would result in quota-based hiring by employers.

Though I have never fancied myself as much of a prophet, I must have been right that day in July when I joined 33 of my colleagues in voting against the Senate bill for that reason.

Otherwise, today I suspect we would not be considering much different, and I would add to be fair, much improved, language.

Specifically, Mr. President, I believe the conference report greatly improves upon earlier versions of the civil rights bill on the important question of particularity, the question of whether or not plaintiffs bringing forth dispariate impact cases should be required, as they had been for 18 years, to demonstrate that a specific practice or set of practices actually result in discrimination.

On page 6 of the conference report, a complaining party "shall be required to demonstrate which specific practice or practices are responsible for the dispariate impact in all cases unless the court finds after discovery: First, that a respondent has destroyed, concealed or refused to produce existing records that are necessary to make this showing; or second, that the respondent failed to keep such records."

Though questions have been raised about the phrase "such records" and what exactly the conference means by the phrase, I am certain it means those that are necessary to make the showing.

But beyond this issue, Mr. President, I think a much more important concern is the definition of business necessity contained in the conference report.

Business necessity is defined as a practice or group of practices which bear a significant relationship to successful performace of the job, or in the case of employment decisions which involve rules regarding methadone, alcohol, or tobacco use or plant closing, for example.

That is the standard by which employers must justify their hiring and promotion decisions.

It is not the standard utilized in Griggs despite the provision in the conference report which indicates that it is meant to codify the meaning of business necessity as used in Griggs.

It is a much higher, much more impossible standard to meet.

If it is intended to reflect Griggs, the conference report would read: bears a "manifest relationship to the employment in question" or "serves the legitimate employment goals of the employer."

That is the language utilized in the Kassebaum-Gorton substitute.

It is not the language of the conference report.

With the passage of the conference report, we will have eliminated employer's reliance upon tests or qualifications which represent sound methods of doing business and which are not intended to discriminate.

Mr. President, if we pass the conference report in its present form, we will undermine the original intent of the 1964 act by making race, gender, ethnicity, religion, and disability, predominant factors in an employer's decision-making process.

In short, we will have left otherwise law-abiding employers with no choice but to hire by criteria that relate to race or sex or creed or some classification other than merit, to avoid costly litigation.

We will condone quota-based employment practices which are not founded on merit but on membership in a particular ethnic, racial, or religious group or gender to avoid costly litigation.

This type of system—a quota system—is insulting to women and minorities who rightfully have been selected on the basis of merit. It suggests that these very talented men and women are somehow tokens instead of the high achievers that they are.

That is wrong. That is unfair. And that is why we should oppose the conference report.

I do not arrive at this position easily.

Prior to the consideration of the Civil Rights Restoration Act, I never voted against a civil rights bill in over 23 years of public service.

I am very proud of my strong civil rights record, first as a California State assemblyman—appointing the first black chief consultant to a legislative committee in the history of the State; later as mayor of San Diego—supporting a strong but fair affirmative action policy and making appointments of many highly qualified women and minorities—beyond parity in at least one case—to city boards and commissions; and now as U.S. Senator—cosponsoring the Americans With Disabilities Act and voting to override a Presidential veto of the Grove City bill.

But I will not be enticed by political expediency to support civil rights legislation which, under the guise of promoting a discrimination-free workplace, will force employers to institute a hiring and promotion process based on numerical quotas instead of individual merit.

I want an America in which individuals are judged on the basis of what they are and who they are, not the color of their skin, nor the ethnic group to which they belong nor what religion they practice or fail to practice.

Mr. President, I believe we can still pass a good civil rights bill—one which we can be proud of.

The language offered by Senator KASSEBAUM was very clear on the Griggs question.

In order to establish an unlawful employment practice in a disparate impact case, a complaining party must demonstrate by statistical evidence that a group of employment practices results in discrimination and that a particular employment practice, or each employment practice within the group, results in discrimination.

And as I have stated earlier, the Kassebaum substitute is straightforward and quite literally spells out our intent on the question of business necessity, the intent which proponents of the conference report claim is theirs when they speak of returning to the Griggs standard.

Mr. President, let's not allow good intentions to lead us in unintended bitter irony back down the road to a time when the color of one's skin or one's gender rather than merit determined an individual's lot in life.

Let's not correct old discrimination by creating new discrimination, reverse discrimination under a quota system.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate. If not, the yeas and nays are ordered.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Mr. President, I note an insufficient number on the floor. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate proceeds to the consideration of the conference report, S. 1430, the national service bill, it be considered under the following time limitations, 5 minutes for Senator HATCH, 10 minutes for Senator KENNEDY, 5 minutes for Senator GRAHAM, 5 minutes for Senator DODD, 5 minutes for Senator NUNN, 5 minutes for Senator PELL 5 minutes for Senator MIKULSKI, 5 minutes for Senator DOLE, the last 5 minutes before the vote for Senator MITCHELL, that no motions to recommit the conference report be in order, and that when all time is used or yielded back the Senate proceed to vote on the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, reserving the right to object and I shall not object, I want to make certain. Let us see on that side then you would have, what, 40 minutes is that it, and we would have 15 minutes on this side? We have no problem with that. We do not want to have to wait 10 minutes for each speaker to come over. Could we agree on a total time, at the end of that time we would vote, or just vote at, say, 7?

Mr. HATCH. Let us make it 7:30.

Mr. DOLE. That would not give them enough time.

Mr. KENNEDY. No later than 8, quarter of 8.

Mr. DOLE. 7:45.

Mr. HATCH. 7:45.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask further the vote on this be at 7:45. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. DOLE. The vote will be at 7:45.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Republican leader is correct.

NATIONAL AND COMMUNITY SERVICE ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I submit a report of the committee of conference on S. 1430 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 1430) to enhance National and Community Service and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their repective Houses this report, signed by a majority of the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of the conference report.

(The conference report will be printed in the House proceedings of the RECORD.)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield such time as I might use.

I would like to inform the Senate about where we are on the civil rights bill. We now have a time certain to vote on the Voluntary Service Act, which is a bipartisan effort, which now has the support of the administration. We will vote on that at 7:45 with the allocation of time as previously described. It is my hope by that time we will be able to have time definite to vote on the Dole motion and also a time definite to vote on the conference report.

There is still one Senator who desires to be able to be heard on the issue. We will attempt over the period of this time and the vote to try to accommodate his particular interests so that we will be able to at the end of the vote give hopefully a precise time as to when we will vote on the minority leader's motion as well as on the conference report. We are unable to do that at this moment, but we hope to be able to do it, or have the majority leader do it later in the course of the discussion of the voluntary service bill.

Mr. President, I am pleased that the conferees have reached a bipartisan agreement on the National and Community Service Act of 1990 that has the support of the President.

This legislation is a reaffirmation of our national commitment to lend a helping hand to our fellow citizens and our communities. It is also a hopeful sign that in spite of the divided government that plagues Congress and the administration, we have not lost the ability to work together on questions that deeply affect our future.

The challenges we face today are serious. But many of these are local, and will respond to local efforts. Crime, drug abuse, homelessness, illiteracy, and pollution are problems that confront all our communities. One way to deal with these problems more effectively is by rekindling the sense of service and commitment to others that has always been the hallmark of America at its best Our greatest resource is our people, and it is time to ask them for their help.

This legislation is call to action for the Nation. It will fund programs for students from kindergarten to college to serve their communities, and for older Americans to volunteer in the schools, It will expand the Nation's network of full-time youth corps programs, which bring young people together to address environmental and human service needs. It will fund innovative programs offering educational scholarships and housing benefits for those who make a substantial commitment to service. And it will provide funding for the President's Points of Light Foundation, which will replicate and encourage the Nation's best volunteer efforts. The legislation encourages all of these streams of service at a cost of only $62 million in fiscal year 1991, $105 million in fiscal year 1992, and $120 million in fiscal year 1993.

The National and Community Service Act of 1990 is an investment that will reap benefits well beyond its modest cost. The volunteer service that it can generate will help revitalize our cities and rural areas, and provide assistance to those in society who need our help the most.

This measure will remind Americans of all ages of the responsibilities of citizenship, but its most important result may well be its effect on young citizens in the earliest grades. No age is too young to begin meeting the needs of the community. By teaching young schoolchildren to help others, we will also be establishing the values that will keep America strong for generations to come.

About a year and a half ago at the time we had the 25th anniversary of the Peace Corps, I had an opportunity to attend a luncheon with the first volunteers for the Peace Corps. I asked all of the young people at the table why they volunteered. Each of them gave essentially the same answer—it was the first time any of them had been asked to do anything for anyone else.

That ringing response, Mr. President, shows the importance of the Peace Corps, the Action programs, the Literacy Corps, and other kinds of service programs that have reached out to young people and old people in this country.

I think most of us would believe that voluntarism starts at home, and second in the church, and third in the community. One thing that has really been lacking, however, is national challenge to the young people of this country to give something back to their community and to America for all it has given to them. So I commend all of my colleagues. I know all of them will speak during the course of this brief debate. Even though the time for debate is short, the significance of this legislation will echo in our country for years to come.

I would like to acknowledge the contributions of my colleagues who made this legislation possible. First, Senator PELL, who deserves great credit for being one of the first to propose legislation in this area; Senator MIKULSKI, who has been long involved in community service, and has a very active and important role in the shaping of the legislation; Senator DODD, for the youth corps proposal; Senator NUNN, who offered a very innovative and creative program close to 3 years ago.

Senator BUMPERS, Senator GRAHAM, and Senator ROBB also contributed to the proposal, and, of course, Senator HATCH and Senator DURENBERGER were enormously important and invaluable in helping shape this whole program in our committee. Senator HATCH, in particular, worked hard to ensure that we had a bipartisan effort here on the floor of the U.S. Senate which carried overwhelmingly and was instrumental in bringing the administration aboard.

I think all of us tonight when we take action on this should take our hats off to Senator HATCH for the extraordinary effort and work that he was involved in in terms of moving the administration in support of this program.

Very briefly, Mr. President, what we have tried to do is take the half a dozen different approaches that have been suggested by the members that I have mentioned here and others. Most of those recommendations were proposed in independent pieces of legislation.

What we have tried to do in the Human Resources Committee is bring those elements together into one program, and work with the House to develop a similar program. The purpose was to try to put these programs into place, and then to do an evaluation of these programs in 3 years to find out which are the most successful, which have been able to challenge young and old people alike, and which have been able to return to the community the kind of initiative and idealism which we hope to attract.

One particular aspect of the program which I favored was a school-based program, kindergarten through college. We have an example of this in Springfield, MA. In Springfield, the first graders and kindergarten students fold napkins that are used for feeding programs for the homeless; the fourth graders adopt individuals in nursing homes, and every single day they spend 5 minutes calling the individual that they adopted, visiting that individual in the nursing home on their birthday and also on Valentine's Day; seventh graders develop pantomimes which they bring around to all of the programs for elderly people—a wide variety of different programs developed by the young people themselves.

The programs have an education component, and involve meaningful service to the community. Those are the criteria included in our legislation for the school-based program, which was originally proposed based on programs in our own State which have had extraordinary success.

It is my fundamental belief that once you begin to get individuals started in voluntarism—give them that opportunity to go through the school process—it will become part of their lives, and they will continue to help others long after they are out of the educational system.

Mr. President, I again thank our colleagues. I think this is a balanced program. It includes the elements proposed by many of us who have been involved in this concept of voluntarism.

It includes the President's Points of Light Foundation. We have acknowledged the leadership that President Bush provided when he spoke about voluntarism in the course of his national campaign. We have attempted over the last year to work with President Bush and the administration in trying to develop this program. I am delighted, I think all of us are, that we have been able to gain the support of the President for this particular approach.

Mr. President, I hope we will pass this with an overwhelming vote, and I am grateful to all of those who have been a part of this innovative legislation. I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I am also pleased to join with Senator KENNEDY and all of these other Senators who have worked so hard on this conference report, the "National Community Services Act of 1990."

I want to compliment all of them because they have all worked on this bill to make it a strong bipartisan bill and one which the White House can accept and support.

I feel very good about that. America does have a strong history of people helping people. I salute that spirit here today. This legislation represents and promotes that spirit.

President Bush has recognized the importance of volunteers to our communities and the contributions they make every day to the quality of life we have here in America. The Thousand Points of Light is not just a cliche. Volunteers make a difference. We see the good effects of their efforts every day.

I want to commend President Bush for his support of this legislation and for his efforts to ensure a package that will allow State leaders a chance to accept the President's challenge to invigorate our State and local communities to the call of national service.

The conference report before us today includes the President's Points of Light Foundation, which will inspire individuals and institutions to engage in community service, identify successful volunteer efforts, reward and duplicate their successful programs elsewhere, and discover, develop, and encourage new leaders for volunteer and community service.

Another part of this legislation calls for more voluntarism at the State level. This State grant program represents the best structure for these volunteer programs. I am pleased that the House was willing to accept the Senate structure which will permit every State in the Union to participate in a national service program and to promote voluntarism in its own way. Flexibility is given to States to choose a volunteer program that addresses their specific needs. The selection includes community-based and school-based volunteer programs; a youth service and conservation corps; a full- or part-time volunteer corps; or the development of their own innovative programs that address their specific needs. In Utah, the legislature has passed a bill which sets up a Youth Conservation Corps. This program for high-risk youth will help perform the immense task of maintaining and improving the vast amount of urban and rural land in our State while educating our youth about the value and satisfaction of hard work at the same time. I recognize, however, that every State may not want this specific approach and would prefer to develop different programs. States should have that flexibility.

Mr. President, I want to thank my colleague, Senator KENNEDY, for all of his efforts in putting this legislation together. His commitment to this legislation has been the impetus for bringing all sides together to develop a consensus bill that now enjoys wide support. It is indeed a tribute to his brother that this new effort comes 30 years after his call for volunteer spirit through the Peace Corps and other successful national volunteer programs like VISTA and Foster Grandparents. These are legacies for all Americans. Today's efforts, I hope, will be viewed 30 years from now as a success and a tribute to the bipartisan work of President Bush and President Kennedy, and Senator KENNEDY.

I also appreciate the hard work of Representatives HAWKINS and GOODLING and all of the House and Senate conferees and their staff members. In particular, I want to thank Shirley Sagawa, Nick Littlefield, Gene Sofer, and Kathy Marshall, and, of course, Nancy Taylor of my staff. This legislation has taken a lot of effort, but will be helpful in providing another outlet for volunteers across this Nation.

Mr. President, this legislation will not by itself make America a better place to live. The Points of Light Foundation will not by itself beam light around the country. But, we can, by enacting this bill, take a position in support of volunteers. And, that, we ought to do. A vote for passage of this bill sends a supportive message to American volunteers, you matter, you are important, and you make a difference in the lives of all Americans.

Mr. President, I urge the support of all of my colleagues for passage of this conference report.

Mr. President, again, I thank my colleagues, particularly, Senator KENNEDY, Senator DURENBERGER, Senator PELL, Senator DODD, Senator MIKULSKI, and, of course, Senator DOLE who played a big role in this, Senator GRAHAM, and others; Senator MITCHELL as well; and above all, the White House who put it all together, helped us put it together, and helped us to bring this to pass.

I yield the floor, Mr. President.

Ms. MIKULSKI addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROBB). The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Ms. MIKULSKI. Thank you, Mr. President.

I rise today to urge my fellow Senators to support the National and Community Service Act of 1990.

I want to thank Senators KENNEDY, NUNN, PELL, DODD, HATCH, and other people on the other side of the aisle, you, Mr. President, for helping formulate this legislation.

Mr. President, we have a very historic opportunity. We are about to pass a legislative framework that really creates a continuum of national and community service. But most of all, it cultivates the habits of the heart, from primary grades all the way through life.

And it instills the most basic value in our society of neighbor helping neighbor. The National Community Service Act brings dreams within reach.

Invest in our young people by investing in our communities. It puts full- and part-time volunteers to work in their own communities, delivering meals on wheels, weekend meals on wheels, helping the illiterate, building habitats for humanity. It turns away from Wall Street and the Wall Street values of excess that left our Nation on the verge of financial bankruptcy. It turns back to the values of Main Street.

When we talk about the habits of the heart, it does mean neighbor being concerned about neighbor.

Senator KENNEDY outlined how this bill provides this continuum. Let me focus on my part of the legislation.

Mr. President, in a time when people question the efficacy of Government programs, they have every right to question why a new program. Well, Mr. President, this does not create more government; it creates more opportunity, and it creates more earned opportunity. It gives our young people a chance, that through their own work and own sweat equity, they can earn a voucher, by doing community service that they can use to reduce either student debt, or hold as a nest egg toward home ownership, first-time home ownership.

Mr. President, what this means is that we are not talking about a giveaway program. We are not talking about another program with big, bloated bureaucracy. We are talking about a program run by the States, under efficient administration by Governors, and by which young people, in my part of the bill, would offer their services to work two weekends a month, or other time equivalent, delivering those weekend meals on wheels, building habitats for humanity, running gifted and talented programs in inner city neighborhoods. And out of that they would earn a $2,000 voucher that they could use to reduce their student debt or hold for their first-time home ownership.

This meets certain needs within our society. When I travel around our State, my kids and their moms and dads tell me their families are either tuition poor or mortgage poor. What this does is give our kids the opportunity to deal with each one of those.

The other issue that it deals with, is that we need more volunteers, particularly on weekends, to do those services that Government cannot provide and should not provide.

Mr. President, what it does is limit the voucher program to a beneficiary to 3 years. Hopefully, at the end of 3 years of being a volunteer firefighter, or doing the services that I described, young people will want to keep on doing them all of their lives. So our kids get a break for their own future, doing important volunteer services, and at the same time learn the habits that maybe you do not learn by reading glitzy magazines, but you learn about it by reading the history of the United States.

So, Mr. President, I hope we adopt this legislation. I thank all who made it possible. I yield the floor.

Mr. GRAHAM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I come here with the feeling of the Biblical story of the prodigal son. There is a good son in this bill, many good sons, that are going to make a significant contribution toward the sense of voluntary action and direct participation in our country. I take particular pride in some provisions that relate to encouraging voluntary action, particularly among older Americans, in our schools. Many States have seen the positive impact which that can have in education.

I believe that this national focus and a national clearinghouse of information on school volunteer programs and partnerships will accelerate that movement. Those are very desirable children contained in this legislation.

However, Mr. President, tucked deep in the back of a bill which is 154 pages, beginning at page 150, we come to the prodigal son. Under title VI, miscellaneous provisions, in a bill entitled National and Community Service Act of 1990, we are surprised to find section 601, which is Amtrak waste disposal. Quite a jolting—no pun intended—divergence from the focus of this legislation.

Let me give you a little background as to how this provision happens to be before us tonight, and then I would like to ask the Senator from Utah if he would enter into a brief colloquy in order to put on the RECORD some of the rationale of the provisions.

In the mid-1970's, when the Public Health Service Act, which is now 42 U.S.C. 264 was adopted, there was an exception to the law applicable to Amtrak. Specifically, it said, "shall not apply"—that is the Public Health Service Act—"to waste disposal from railroad conveyances operated in inner city rail passenger service."

It is an anomaly, Mr. President, that here we are, the Federal Government, imposing standards for buses, airplanes, for recreational vehicles, and virtually every other form of transportation known to man. Yet, the one system which is operated by the Federal Government, Amtrak inner city railroad services, is exempt.

What has happened with this exemption over the last 15-plus years? What happened, Mr. President, is a distressing series of blatant violations of State and local environmental laws and violations of the Federal law, but for the fact of this exemption.

In fact, at the present time, Mr. President, the following States either have litigation under way or have lodged complaints with Amtrak due to their practice of dumping human waste in other than approved sanitary facilities. These States include: Arkansas, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and my State of Florida.

Speaking specifically to Florida, approximately 2 years ago an Amtrak train going across one of the beautiful rivers of our State, the St. Johns River in Putnam County, unloaded; unfortunately, below the train at that particular time were a group of fishermen in the St. Johns River who were unloaded upon. That led that local State's attorney to bring action against Amtrak under State and local environmental antipollution laws, and the case was won at the State level.

It was subsequently appealed by Amtrak to a Federal court, where it is now, I believe, in the form of an injunction against enforcement, until this issue of the validity of the exemption can be litigated.

It was that instance which, frankly, brought to my attention for the first time, Mr. President, that there was such an exemption for Amtrak. I was shocked, stunned, to find that we would have such a blatant exemption for a Federal facility from a Federal antipollution and health law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL] for up to 5 minutes.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am delighted that we have reached agreement on the legislation before us. It is a good bill that brings together many fine ideas on how best to renew the ethic of service among our Nation's citizens.

I am, of course, particularly pleased that my own idea of creating a full-time demonstration program with educational benefits is a part of this package. This provision would create a 3-year national service demonstration program. Individuals who volunteer for 1 or 2 years in an established community service program will be eligible to receive up to $5,000 in educational vouchers for each year of service. These may be utilized to cover costs a student may incur while enrolled in a college or career apprenticeship program.

It has always been my belief in that every citizen, rich and poor, should serve our Nation in some way—whether in a military or civilian capacity. The legislation before us makes civilian service possible for people from all walks of life.

National service should be a noble calling, and for succesful completion of that calling, there should be a just reward. Nothing, to my mind is more noble than the opportunity to expand and improve one's mind. And no pursuit is more enobling than education.

Mr. President, I look forward to seeing the wonderful benefits this program will bring to our Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who seeks recognition?

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] for up to 5 minutes.

Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I rise this afternoon to express my strong support for the conference report on the National and Community Service Act of 1990. The measure, as you now have heard, Mr. President, is an omnibus package of service initiatives which through joint Federal-State efforts will offer American citizens of all ages an opportunity to serve their community.

As has already been expressed, I join in my commendation for the chairman of the committee, Senator KENNEDY. A variety of service initiatives were introduced by him, but also by Senators PELL of Rhode Island, MIKULSKI, of Maryland, NUNN of Georgia and myself. We have tried to bring together here in a modified block grant program, this variety of initiatives to try and encourage broader voluntary service in this country.

The measure enjoys, as we know, strong bipartisan support and will in all likelihood enjoy the President's signature.

The bill requires no one to serve. That was a concern of many. It does, however, provide Federal assistance to States choosing to establish or expand service opportunities. A commission on national service will have the authority to receive applications from States to establish service opportunities that range from school-aged programs, to conservation or youth service corps, to full- or part-time service opportunities for adults. Furthermore, the measure provides for in-service and postservice benefits to ensure that Americans of all ages, and from all economic levels, have the opportunity to serve in full-time programs.

These new service opportunities will help to bolster the efforts of our States and communities to tackle the myriad of unmet human and environmental needs. For 25 years Americans have joined the Peace Corps and VISTA to make a difference in communities here at home, and around the globe. However, the opportunities to serve are few in contrast with the need and the interest that exists in this country. Moreover, I strongly believe that the interest to serve would be even greater if we only asked. President Kennedy, more than a quarter of a century ago, asked Americans to serve and they responded. I believe, Mr. President, they would do so again.

Now more than ever before we need to call Americans to contribute to this country. We need to reinvigorate the service ethic for youth and for the betterment of our Nation. We need to make up the ground lost during the 1980's and restore the balance between private citizen and public responsibility. We need the young and old alike to join us in the fights against poverty, illiteracy, homelessness, drug abuse, the destruction of our environment and a variety of other problems facing our Nation.

We need young Americans to know that they can make a difference in their communities. And the opportunity to serve will do just that. The opportunity to serve will provide young people with a sense of accomplishment and pride which many of them desperately need. Where service opportunities exist, youth talk openly about their contributions and personal growth.

Today, at the State and local level, over 50,000 young people have participated in Youth and Conservation Corps programs. The young people have worked in teams with crew leaders to tackle the challenges of their communities. These programs have not only proved to be vital to their communities, they have provided the youth with invaluable training and personal experiences. The Conservation and Youth Service Corps component of S. 1430, which I first introduced on February 2, 1989, as S. 322, will enable States to use the existing model programs to provide similar service opportunities to many more young people.

The language of S. 322, the American Conservation and Youth Service Corps Act of 1989, was modified and incorporated into the omnibus national service package last year. The service opportunity would be limited to youth ranging in age from 16 to 25 for the full-time programs and 15 to 21 for the summer programs. States would be able to apply to the commission to establish or expand Conservation and Youth Corps. Participants would benefit from in-service education and training opportunities while they work full-time in the corps on conservation or human service projects. Participants would also receive vouchers for post-service education and training opportunities for each year of service.

Mr. President, the Conservation and Youth Corps provisions get to the heart of the purpose of our Federal initiatives. There are unmet societal and environmental needs that would greatly benefit from an increased commitment to service on the part of all Americans. There is a willingness by Americans to serve if the opportunities are available. There are programs already in place to serve as models for new or expanded opportunities. And there is proof that participants in service opportunities not only benefit their communities; they benefit themselves.

Mr. President, before concluding my remarks, I thank Senator KENNEDY, Senator PELL, and Senator HATCH, as well as Senator MIKULSKI, and their staff for their leadership on this initiative. National service is not a new concept, but it is one that has waned since the Presidency of John F. Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson. This measure reflects the renewed commitment on our part to inspire Americans to serve. For this reason, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting the conference report on National and Community Service Act of 1990.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Chair recognizes the Republican leader, Mr. DOLE.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I think I will take about 1 minute, the remainder to be yielded to Senator DURENBERGER of Minnesota.

Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report to the National and Community Service Act of 1990. We Americans have a long tradition of helping others, and this legislation represents a continuation of that tradition.

Certainly, no one has provided more leadership on the issue of community service and volunteerism than President Bush. The American public has taken to heart a thousand points of light. By enacting this legislation, we can do much to brighten those lights.

The conference report is a good agreement. It authorizes $287 million over the next 3 years for a number of programs, including the President's points of light foundation, which will recognize model community service programs and encourage individuals and institutions to identify and address their community problems.

I support the decision of the conferees to accept the Senate's structure for the administration of program funds. States will receive funds in the form of block grants, which can be used for a variety of program options. These options include school— and community-based service initiatives, youth corps, full- or part-time service programs, or innovative, individually designed projects. Community problems and needs vary all across the Nation—because of this diversity, service projects should not be determined by Washington bureaucrats, but rather, at the State and local level. This provision gives the States and communities needed flexibility and, at the same time, does not undermine volunteer service programs already underway.

I am also pleased to see that two amendments I proposed during Senate floor debate on this bill have been accepted by the conferees. The first ensures that people with disabilities are able to take part in volunteer and service programs. We all know that the disabled have been the beneficiaries of many assistance programs.

However, people with disabilities also have plenty to contribute to volunteer service—my amendment will help to unleash that energy which has for so long been underutilized.

My other amendment establishes a fellowship exchange program with the nations of Eastern Europe. These programs, which have involved over 170,000 individuals, have allowed the exchange of much needed information, but they need to be expanded. Those persons in other diverse fields, such as private business, trade associations, unions, chambers of commerce, as well as those in the local, State, and Federal Governments will be involved in these new exchanges.

This program will help in the democratization of the formerly totalitarian world.

Coming in an epochal year in post-war history, the exchanges will involve many diverse Americans in a world that has changed so much in a short time. Therefore I both thank and congratulate the conferees on this bill.

Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The remaining 3 minutes and 41 seconds of the Republican leader are reserved.

Who seeks recognition?

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Georgia [Mr. NUNN] for up to 5 minutes.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I add my voice to those who support this conference agreement on the national service demonstration program. At a time when we are deeply involved in a struggle over how to do more with less in this country, I think it is fitting that we are taking up this particular piece of legislation. The National and Community Service Act of 1990 recognizes a resource we often overlook, the energy and talents of our own people particularly but not limited to our young people. With a modest Federal investment, it provides a variety of ways for Americans to channel energy and talents into productive community service. Our investment, I am convinced, will be returned many times over.

I am pleased that the Chair has been occupied by the Senator from Virginia, who has been such an important part of this proposal. He and I introduced a bill called S. 3 about a year and a half ago, and although this is a much reduced version of that legislation, I think it is a very important step.

I want to thank the Presiding Officer, the Senator from Virginia. I want to thank Senator KENNEDY for his long work on this; it took an awful lot of work, a lot of negotiation. I want to thank the Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] who has done a tremendous job on this legislation. And I want to thank Senator HATCH and others as well as those who have offered part of this legislation, including the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD], also the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, who has had a longstanding and very dedicated interest in education in general and in service in particular. I thank Senator PELL for his work.

I am particularly pleased that the conference committee has included in the final bill a demonstration program based, in part, on a concept which CHUCK ROBB and I put forth last year as S. 3, the Citizenship and National Service Act.

Senator PELL and Senator MIKULSKI also played major roles in the formation of a demonstration program to test key elements of S. 3. Senator PELL has been a long-time advocate of national service and was an early proponent of a pilot program, while Senator MIKULSKI was the original proponent of the part-time approach incorporated in this bill, an approach which Senator ROBB and I always considered an essential complement to S. 3's full-time program. I appreciate their hard work in ensuring that this modest test will be conducted.

I also want to thank House Veterans' Affairs Committee Chairman SONNY MONTGOMERY for his cooperation with this effort. For many years, Congressman MONTGOMERY has worked to provide those who have served America in the Armed Forces with enhanced educational benefits. He has expressed in the last year or so very legitimate concerns about the possible effect on military recruitment of providing similar benefits to civilian volunteers through this type of national service program. We have discussed these concerns thoroughly. I have discussed them with him several times in the last few weeks. One of the issues the demonstration program we are passing, hopefully tonight, will test, is any possible effect on military recruitment.

We must place military recruitment as a very high priority. We have to continue to get quality people involved in the military service.

It should be obvious that this legislation is a first step. It is only a first step toward a national commitment to national service, but it is a very important first step.

I also think right at the top of the list of those who have been helpful in drawing up this whole concept is the preeminent military sociologist in America today, in my view, Hon. Charlie Mosher, who has worked long and hard on this whole area of national service; indeed, he has written a book on the subject.

At the conclusion of the demonstration period, we should be prepared to make a decision on the kind of permanent national service options the American people desire. That means the debate over national service must continue even as demonstration programs are developed and implemented by the States.

I want to restate my personal commitment to the kind of national service program represented by S. 3—a full-fledged Citizens Corps that would offer all Americans the opportunity to serve their country in a civilian or military capacity, and earn the kind of substantial education, training or housing benefits they need to gain a stake in the American dream. The chronic fiscal crisis we face today should convince us how urgently we need to find an alternative way to finance services that are necessary but today those services are so excessive that we have a hard time expanding them so that we can find ways to improve our human capital and our ability to compete in a global economy. The crisis of public confidence in Government that we face today should convince us even more of the urgent need to reforge the links of mutual obligation that makes for good citizens and good Government.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would remind the Senator that it would require unanimous consent for additional time.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for an additional 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, as indicated earlier, I would like these remarks to be a continuation of those which were interrupted earlier so that my colleagues could speak.

The consequence of this outcry by over a dozen States, the activities of Amtrak, was introduction of legislation to remove the special exemption which Amtrak has had from the Public Health Services Act. Unfortunately, that good objective was perverted in the conference discussion leading up to this bill, and in the Amtrak waste disposal a rather swarmy compromise was reached. The compromise is essentially as follows, Mr. President:

First, not only is Amtrak exempted from the Federal Public Health Services Act, it is now exempted from any other Federal, State or local laws. So Amtrak, unique among all transportation systems in America, now has an all-purpose exemption.

Second, that exemption is extended back to February 5, 1976, so that any litigation, such as that in the States that I listed, is rendered by this legislation to be a nullity. The trade for all that is a commitment by Amtrak, beginning on October 15 of this year, to build into any of its new cars appropriate facilities for the discharge of human waste only at servicing facilities and to begin a process of retrofitting its existing cars.

The difficulty with that is that this program is subject to the appropriation funds, assumedly funds for that specific purpose. My concern is, Mr. President, that we are going to get the worst of both deals; that we are going to have no protection at the Federal, State, or local level from this odious activity and we are going to have difficulty in these very tight fiscal times securing the necessary appropriations, so we will not accomplish the objective which is to have Amtrak clean up its act by retrofitting its cars.

Mr. President, I support the National Service Act and commend the conferees for their diligent work on this bill.

I am particularly grateful to the chairman of the committee for including many components of S. 382, the Business and Citizens School Volunteers Act, which I introduced on February 8, 1989. The conference report before us provides important incentives for the creation and expansion of school volunteer and partnership programs nationwide. Also, it provides the opportunity to establish a clearinghouse that will support school volunteer and partnership programs in every State.

However, I am compelled to speak against the provisions of the conference report dealing with the National Railroad Passenger Corporation [Amtrak]. For in passing this measure, we will also be passing provisions regarding Amtrak waste disposal that are inadequate.

The provisions set up a program under which Amtrak will after 6 years complete retrofitting the waste disposal systems on trains with full retentions systems and remove from service those trains that cannot be retrofitted.

The provisions, however, do not provide any assurances that Amtrak will meet the objectives of this program. For example, if appropriations are not available for the modernizing program, then Amtrak is not obligated to move forward.

The provisions do require the Secretary of Transportation to issue regulations to mitigate the impact of the discharge of human waste from railroad passenger cars on areas which may be considered environmentally sensitive. But there is an absence of enforcement.

The people living along the St. John's River in Florida asked that Amtrak stop dumping human waste into the waters and onto the people fishing below the bridges crossing at Buffalo Bluff and over Rice Creek. Amtrak did not stop their practices and on July 10, 1989, the State Attorney for Putnam County, John Tanner, filed two counts of commerical littering. On December 1, 1989, the jury returned a verdict of guilty as charged on all four counts of commercial littering. The State has been enjoined by a Federal court and is appealing the injunction.

What is most disappointing is the Rail Passenger Service Corporation provision included in the conference report which exempts Amtrak's waste disposals practices retroactively back to 1976 from the Public Service Act and other Federal, State, and local laws.

This 14-year retroactive exemption will void the pending court cases brought against Amtrak.

This is not an issue peculiar to Florida. Officials from other States: Arkansas, California, Idaho, Louisiana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Oregon, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Utah, Vermont, West Virginia, and Wisconsin, submitted comments at congressional hearings in opposition to Amtrak's waste disposal practices.

How can these States be assured that Amtrak will keep to the schedule outlined in this conference report?

Mr. President, it is my hope that Amtrak is sincere in their commitment to eliminate the discharge of human waste along the right-of-way, in our towns, and in our waters.

The practice of indiscriminate waste discharge which dates back to the mid-19th century is clearly long past the time it is acceptable as we approach the 21st century.

Rest assured that we will be watching closely to ensure Amtrak warrants the extreme display of confidence that has been placed in it by granting judicial relief and continuing for 6 years its exemption from all laws that govern the discharge of human waste.

We look forward to Amtrak completing the retrofit program well in advance of the 6 years it has been accorded.

I also, Mr. President, would like to engage in a colloquy with the ranking member of the committee, Senator HATCH, who had particular responsibility for this provision on behalf of the Senate during the conference committee.

Mr. President, I wonder if I might ask if the remainder of my time could be withheld pending the return on the Senate floor of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator's remaining 1 minute 37 seconds will be retained.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be able to proceed for 1 minute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this was an extraordinarily complicated melding of different programs. I think all of us are grateful for the staff help and support on any piece of legislation. But those that were involved in serving the Members did an extraordinary job. I would like to mention on my own staff, Shirley Sagawa, Michael Epp, Nick Littlefield, Rusty Barbour, Terry Hartle, David Stark, Adele Robinson, Amy Lowrey and Peter Battaglia; from Senator HATCH's staff, Nancy Taylor and Carrie Hillyard; from Senator MIKULSKI's staff, Glenn Roberts; from Senator PELL's staff, Sarah Flanagan; from Senator NUNN's staff, Julie Abbot Murphy; from Senator DODD's staff, Joan Hogan-Gillman; from Senator BUMPERS' staff, Chuck Ludlam; and from legislative counsel, Bill Baird, who worked heroically to draft the legislation on many a short deadline.

All of them did an extraordinary job in bringing this together, and the Senate record should reflect their very extraordinary efforts.

In addition to the Senate staff, and the Senators I mentioned earlier, many people outside the Senate also played essential roles in the movement of this legislation. Congressman AUGUSTUS HAWKINS and his staff, Gene Sofer, were instrumental in moving this bill through the House through their dedication and excellent work on its behalf. Also in the House, Representatives BILL FORD, MATTHEW MARTINEZ, LEON PANETTA, DALE KILDEE, PAT WILLIAMS, CONNIE MORELLA, RICHARD NEAL, DAVID BONIOR, DAVE MCCURDY, and PETER SMITH all contributed to the legislation.

Many organizations have also played leadership roles in the area of national service and should be recognized for their work including People for the American Way, the National Association of Service & Conservation Corps, Youth Service America, AFSCME, AFT, Campus Compact, City Year, the Council of Chief State School Officers, the National Association of Secondary School Principals, Families, USA, the Girl Scouts, the Thomas Jefferson Forum, the Children's Defense Fund and the Child Welfare League of America.

Finally, I commend President Bush for joining in this effort. It is his Thousand Points of Light that has captured the imagination of the Nation. Our goal with this initiative is to enable them to shine more brightly.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, in January 1989, I set forth what I hoped would be the Senate's domestic and foreign policy agendas in this Congress.

On domestic policy, I said that Senate Democrats sought a national community whose members shared fairly in prosperity and freedom and who in return did their part to help build prosperity and preserve freedom.

I said the Senate would consider legislation to reestablish national service on a voluntary basis—to ask citizens to help shape this country's future by reactivating our national idealism and the traditional American commitment to giving a helping hand.

That effort reaches fulfillment today as the conference report on S. 1430, the National and Community Service Act is acted upon by the Members of the Senate.

Detractors of national service often say, "We shouldn't pay people to volunteer. The rewards of volunteer service should be of itself enough inducement."

Detractors say Government should not play a role in encouraging volunteer service. That is better left to individuals and the private sector.

But this legislation asks our young people for more than an hour or two once in a while. We are asking young people to make a consistent, dependable, rigorous commitment over a sustained period.

The fact of the matter is that this Nation has been encouraging volunteer service for decades. But to enable a broad array of young people to participate in service in their communities, we need to do more than simply encourage them. We need to recognize the constraints that keep young people from community service.

Many moderate income and low income young people today need to work so that they may attend college. Some need to work to help their families pay bills. Others are on their own and need to work simply to survive.

In order for a broad array of young people to participate in service in their communities, we need to do more than simply encourage them. We need to help overcome or remove the constraints that keep young people from community service.

S. 1430 is designed to enable young people from all walks of life to participate in community service, not merely young people from wealthy families.

The voluntary national service program, youth service corps, school-based programs, the higher education innovative projects and other provisions in S. 1430 are good ways to channel the idealism of American citizens, especially young people, while providing a broader opportunity for upward mobility to more of our citizens.

I commend all of my colleagues on this side of the aisle for their dedication and hard work in putting this legislation together.

Particularly I want to note the contributions of Senator KENNEDY, Senator NUNN, Senator PELL, Senator MIKULSKI, and Senator DODD. Without their personal involvement we would not have this conference report before us today.

And, Mr. President, although many Democrats support national service and have spoken about its virtues, I want to emphasize that support for voluntary service to one's community is not a democratic idea.

In his words and deeds, as a candidate and since his election, President Bush has shown he understands the value of community service. And it is because of the work of a number of interested Republican Senators, in particular Senator HATCH, that we are at this juncture today.

The homeless, the elderly, the poor, and the mentally handicapped are waiting for service volunteers. Communities across the country face shortages of tutors, counselors and health care assistants. Conservation work in our Nation's forests, parks recreation areas, and farmlands goes undone.

I believe the National and Community Service Act will enable young Americans to give something back to the society that has given them so much.

I recommend to my colleagues for their support, S. 1430, the National and Community Service Act, legislation that is crafted to meet the needs of this country, offers Americans from all walks of life and all ages a worthwhile and challenging opportunity to serve, and which passes the of fiscal responsibility.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report on Serve America: the National Community and Service Learning Act of 1990. As I look at the things that make this country great, I note that it does not lie in the number of cars we can produce or the designer suits we wear, simply what makes this country great lies in the character of the American people and their willingness to stand up for democracy and for the good of others.

This legislation will provide those opportunities for all Americans by encouraging service early in life so that it will be sustained through one's life. There are many reasons for supporting this legislation, but I would like to point out just a few. First is the role community service can play in improving education in this country. The opportunity to gain hands-on experience can greatly enhance classroom learning. It can also provide exposure to possible future careers and give kids valuable skills needed in the workplace. This legislation will begin to establish that link by establishing what I have called experienced-based learning opportunities.

Second, is the positive effect community service can have on building future generations of American citizens. Voluntarism can lead to an increased sense of self esteem, especially for those who normally are on the receiving end of these services. Young people today need to feel wanted and appreciated. They need outlets for the positive contributions they can make to society. And they need recognition for these contributions. This legislation will provide new opportunities for all Americans to serve.

Third, community service can offer an outlet for young people to use their time in a positive manner. Today's young people face a range of temptations and have numerous competing demands on their time. Expanding service opportunities for young people is an integral part of the Nation's efforts to curb the influence of drugs, violence and other negative lures on our Nation's children.

Although initial funding levels were reduced in order to get the President's support, there are a number of important provisions in the compromise bill from Minnesota's perspective.

First, the legislation creates a new Commission on National Service to administer grants. That is very important in focusing visibility and accountability for national service programs in an agency that has a broad purpose.

Second, the legislation retains Senate language emphasizing broad-based community collaboration in designing and running service learning projects aimed at K-12 age young people.

Third, the legislation earmarks funds for up to four regional clearinghouses on youth service.

Fourth, the legislation includes funding authority for the full-range of service programs included in the original Senate bill—K-12 and postsecondary service learning, youth corps, and postsecondary demonstration

Fifth, the legislation includes funding authority for the President's Points of Light Foundation—helping to assure greater Bush administration support and interest in funding and implementing the legislation.

Sixth, the legislation authorizes funding for 3 years—giving a greater sense of permanency to this initiative. Over the 3 years, a total of $287 million is authorized.

And, seventh, and most important, the compromise legislation is now being supported by the Bush administration.

We have all seen first hand over the past few weeks what can happen when times are good. It is easy for a nation to loose sight of the individual responsibilities we have to others and the civil duty we have as part of a democracy. So I want to thank my good friend from Massachusetts for all the work he has done on this legislation to remind us of the service opportunities and responsibilities we have to this country. He has worked tirelessly to address the issues raised by the administration and put together a bipartisan package that will meet our Nation's needs and our children's needs by providing valuable opportunities for service. I would also like to thank my friend and colleague from Utah who provided the link to bring together the compromise that enabled this legislation to move forward. Finally, I would like to thank the Minnesota working group on community service who helped me on this legislation and contributed to the establishment of the four regional clearinghouses.

Thirty years ago, President John F. Kennedy called a nation to service and our Nation responded. Today, Senator KENNEDY carries on that tradition by opening new opportunities for service. I urge my colleagues to support this important legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM] is recognized for up to 1 minute.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, I would like to use that time to ask a few questions in colloquy with the Senator from Utah.

Why does Amtrak need to be exempt from all Federal, State, and local laws regarding the discharge of human waste?

Mr. HATCH. The reason is because Amtrak needs to have only one set of rules to play by. The Senator is aware that Amtrak is currently being sued for dumping in areas which may violate State or local ordinances. I would remind my colleague that the state of the existing waste disposal technology makes it very difficult for Amtrak to control when and where this waste is discharged. Amtrak, and our House colleagues, believe that if they continue to be subject to many layers of regulation, it is almost inevitable that Amtrak will be forced to suspend service to some of these States. Unfortunately, when service is suspended to Florida, it makes service to other States in the Southeast much less profitable.

Mr. GRAHAM. Why is it necessary to have a retroactive exemption to these laws?

Mr. HATCH. I understand the Senator's concern with this matter. I have always been a supporter of States rights, and I would be upset if a Utah court were being required to drop a suit which the State believes is important. I want my colleague to know that I fought hard for a provision that would have allowed existing cases to be pursued. However, our House colleagues would not budge on this point. I must admit that I find their logic difficult to dispute. They argue that the States which have filed want Amtrak to stop dumping. This legislation requires Amtrak to stop dumping. Why then do the States want to pursue these cases. If existing cases are not rendered moot, we still face the possibility that a court could rule against Amtrak, and Amtrak might have to suspend service to those States.

Mr. GRAHAM. What impact will this retroactive exemption have on pending cases against Amtrak?

Mr. HATCH. I believe that pending cases will have to be dropped as a result of this exemption. However, the Federal courts should decide what this exemption provides for.

Mr. GRAHAM. The language "subject to the appropriation of funds" in section 1(b) provides Amtrak a loophole. What will ensure the States that Amtrak will meet the retrofitting schedule outlined in this bill? That is, that the retrofitting will be completed within 6 years of enactment.

Senator, I am concerned about the requirement that this be an appropriation for Amtrak to be obligated to meet the 1996 date for completion of its retrofit. Would you consider this to be a high priority, in terms of the allocation of resources for Amtrak?

Mr. HATCH. Well, Mr. President, of course the Senator is correct that we are currently facing a serious budget shortfall, and that means that the funding for this program will be hard to come by. I have traditionally been an opponent of Amtrak subsidies, but the Senator can count on my help in obtaining this funding to complete the retrofitting process.

Amtrak is doing its part. Amtrak tells me that toilets are the single largest source of customer complaints. The current systems do not work and Amtrak wants to replace them. The Senator knows that Amtrak has engaged in an aggressive research and development effort to develop a retention system that will work. Nine companies have submitted prototypes for this system and these prototypes are currently undergoing inservice testing. Amtrak has gone to the private credit markets to borrow money to replace these older cars with new cars with retention capability. They plan to borrow $500 million which is half the cost of the retrofit anti-new-acquisition program. This program of acquiring new cars is progressing.

Amtrak plans to let a contract later this month to acquire 79 new superliner cars with an option for 100 more. By the language of this measure, these cars are required to be equipped with this new retention technology. However, my understanding of the law governing Amtrak's operation is that Congress agrees to subsidize those fiscal requirements which Amtrak cannot cover at the fare box. The other half of this program is just such an expense. Amtrak must make an effort to use all of its available private resources on this project. It must be a top priority. Unfortunately, Congress will have to come up with some funds. I hate to keep harping on this, but if we force Amtrak to withdraw cars from service, when we have not provided them with funds to retrofit them then service will have to be curtailed. No one wants service to be curtailed. We just want them to stop dumping human waste on the right-of-way.

Mr. GRAHAM. During the 6-year retrofitting period, what will ensure the States that Amtrak will stop dumping human waste in their towns and waterways?

Mr. HATCH. The amendment requires the Secretary of Transportation to issue regulations governing dumping in the interim period. The Secretary is expressly charged to consult with EPA, the Public Health Service, and State and local governments, as well as Amtrak before issuing these regulations. The Secretary of Transportation is the logical choice because all of the expertise on the technology for discharging waste resides in his Department. The Secretary is also directed to issue regulations requiring Amtrak to make appropriate announcements regarding when to use toilets to passengers.

Mr. GRAHAM. What impact do you perceive the required regulations of the Secretary of Transportation to have on Amtrak's current waste discharge practices?

Mr. HATCH. The Senator is aware that the Department of Transportation has been regulating all aspects of railroad operation and safety for years. I believe that they have done a good job up till now in these areas, and I feel confident that they can regulate the discharge of human waste from trains equally well.

The Senator is aware that there are several options which are available to the Secretary now. We could order alterations of routes, order trains to travel more slowly in certain areas which should prevent the retention/dump equipment from discharging in those areas, or prescribe an interim technological fix which would give Amtrak more control over when and where waste is discharged. These are options available to the Secretary right now, there may be others that the experts at the Department of Transportation can come up with.

Mr. GRAHAM. What does environmentally sensitive mean? Does it include areas of human activity that are adversely impacted by discharge of human waste.

Mr. HATCH. Environmentally sensitive areas should include waterways, watersheds, wildlife habitats, and other natural areas. Homes, towns, and cities would also be included within the definition of this term. Of course, the Senator is aware that the language of the amendment specifically mentions several areas of human activity, including stations and railroad yards, to which the regulations promulgated by the Secretary are to apply.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, the target date for completion of this process is October 15, 1996. Would the Senator be inclined to support at an appropriate future date, an amendment which would eliminate the exemption which will now be extended from the Public Health Service Act to any other Federal, State, and local government for Amtrak effective October 15, 1996?

Mr. HATCH. I do not think I could support that. I think what it is going to take is about 6 years, from what I understand, to retrofit the appropriate number of trains to be able to handle this problem. It is a problem. There are 44 different States. That is why, because of the efforts in both Houses to try to resolve this problem, we have come this far.

But I do not think we can change that because the amendment requires the Secretary of Transportation to issue regulations governing dumping in this interim period. I think the Secretary is expressly charged to consult with EPA, Public Health Service and the State and local governments as well as Amtrak before issuing those regulations. I think that is the logical choice. So I do not think I would be willing to reduce that time, because I think that is the time that is going to be necessary, with the tremendous amount of expenditure we are going to be making, that Amtrak is already making to do the job.

Mr. GRAHAM. The Senator may not have heard my question. The date I cited is the date which is in the time statute, which is October 15, 1996.

Mr. HATCH. That is right.

Mr. ROBB. Mr. President, I rise today in strong support of the National and Community Service Act of 1990. This day has been a long time in coming, and a great deal of credit is due to the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] and the junior Senator from Maryland [Ms. MIKULSKI] for their able tending of this bill in conference.

The varied programs that will be sponsored by this bill will enable us to get a sense of what kinds of things work best as we seek to instill in our young people the habit of "giving back" to the community.

In giving back, I trust that many students will find that they gain a great deal as well.

And, in these days, as we are trying to come to grips with our financial crisis, a bill like this one reminds us that we do have tremendous resources, human resources, in this country. Human resources alone cannot address our fiscal crisis. But we should take heart in the fact that Americans are a strong and generous people, and willing to make sacrifices if someone can show them why they should do so.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support this conference report, to ask our young people to give something back, and to help them see that they can be part of the solution to many of our Nation's problems.

EISENHOWER EXCHANGE PROGRAM

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask the distinguished Republican leader, is his amendment on foreign exchanges related to the Eisenhower exchange proposal?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this is a separate program. It is intended to promote the exchange of views between officials in government, business, labor and others between the United States and emerging democratic countries. The Eisenhower Exchange Program is targeted to students, and is in no way, related to this program.

VOLUNTARY COMMUNITY SERVICE: THE MISSING POINT OF LIGHT

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I am disappointed that the loan cancellation proposals that I sponsored have been deleted by the conference committee. The conference felt that it did not make sense to amend the Higher Education Act this year to provide for loan cancellation, because the Higher Education Act is due to be reauthorized next year.

Accordingly, I will be reintroducing my loan cancellation proposals early in the next Congress to be included in the Higher Education Act amendments of 1991. I look forward to working with Senator KENNEDY, chairman of the Senate Labor and Human Services Committee, and Senator PELL, chairman of the Subcommittee on Education, to secure their enactment. I appreciate their strong support this year, and regret that they were not able to persuade the Bush administration to accept these loan cancellation provisions in the National Service bill.

My loan cancellation proposals would move the Government out of the way, so that our young people would be able to provide voluntary service to their community and to the Nation by reducing the pressure that these young people feel from their student loan debt burden. The legislation would reduce this debt burden pressure for students when they serve their community in full-time, low-paid voluntary jobs as employees of nonprofit community service organizations. This is the type of service that epitomizes the American spirit and this is what the national service legislation is all about.

STUDENT LOAN INDEBTEDNESS

Young people are willing to devote themselves to serving these needs, but many of our college graduates believe that they are unable to do so, due to the debts they have accumulated in order to attend college. With these enormous debts they simply feel that community service is not a realistic option for them.

In fact, in several surveys the most frequently cited reason of students on why they do not perform a period of service to the community, is their loans debts.

With these debts, it is not surprising that upon graduation their first priority is to secure a high paying job, so that they can earn the money to begin to repay their loans. This focus is a function of reality, not selfishness.

We should applaud this sense of responsibility in wanting to repay their debts. We are burdened by some who don't repay their student loans. We want our students to feel responsible for repaying their loans.

The problem is that once a student takes that first high paying job, he or she has passed by a major opportunity to provide service to the community. The first few years are a perfect time for young people to take off a year or more to provide service. They are less likely to be burdened with other responsibilities, such as children, mortgages and job ladders. When they do not take this time to provide some service, it then becomes quite unlikely that they will ever perform full-time service to their community.

The legislation I have introduced says, "take this time to provide a year or more of service to the community. You may never have an opportunity to do so again."

It says, "The Government will not require you to immediately repay your student loan debts if you serve the community."

The legislation says, "The Government will even partially cancel your obligation to repay your loans if you serve the community."

The legislation says, "you will never regret serving your community." It says, "your service to the community is important to the Federal Government, as well as to the community you serve."

The legislation would permit young people to consider community service and not to worry about their debts while they serve.

The legislation would take away most commonly heard excuse about why young people are not willing to serve.

Young people may still conclude that they don't want to serve. They may have other excuses. They may place a higher priority on material possessions. They may be more interested in a fancy car than in helping their fellow citizens. They may not want to be near homeless persons or mentally retarded persons or sick persons.

But, with this legislation in place, they will have to find an excuse other than student loan debts. They will have to consider the issue on the merits and they will have real choices to make.

PEACE CORPS MODEL

The legislation I sponsored is based on the model of community service provided by the Peace Corps and VISTA.

What my proposals attempt to do is extend the Peace Corps and VISTA models of service into the private sector.

What they do, is encourage private sector non-profit organizations to set up their own Peace Corps and VISTA programs, with the Federal voluntary service programs serving as the model.

What my legislation would do is seek to create an un-peace corps or a "decentralized peace corps."

The legislation would not compete with the Peace Corps or VISTA in any way. My legislation would build on the idea that service involves some material sacrifice. It is premised on the idea that service involves commitment. It recognizes the principal reward for service should be the sense of satisfaction and accomplishment that comes with the service.

My legislation is the direct descendent of the Peace Corps and VISTA. It is the logical next step in furthering the goals of the Peace Corps and VISTA.

NON-PROFIT SECTOR

I believe that the Federal Government does not have to organize many service opportunities for young people. The Peace Corps and VISTA are excellent programs, but I do not believe that they can or should be duplicated with many other new Federal Government service programs. Fortunately, this country is blessed with a multitude of tax-exempt charitable organizations that are unique and they can and should, take the lead in organizing community service.

These tax-exempt charitable organizations provide service to those in great need. They do so efficiently and fairly. They show immense creativity and imagination in providing service.

The Government doesn't need to find placements for the students who want to serve. The opportunities for service are all around us with nonprofit community service organizations and there are volunteer clearinghouses in many communities.

The Government would probably find that additional young people are willing to serve if the Government organizes and funds the service.

What I am saying, however, is that the Government can accomplish much of its objectives simply by removing a major barrier to service, namely, the obligation students feel immediately to begin repaying their student loan debts, and encouraging young people to serve in the private sector with existing tax-exempt community service organizations.

This approach is simple, effective, inexpensive, and involves none of the controversy which may arise with some of the other national service proposals.

HISTORY OF LEGISLATION

I first introduced legislation promoting voluntary community service in 1987, S. 759 and S. 760. 133 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at S3264-68 (March 17, 1987). I just missed the reauthorization of the Higher Education Act in 1986.

In 1987, I testified on these bills before the Subcommittee on Human Resources of the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee, Voluntary National Youth Service Act, hearings of April 29, 1987. Congressman GERRY SIKORSKI, chairman of that subcommittee, has been the leading House sponsor for the student community service legislation.

In December of 1987, I authored a directive to the Department of Education regarding implementation of the current deferment in the Department's appropriations bill. 133 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at S 17943-44 (December 11, 1987). Unfortunately this directive was completely ignored.

In September of 1988 the Senate adopted the substance of S. 760 as an amendment to the Stafford Student Loan Default Prevention and Management Act of 1988, S. 2647. 134 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at S12541-42 (September 15, 1988). Last year the Senate again adopted the substance of the deferment-implementation bill—this year S. 539—as an amendment to the same legislation. 135 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at S3202 (March 17, 1989).

I reintroduced my proposals last year as S. 539, S. 540 and S. 541. 135 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD S2354 (March 8, 1989). I also testified before the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee on March 9, 1989, when it held its hearings on the national service legislation.

When Senator KENNEDY introduced S. 1430, he included all three of my bills, and I submitted a statement for the RECORD explaining the history and terms of the provisions that I had authored. 135 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at S9017-9021 (July 27, 1989).

The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee included all three of my proposals in S. 1430 when it reported the bill to the full Senate. My proposals appeared as sections 141-144, 151-152 and 161-162. During the Senate debate I spoke on the bill and on an amendment changing the effective date for the loan cancellation provision (136 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD S1599-1600 (February 26, 1990) and 136 CONGRESSIONAL RECORD S1718-1719 (February 27, 1990)).

The Senate adopted S. 1430 on March 1, 1990, and sections 230-233, 240-241, and 250-251 of the Senate passed bill are taken from legislation introduced by Senator DALE BUMPERS.

The House took up the national service issue and reported its national service bill, H.R. 4330, on August 15, 1990. Two of my three proposals were included in the House bill as sections 176-177 and 181-183. During the House debate on the bill, there was an amendment to strike all of the loan cancellation provisions, but it was defeated.

POLITICAL REALITY

My proposals are effective ways to promote voluntary community service and equally important, they are politically realistic. In closing, let me summarize the key advantages of my community service proposals, and why I will be pursuing them next year with the Higher Education Act reauthorization.

With the Bumpers proposal the Government does not need to experiment with novel, controversial and expensive new Government community service programs. It can build on the proven model of service provided by the Peace Corps and VISTA and rely on the nonprofit community service organizations in the private sector to initiate, organize and manage service programs based on this model.

The Bumpers proposal is directly related to the financial needs of the young person. It is only available to young persons who have student Government loan debts. These debts are the most frequently cited reason given by young persons on why they are unable to perform a period of community service. Relieving this debt burden reduces this barrier to service.

It reduces a barrier to service for those who are already inclined to serve, rather than seeks to buy an interest in service on those not inclined to serve.

The young persons with the greatest student loan debt burdens and the greatest incentive to serve under the terms of the Bumpers bill—doctors, lawyers and other professionals—have the greatest skills to lend to non-profit community service organizations and to the communities in which they serve.

The young person is encouraged first to complete his or her college education, and graduate school education, and then to perform community service. Completion of the student's higher education should come first, and not be delayed by the need to perform community service first. Young persons, particularly those from disadvantaged backgrounds, tend not to attend college if they do not so immediately after high school.

The young person must make a major commitment to community service to qualify for the loan cancellation. The loan cancellation program requires real sacrifice. Students who are willing to serve full-time for at least a year at the minimum wage deserve a break on their student loans.

All of the community service is performed in the private sector with nonprofit community service organizations. There is no displacement of Federal, State or local government agency employees. Because it requires the young person to serve at a rate of pay that does not exceed the minimum wage, it also would not tend to displace the current employees of nonprofit community organizations or impose an unreasonable financial burden on these organizations.

Because it requires full-time service with a private sector non-profit organization, the young people who participate will develop the skills and training they need to be hired for other full-time positions upon completion of their community service. Because the decision to hire the young person is entirely that of the nonprofit organization, and because the service must be for at least a year, the employer has a strong self interest in providing training to the young person. As a full-time employee of the organization, the young person would be entitled to all fringe benefits available to other full-time employees.

It is much more efficient for community service organizations to obtain the services of a young person who will work full-time and for at least a year. This reduces the expenses for training and supervision and the young person is better able to provide effective service to the community.

No new Government agency needs to be created to implement the Bumpers loan cancellation program. The Department of Education already administers a variety of loan cancellation programs and already has sufficient staff and expertise to process the loan cancellation forms.

Hardly any bureaucracy or paperwork is involved for the young person or the Federal Government to implement the loan cancellation program. Young people must file a sworn certification that they qualify for the loan cancellation, just as Peace Corps and VISTA volunteers already do. It is easy for the Government to audit whether the young person has performed the appropriate service.

The incentive for full-time service upon graduation ties in with the existing college work study and State incentive grant programs which encourage students to perform part-time community service while attending school. The Bumpers provisions permit these students upon graduation to work full-time with the same organizations with which they volunteered on a part-time basis.

The incentive costs the Federal Government only about $3 million per year. The Congressional Budget Office assumes that not many young persons will serve under the required terms—a conclusion that Senator BUMPERS disagrees with, but he is happy to have the low CBO estimate. The proposal does not raise false expectations by authorizing large sums that will never be appropriated.

The provision will not undermine recruiting for the Peace Corps and VISTA, as the incentive provided is the same as is now provided to Peace Corps and VISTA volunteers. It is a matter of simple equity to provide this incentive to young persons who perform service with a nonprofit organization that is comparable to the service of a Peace Corps or VISTA volunteer.

The provision applies both to community service in the United States and to community service in foreign countries, as long as the organization managing the service is U.S.-based nonprofit.

The Federal Government is not responsible for placing the young persons, training them, or supervising them. It is not responsible for the activities of the private sector nonprofit organization which employs the young person. This reduces the potential for embarrassing scandals associated with the program.

Under the Bumpers proposal the Federal Government provides no stipends to the young person or grants to the private sector organization employing the young person. This minimizes the intrusion of the Federal Government into the decisions of the organizations that are managing the service program and employing the young people. There is no need for the Federal Government to issue detailed regulations about the nature and terms of the service program or to pick and choose among the organizations which are applying for grants. No organization is forced or encouraged to change its current service program in order to qualify for a grant.

In short, my proposals encourage community service in the private sector, they rely on the creativity of the private sector to create the service programs, and they involve virtually no government bureaucracy to manage it. The service that is to be performed will be motivated by altruism. And the whole program carries a very low price to the Government.

This is an American model of voluntary service. It is a bottom-up, not a top-down approach. It taps the diversity and energy of America's unique and independent non-profit sector.

I know that my proposals are sound and I will continue to work to see that they are enacted next year.

Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, I share my colleagues' belief that when Americans are asked to serve others and are given the opportunity, they come forward. But we have not been sending a strong and clear enough message from the Federal level about the importance of serving. And we have not been providing the assistance that makes it possible for Americans of all ages and walks of life to give such service. The National and Community Service Act of 1990 sends a clear message and provides those opportunities.

I commend our Labor and Human Resources chairman, Senator KENNEDY, for his efforts on this legislation. I am pleased to note in the conference report the retention of a number of amendments I recommended during the bill's consideration in the Senate. These amendments give greater attention to basic skills needs and illiteracy among both the volunteeers and program recipients, and provide testing and services to those who may have learning disabilities. I am also pleased that this conference report includes the close attention to the inclusion of individuals with disabilities in all of the programs that was intended in the Senate bill.

I support this bill and its intent to expand service opportunities to persons of all ages and all walks of life. It is needed and will benefit both communities and the volunteers themselves. I do have one major concern, however, over what I believe is an inequity for the VISTA and Peace Corps Programs as a result of the difference between postservice benefits available to these volunteers and to volunteers who serve under the programs in this bill.

I have long believed that the VISTA and Peace Corps Programs are the models on which national service programs should be based. I want to point out to my colleagues that VISTA volunteers, who must serve at least 1 year and be on call 24 hours a day, 7 days a week, currently receive a stipend at the end of their year of service of only $75 a month. That is only a $900 reward for their 1 year of service. That figure will go up to $90 a month next year and to $95 a month in the following year. At the maximum, in 1992, it will result in a stipend of only $1,140 per year. This is in comparison to the postservice benefits of up to $100 per week or $5,000 a year for participants in the Youth Corps Program and postservice benefits of $2,500 a year for full-time participants in the National and Community Service Program.

Since a large percentage of VISTA volunteers are economically disadvantaged, the national service voucher may be of far more usefulness to these volunteers than is the loan forgiveness provision that is extended to them. There is also a real possibility that this disparity in regard to VISTA volunteers, who may work side by side with national service volunteers, may negatively affect recruitment for this specifically antipoverty directed program.

I would like to make sure that VISTA volunteers who may be working side by side with national service volunteers in the same antipoverty project will not feel they are less valued by those of us who design these programs. When each VISTA literacy corps volunteer recruits and trains from 100 to 200 community volunteers in literacy each year, as they are doing in Chicago and throughout Illinois today, we should be doing all we can to let them know their magnificent efforts are recognized and appreciated. And we should be encouraging more people to sign on as VISTAs. VISTA has a 25-year record of service that few programs can match.

I also want to make sure that Peace Corps volunteers are not denigrated by being considered less valuable to their country than those who serve in communities here at home. These volunteers have postservice benefits a little more generous than VISTA's: $2,400 a year for up to 2 years of service—still not the amount that will be available to the national service volunteers.

I recogize that we are not going to solve this problem at this point, but I hope this is a situation we can remedy in the near future, particularly if there is any evidence that these programs are affecting recruitment for the VISTA or Peace Corps Programs. I believe the level of national service benefits could and should be made an option for these volunteers—not on top of their existing benefits or the new loan forgiveness benefits, but as an alternative option for these volunteers who live and work among the poorest of the poor in this country and countries around the world, and who generally have more stringent service requirements than will be required of national service volunteers.

THE TRUE MEANING OF NATIONAL SERVICE

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, I strongly believe in the concept of national service. I believe that every young man and woman in this country owes this Nation a debt, and I believe that freedom can only be maintained and defended, if all our Nation's citizens understand that what they receive from their country has to be won by sacrifice. I believe that we cannot simply ask what our country can do for us, and that we must ask what we can do for our country.

National service, however, does not consist of token service for educational benefits. It is not a form of welfare. It is not a way of subsidizing volunteers, or disguising the need for effective solutions to the social problems of the poor or disadvantaged ethnic groups.

National service consists of asking men and women from all walks of life, and from all classes and groups in society, to make sacrifices for their country. For some—those who make the greatest sacrifice—it means defending the freedom of their country and that of other nations throughout the world. For others, it means giving up material rewards and comfort to serve the ill, the poor, and the disadvantaged throughout the world.

I believe that the program we debate tonight misses all these points. It is a subsidy program that affects a relatively small group of Americans who lack the wealth or family support to obtain an education without some form of service. It is not a true national program, and it asks very little sacrifice. In fact, it risks being little more than tokenism.

It is also a program that ignores the kind of sacrifice that some 200,000 volunteers are making in defending freedom in Operation Desert Shield, and that rewards limited service with substantial payments at a time when our military and underpaid, earn far less than their civilian counterparts, and will receive a pay raise that does not even equal the annual rate of inflation.

Mr. President, on April 13, 1989, I introduced S. 781, the National Service Act of 1989. In this legislation, which was also introduced in the House of Representatives by my good friend from Illinois, Mr. JOHN PORTER, we attempted to draft legislation that was balanced and fair. A bill that looked into the future and tried to address the question of national service from the standpoint that we, as a nation, and those of us in the Congress, have as a primary responsibility the defense of the nation.

At the same time, we believed that the idea of national service could include certain forms of community service. The basis of our legislation was that every citizen has a responsibility of service to the Nation.

S. 781 called for the President to transmit to the Congress by February 15, 1991, a plan that would implement a comprehensive national service program. The program that the President recommended was to include a plan that had; a military service component and a part-time and full-time community service component; applied to young people between the ages of 16 and 26; included provisions to encourage national service by retired persons and was to be consistent with the following findings:

First, that the principal responsibility of the Federal Government is to provide for the defense of the United States;

Second, that an obligation of citizenship in a democracy is service to the Nation;

Third, that while most citizens of the United States view national service as membership in the Armed Forces, national service also includes community service;

Fourth, that the obligation of national service, whether military or community service, should be shared equally by the citizens of the United States regardless of race, creed, ethnic origin, or socioeconomic status;

Fifth, that the recent high quality of volunteers for the Armed Forces should not be allowed to diminish as a result of demographic declines or economic upturns; and

Sixth, that service in the active or reserve components of the Armed Forces or in full-time or part-time community service should be considered as necessary to fulfill the national service obligation.

As you can see, Mr. President, I strongly believe that a national service program is necessary, but I also strongly believe that it is imperative that we maintain a proper balance between the recognition of service in the military and the benefit of community service.

Mr. President, the differential in postservice benefit between military service and community service must be fair, it must be equitable. We must properly recognize the greater sacrifices of those who serve in the military. This legislation however, will not only affect a small number of Americans, it will make the postservice benefits no greater for national service than that for the Montgomery GI bill recipient.

Mr. President, I realize that some who favor this legislation would like to compare military service with national service. They try to show how much more compensation a military service man or woman makes than a national service volunteer. They want to somehow equate the two. Apparently, they do not understand what the country asks of our military forces.

When a person enlists in the military, they sign a binding contract for service in the defense of the Nation.

They have their background scrutinized to ensure that they are of the quality required in the military;

They are required to serve in remote tours away from their family for extended periods of time;

They are uprooted them from their home and community every 2 to 3 years, their children are pulled out of school, and sent to wherever the military wants to send them;

They perform peacekeeping duty in the Siani Desert or with the UNIFIL contingent in Lebanon.

They stand guard duty at the stark, critical outposts along the Korean DMZ;

They are deployed on board ships for 6 months at a time;

They stand midwatch on the fan tail of a destroyer in 50-knot winds and 30-foot seas;

They conduct interdiction operations against a murderous drug cartel;

They do night recovery operations on board an aircraft carrier;

They are required to be on call 24 hours a day, 7 days a week;

They are trained and ready for combat;

They wait in Saudi Arabia and they are aware that they could be in combat in a matter of hours.

Mr. President, the mothers and fathers, the wives, the husbands and the children of those who serve in the military know the sacrifices I am speaking of. They know that their son or husband, their brother or father may well be asked to give his life in the defense of our Nation.

Like Senator NUNN, I hope that this legislation may someday be a first step towards true national service. But, Mr. President, I fear that it will not be. I fear it is a prelude to ignoring the need to serve in our Nation's military forces. I fear that it is only the prelude to a new form of entitlement program, and to the shell of national service—rather than the substance.

The test will ultimately be whether we ask all the Nation to serve the Nation, or a small and less advantaged part. It will be whether we recognize that freedom is the responsibility of all Americans or only a small fraction. It will be whether we clearly distinguish the need to reward those who risk their lives more than those who do not. It will be whether we recognize that real national services consists of the courage of the men and women who serve in Desert Shield, and not simply a desire to earn the kind of higher education that other Americans expect as a matter of more fortunate birth.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I rise in support of the conference report on the National and Community Service Act and wish to commend the distinguished floor managers for their efforts on this important legislation.

Mr. President, one of the greatest attributes of the American people is their willingness to give so generously of themselves, of their time, of their resources in times of need.

Beginning back in 1787 when 55 statesmen volunteered to draft the U.S. Constitution to recent herculean volunteer efforts in the aftermath of the Loma Prieta quake in California; from the El Virita Lewis Foundation's program which brings senior citizen volunteers into our day care centers to the thousands of parents nationwide who volunteer in our Nation's schools.

All represent one of America's oldest and finest traditions, volunteerism.

Today, the Senate is taking final action on legislation which carries this tradition forward. It sends a basic message across the land: reach out and help each other. The rewards both in terms of personal satisfaction and experience gained rarely will be exceeded by any other activities one might undertake in one's lifetime.

President Bush rightfully has focused the Nation's attention on the Thousand Points of Light, an army of volunteers standing ready, willing, and able to help America. The President's words and leadership on this critical issue have served as an impetus to developing a national youth and community service policy.

S. 1430, the National and Community Service Act, builds upon the President's initiatives. Indeed, the final conference report incorporates several of the Bush administration's proposals.

It would establish the Points of Light Initiative Foundation to administer our Nation's community service programs but more important, to encourage every American and every American institution to volunteer their time, energy, and services through community service programs.

In addition, several important amendments which were passed during the Senate's consideration of S. 1430 earlier this year were included in the final conference report.

In California we have had considerable success in bringing promising honors students into the classroom to tutor younger children. Not only do these volunteers gain experience in teaching and serve as role models to their younger counterparts, they also greatly assist our Nation's teachers in providing the individual attention, caring, and guidance which can positively influence young attitudes and young lives.

Mr. President, I am pleased to report that the conferees have accepted language from the Senate bill to ensure that school volunteer programs which place tutors in the classroom to assist teachers would be eligible for Federal support.

The second concern I had which the committee has addressed is to ensure that programs which seek to bring parents into the classroom receive funding under the School and Community Based Volunteer Program.

Without the support of our Nation's parents to provide children with sufficient motivation and self-esteem to learn, the level of education funding or the number of national education goals we set will become increasingly less important.

There is no better stimulant to good learning than parental interest. Every study to date demonstrates that parents can make the real difference.

Therefore, it would seem to me that we should take every action to encourage parental involvement. The conference committee accepted language in the Senate bill will add to the list of priorities those school volunteer programs which utilize parents in the classroom.

Finally, I also would like to point out that the original Senate-passed version of S. 1430 contained specific language I authored to recognize public safety services with the U.S. border patrol as an authorized type of national service activity. Although the conferees have decided that specific references to authorized activities are unnecessary, it is my understanding that the conference agreement would not preclude public safety services such as volunteer service in the U.S. border patrol.

As I stated at the time of the Senate's first consideration of S. 1430, the border patrol has the critical task of intercepting undocumented aliens and stemming the illegal flow of drugs across our borders. All too often, however, the border patrol is called into service for search and rescue, interpreter, and other important nonlaw-enforcement tasks, tasks which could be performed by volunteers.

I also wish to indicate the proposed use of volunteers excludes the use of volunteers in law enforcement or other critical border patrol activities and should not allow authorities to displace or replace paid Federal border patrol personnel. Rather, its purpose is to enhance the effectiveness of border patrol personnel by allowing them to concentrate on their important law enforcement mission.

Mr. President, every individual who volunteers to serve our country, whether in the schools, at youth shelters, in the armed services, at child care centers, in nursing homes, deserves our applause. A national community and youth service policy will turn that applause into a standing ovation across the land.

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, while I will not stand in the way of Senate adoption of the conference report on S. 1430, the National and Community Service Act, there are several points of concern I would like to raise.

First of all, the conference committee report was not filed, and thus not available for Senators and their staffs. A copy of the bill was provided to my office just at noon today, and a copy of the managers' explanatory language was provided about an hour later.

I am frustrated that the conference did not conclude its work until so shortly before adjournment and gave Members just a few hours to analyze the bill as reported. While I appreciate the necessity of the conference committee to take sufficient time to negotiate the bill, I think the conference committee should also appreciate the importance of allowing Members who do not serve on the conference committee ample time to review the bill. This is a 150-page bill, Mr. President, one which the Senate debated at length in February and for which many amendments were considered.

As to the contents of the bill itself, I have some significant concerns about the national service concept as embodied in this legislation. I understand that the merits of the bill sprang out of the desire for greater citizen involvement in charitable activities and public service. I don't understand, however, the concept of paying people for service and for being good Samaritans.

Further, I am even more concerned about such initiatives coming from the Federal Government. It seems to me that volunteer service is a private decision between an individual and the agency he or she wishes to serve. I suspect, Mr. President, that many of the charitable organizations which rely on volunteers will realize little or no benefit from this bill. Instead, many hard working volunteers will likely look at this bill as only another Federal make work program to further drain their tax dollars.

In these final hours of the Congress, as yet another Government shutdown looms over the weekend if we cannot devise a method of meeting our own budgetary boundaries, I believe it is irresponsible to authorize further expenditures for another unnecessary Federal program.

I agree that public service should be encouraged. I agree even more heartily that volunteerism and charitable contributions of time and money should be encouraged. I disagree, however, that Federal infusions of cash and Federal layers of bureaucracy are the best way to achieve these ends.

While I have problems with the general approach of this bill, there are also several specific provisions which concern me. Participants in the conservation and youth corps will be paid a stipend equal to 100 percent of the Federal poverty level for a family of two. It does not account for distinctions in the size of family, whether someone has three dependents or no dependents. In addition to this stipend, participants will receive a post-service benefit of $5,000.

During Senate debate of this matter 6 months ago an amendment of mine was adopted to expand the use of the vouchers provided in the national community service demonstration projects. I added the purchase of a farm or small business as an acceptable purpose for the voucher, in addition to the purchase of a house or college tuition. I regret that this provision was omitted from the final version of the bill.

The committee has made many concessions; I recognize those. Putting the service structure in the context of block grants to States is possibly the best improvement. I also support the change made by the conference committee to defer student loans, rather than forgive debt when students volunteer for a tax-exempt organization. I also appreciate the reduction in authorization levels.

Most importantly, I appreciate the goal of the committee to encourage people, young and old, to develop a broader and deeper understanding of their neighbors, rich and poor. But this attitude cannot be legislated. These activities cannot be federally regulated. and thus, I cannot vote for the bill.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent there be 30 minutes equally divided on both the Dole motion to recommit and the conference report on S. 2104, the civil rights bill, with the time to be under the control of the two leaders; and that when all time is used or yielded back, the Senate proceed without any intervening action to vote on the motion to recommit; and if defeated, vote immediately on the conference report itself with no other motions in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. GORTON. Reserving the right to object. The majority leader went through that very rapidly. Is he asking unanimous consent we vote on the conference report immediately after the vote on the motion to recommit?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, if the motion to recommit is defeated. I am advised this has been cleared.

Mr. GORTON. I regret to state I object to that motion. I wish the opportunity to speak after the motion to recommit is dealt with and before this is brought up on final passage of the conference report.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I inquire through the Chair of the Senator from Washington, how long he would like to speak?

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, I had not even thought of that. I had assumed there would be at least a modest amount of debate on final passage before such motion was made. I am prepared to vote now on the motion—or immediately after this next vote—on the motion to recommit. I felt debate had been completed on that. But that is a different question from final passage. I am simply going to object to that unanimous-consent agreement until I determine who else may want to speak on the conference report. I am not prepared to enter into a time agreement.

Mr. MITCHELL. I had advised this had been cleared by the Republican leader and Senator SPECTER and Senator HATCH.

Mr. GORTON. They did not clear it with me.

Mr. MITCHELL. May I ask the Senator, would 1 hour equally divided, be satisfactory? I am trying to bring to this to a conclusion. I would be pleased with whatever time the Senator would like to suggest.

Mr. HATCH. Will be Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. We were going to have a half hour before the motion to recommit and then a half hour before the final passage of the bill. I think everbody is prepared to move right to the vote on the motion to recommit. We do not have to have anytime for that. Can we work out the time?

Mr. GORTON. That will be entirely satisfactory. I will agree to that right away and an hour will be more than enough.

Mr. HATCH. I want to be assured of an hour to our colleagues. I will be managing the time.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I modify the request. I think I understood the exchange between the two Senators, but let me modify the request, If I misunderstood it, I am sure objection will be heard.

I modify my request to ask that following the disposition of the pending matter, that the Senate proceed to vote on the Dole motion to recommit; and that if that motion is defeated, there then be 1 hour for debate on the conference report on the civil rights bill with that time to be under the control of the two leaders and equally divided; and that when that time is used or yielded back the Senate then proceed, without any intervening action, to vote on the conference report on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the modified unanimous-consent request?

Mr. GORTON. That is entirely satisfactory to this Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that will be the order of the Senate.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank my colleagues. Senators should be aware then we will now vote on the national service bill conference report and then vote on the Dole motion to recommit, and then there will be 1 hour of debate and a vote on final passage of the civil rights conference report. I thank the Senator from Utah for his usual constructive participation and assistance.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

VOTE ON NATIONAL AND COMMUNITY SERVICE ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has expired on the debate on the conference report to Senate bill 1430. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on S. 1430, the National and Community Service Act of 1990. The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that if present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] and Senator from Alabama [Mr. STEVENS] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 75, nays 21, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACT OF 1990—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the question now occurs on the motion to recommit with instructions, offered by the Republican leader for the conference report on S. 2104, the Civil Rights Act of 1990. The yeas and nays are ordered on the resolution. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. May we have order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] would vote "nay."

So, the motion to recommit was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be debate on the conference report, limited to 1 hour with time equally divided between the two leaders.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that the hour designation that was agreed upon previously be reduced to one-half hour, in accord with the previous request, under the usual terms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Without objection, the order is modified and the time allotted will be 30 minutes equally divided, controlled by the leaders.

Who yields time?

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this is a bill that defines the kind of country we want. Senators now have a historic choice. You can vote to repair the fabric of our fundamental civil rights laws and assure fairness for the working men and women of this country, or you can listen to the far right's false cry of quotas and turn a deaf ear to call for justice for the 53 million women and men and 21 million black Americans and 9 million Hispanic Americans in the work force. They understand the issue; they live with it every day: discrimination, prejudice, harassment. Often they can obtain only second-class jobs.

This is a bill that defines the kind of country we want America to be. If we tolerate discrimination, we will lessen our country and America will not be America. Crying quotas is a last resort of opponents of civil rights, and that charge will not stick because it is not true. This is not a quota bill, it is an antidiscrimination bill. Congress understands the difference, and I hope the President does, too. If the President keeps an open mind, he will reject the advice of his Attorney General and he will sign this legislation when it reaches his desk. It is time to end the double standard that defines equal opportunity for women and minorities, no ifs, ands, or buts.

Civil rights is the unfinished business of America. It is always an uphill battle, and this is the lesson of all our history. We fought battles like this many times before, and will fight again and again and again, until we end discrimination in America and fill the promise of this country. It is not over until it is over.

I believe there is a good chance President Bush will sign the bill. If he vetoes it, there is a good chance the Congress will override the veto. Congress overrode a veto of Ronald Reagan, and Congress can override a civil rights veto of George Bush. The President's instinct on many different issues is to split the difference, and often that satisfies many people, but you cannot split the difference on civil rights. It is wrong to split the difference with discrimination. The President has to do more than pay lip service to civil rights, and the party of Lincoln should be the party of civil rights.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will vote favorably in behalf of this conference report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

The Chair recognizes the Senator from Utah.

Mr. HATCH. I yield myself 3 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for up to 3 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, there is not any question of splitting the difference here. It is a question of whether we can get this bill to not be a quota bill, a litigation bonanza for lawyers, a bill that takes away rights of certain citizens and gives preferential rights to others, a bill basically more interested in equality of results for groups than it is in equality of rights for individuals.

That is what this bill is. The definition of "business necessity" is much more burdensome than current law even before Wards Cove. This new definition will permit employers to adopt only minimum standards in the workplace.

The bill still shifts the burden of persuasion in disparate impact cases to employers, compelling them to prove their own innocence. That is not American jurisprudence. The bill still permits broad-scale and across-the-board attack on all employer practices. Plaintiffs do not have to list the specific practice or practices that caused the disparate impact; they just can allege all of them. In many cases these allegations will never be narrowed.

With regard to Martin versus Wilks, as much as we tried to change that language, while better notice is going to be given to employees not parties to the case, they and many others are barred from challenging the implementation of a consent or litigated judgment after it actually harms them. So they are not able to have their right to a day in court. In intent cases, plaintiffs may recover unlimited compensatory damages; there is no cap there. Moreover, plaintiffs can obtain up to $150,000 or a total of the amount of compensatory damages and back pay, whichever is greater, in punitive damages. So there is not a real cap that a lot of people think there is in this bill. It effectively adds jury trials to disparate impact claims when the plaintiff alleges both intentional discrimination and disparate impact discrimination.

The bill extends the statute of limitation from 6 months to 2 years, so there is no requirement to bring suits in a timely manner, and the employer may never get to know up to the end of 2 years whether any business practices he chooses is going to be contested. Moreover, rather than encourage a quick resolution of claims, they can linger and exacerbate tension in the workplace. It modifies the statute of limitations as it runs not just from the time of the alleged illegal occurrence under current law, but also from the time the alleged illegal occurrence has been applied to affect adversely the person aggrieved, whichever is later. This provision overturns at least three Supreme Court cases and opens the door to many stale claims.

It helps lawers by overturning a 1986 Supreme Court decision by Justice Stevens, Evans versus Jeff. That decision allows a defendant, such as an employer, to condition a lump sum settlement offer on the plaintiff's waver of attorney's fees, leaving the plaintiff to work out the fee with his or her lawyer. This provision of the bill will likely have a serious adverse impact on the ability of parties to settle cases.

The bill encourages lawyers to drag out cases by overturning a 1985 decision by Justice Stevens in Merritt versus Chesney, thereby making recovery of attorney fees even easier.

It preserves affirmative action defenses for minorities and women with absolutely no protection for white males, no equality there. It permits uncapped expert fee costs, which would be up from $30 per day. It requires broad construction of at least 70 other civil rights statutes. This will give bureaucrats and Federal judges carte blanche to revise current interpretations of these laws. It does overturn Lorance on seniority suits, and we agree with that. It also overturns Patterson by adding terms and conditions of contracts to coverage under section 1981, and we support this provision as well.

Mr. President, this is not a split-the-difference bill. This is a bill that still has many problems. We need a better bill, a different bill, which I hope we get next year. I hope my colleagues will vote against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. I yield 10 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Washington.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington, Mr. GORTON, is recognized up to 10 minutes.

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, who was the primary sponsor of this bill, said at the beginning of his remarks that our vote on this bill defines the kind of country we want. I agree with him in that respect 100 percent. He also spoke of using this bill to repair the civil rights laws.

What is the repair which is needed to the civil rights laws according to the Senator from Massachusetts? It is a decision by the Supreme Court of the United States of a little bit more than a year ago, named Wards Cove Packing Co. versus Atonio. The holding which the Senator from Massachusetts so substantially disagrees with in that case is this, and I am quoting from the Supreme Court's opinion:

> At the justification stage of a disparate impact case the dispositive issue is whether a challenged practice serves in a significant way the legitimate employment roles of the employer. The touchstone of this inquiry is a reasoned review of the employer's justification for his use of the challenged practice. A mere insubstantial justification in this regard will not suffice. At the same time, though, there is no requirement that the challenged practice be essential or indispensable to the employer's business for it to pass muster. This degree of scrutiny would be almost impossible for most employers to meet and would result in a host of evils we have identified above; i.e., the imposition of quotas.

Mr. President, when this bill was introduced by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, that was precisely the test it imposed, that the business practice be essential to the employer's business. In other words, to create a test which would be impossible, in the words of Supreme Court, for most employers to meet.

The bill, of course, has been modified since then over the objections of the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts, but it remains a quota bill.

Mr. President, if this bill passes, with your vote or with the vote of any other individual here, you can and should in all honesty tell each of your constituents, "You, my constituent, are likely to be passed over for a new job or for a promotion for which you are the best qualified candidate if there is another candidate for that job or that promotion who can successfully perform the job though not as well as you could perform it if hiring you would make your employer's work force less likely in the entire community and if your rival would cause the work force to be more similar to the racial makeup of the community."

The message you will be giving to the constituent is that hard work and qualifications will mean less; race, sex, and religion will mean more. In the words of the distinguished former vice chairman of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights, Morris Abram, this bill will vulcanize and tribalize the Nation by raising the color line. It will stigmatize and demoralize those which it supposedly helps.

Faced with the definitions in this bill, a rational employer who does not wish to be embedded in technical debates of the definition of business necessity or particularity with respect to disparate impact claims, that is to say almost any and every employer, will establish quotas in order to stay out of court. The so-called free and voluntary establishment of quotas will be the only way to escape from protracted endless and highly risky litigation.

This bill is designed to and will result in the establishment of quotas, the abandonment of merit as the principal reason for hiring and for promotions, and the abandonment of a system in America in which hard work and qualifications are the primary ground for getting ahead. The bill will properly be vetoed by the President. It should be rejected by this Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. METZENBAUM. I yield 4 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, first I would like to say that I do regret the rhetoric that was used by the senior Senator from Massachusetts when he started off the debate on this measure. I just do not believe it is correct to characterize the views of those who oppose his position, and indeed, it is a position that I likewise hold.

I wish to commend all who have worked on this legislation. Sure, there is a difference in views. But those views are held because of deep consideration that individuals on both sides have given to the measure.

I, personally, believe that the rulings that have come out of the Supreme Court, that were handed down in 1989, deserve our attention. I do not believe we can let cramped interpretations of our national civil right statutes go unnoticed. I believe we need a civil rights bill that clarifies exactly what we mean when we say all Americans deserve a guarantee that their civil rights will be protected.

As introduced, this measure addressed each of the decisions that had taken place to some degree. Sections of this act faithfully restored civil rights guarantees as outlined by court precedent. Just as clearly, however, the original bill went beyond what was necessary.

In connection with that legislation, I paid careful attention to the hearings in the Labor Committee. I met with civil right groups both here and in my home State. I had meetings with Department of Justice officials and, in a meeting with the President, discussed this measure. Finally, I have had many conversations with colleagues in the Labor Committee or with others who were deeply involved with the legislation.

It seems to me that, since its introduction, it is important to note that this bill has been through several modifications, all of them significant. Changes in the mixed-motive provision, title VII damages provision, the attorneys' fees provision, the consent decrease, have all been covered.

The main debate of "business necessity"—that elusive definition—has been, in my view, resolved, and resolved quite generously. It has been changed three times. The May-Danforth language, the July/Senate language, the October/conference report language, and what we are looking at today is a far cry from "essential" language we saw in February. Not only does it separate business necessity into two categories—those practices dealing with employment selection and those that do not—but the language now uses words like "significant," "successful," "manifest," and "objective." That is a far cry from essential.

I am sorry that the negotiations that we have seen recently did not occur earlier back in January or February. Perhaps if they had occurred then, we would not be having the heated debate we have now. I regret that they did not take place earlier. But I do hope my colleagues will take a fresh look at the bill and become familiar with the report section by section because I think it is deserving of support.

I was heartened to hear my friend from Pennsylvania, who has worked so well and long on the bill, say that negotiations are still going on. The dialog on civil rights that has occurred over the past few months has been extremely productive and further dialog can only help. Perhaps it will lead to what we all want to see happen—the signing of a civil rights bill this year.

Again, I commend my colleagues on both sides of the aisle for working so hard to get us toward a compromise. I have not given up hope on further negotiations. I believe that all of us—including the President—want a civil rights bill.

The legislation before us, however, I believe is a good bill I support it. I think we should give it a chance. I want to emphasize my belief that this is a good civil rights measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

VITIATION OF SENATE ACTION ON AMENDMENT NOS. 2963 AND 2964 TO H.R. 5257

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the action on amendments No. 2963 and 2964 be vitiated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, I rise today to give my consent to vitiate the amendment No. 2964 adopted by unanimous consent after the third reading of H.R. 5257, which passed the Senate on Friday, October 12—subject to one condition. That condition is that I reserve the right to offer a like amendment as an amendment in disagreement to the conference report on H.R. 5257 when that is the pending business before the Senate. My understanding is that such a condition is acceptable to both sides of the aisle.

For the record, let me explain my view of what happened on Friday. I prepared an amendment in consultation with both floor managers for H.R. 5257. The final draft of the amendment was cleared by both floor managers. I consulted with the floor manager for the majority on several occasions to assess the best time for me to offer the amendment, and made clear that I would be available to do so upon his call.

Yet I was not called upon to offer the amendment prior to final passage. When I rushed over to the floor to cast my vote on final passage, I inquired as to why I did not get the opportunity to offer my amendment. It was explained that it was an oversight, and that there was a similar problem with another amendment. The problem would be rectified by a unanimous consent motion after final passage, I was told. Indeed, after final passage, the motion was made that the two amendments be adopted as though they had been adopted prior to final passage. That motion was unanimously agreed to.

But now I am asked to agree to vitiate the unanimous consent agreement by which my amendment was adopted. My amendment was drafted in consultation with the majority and minority floor managers; it was cleared by the the majority and minority floor managers; I stood ready throughout the entire debate on the pending bill to offer the amendment; I inquired immediately upon learning that the opportunity to offer the amendment had passed; and I was assured that the post-third-reading motion would correct the mistake. I did everything in my power to ensure that I would be able to exercise my right as a Senator to offer an amendment to a pending bill. Despite all this, I am now asked to give up my amendment.

For the comity of the Senate, I will do so. But I will do so with the explicit assurance that I may reserve the right to offer a like amendment as an amendment in disagreement to the conference report on H.R. 5257. And I trust that if offered, such amendment will be given due and appropriate consideration by this Senate.

Thank you, Mr. President. I yield the floor.

AGE DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Labor Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 5759, a bill to amend the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection the committee is discharged.

The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5759) to amend the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 to clarify the application of such act to employee group health plans.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 3000

(Purpose: To clarify provisions governing lawful employment practices involving group health plans)

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator HATCH and Senator METZENBAUM.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. MITCHELL], for Mr. HATCH (for himself and Mr. METZENBAUM), proposes an amendment numbered 3000.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, strike lines 3 through 10 and insert the following:

(2) in subparagraph (D)—

(A) by inserting after "For purposes of this paragraph" the following: "and solely in order to make the deduction authorized under this paragraph",

(B) by striking "and" at the end of clause (i),

(C) by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting "; or", and

(D) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iii) the package of benefits provided by the employer is as described in clauses (i) and (ii).".

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, this amendment is directed solely at the technical issue of what can be offset against an employee's severance payment under section 4(1)(2) of the ADEA, as added by S. 1511. This technical amendment does not affect the meaning of any other provisions of the Age Discrimination in Employment Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further debate. If not, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3000) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read a third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, shall the bill pass?

So the bill (H.R. 5759), as amended, was passed.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. HATCH. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CIVIL RIGHTS ACTS OF 1990—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate continued with the consideration of the conference report.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to address the Senate for 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, race has been the most divisive issue in American history.

Race was at the heart of our Nation's most devastating war, the Civil War. Race discrimination distorted the development of democratic systems in many States for more than a century after that war. Race discrimination deformed the lives of millions of Americans, black and white, for many decades.

Today overt racism is rare. The vast majority of Americans believe that each of us should be judged on the basis of our efforts and our abilities, not on the basis of our skin color or our ancestry.

But the legacy of our racial history remains a potent force for exploitation. And it is a sad truth that in the past decade relations between the races in our country have deteriorated.

It is also a sad truth that there have been those, black and white, who have chosen to exacerbate those tensions for their own purposes.

A decade of accumulated race-baiting on both sides has injured our society. Americans have been encouraged to blame national problems on each other, rather than to join together to search for solutions.

Today we have before us a legislative purposal that is modest in concept and scope.

It seeks to restore to the law the interpretation of job-place discrimination which was the law of the land from 1971 to 1989. It would restore explicitly to the law the understanding that a contract cannot be honored in the making and broken in the performance without contravening the law. It seeks to restore the finality of court judgments where discrimination has kept entire police forces and firefighting forces off-limits to black applicants.

The bill explicitly instructs the courts that it is not to be construed to require any form of quota.

Under the prior rulings of the Supreme Court, which were the effective law of the land from 1971 to 1989, no quotas were imposed, no unseen quotas were convertly implemented, no major additional costs to the business community accrued.

Yet today this measure, which restores the law to its prior condition, a condition where no quotas existed, is being attacked and is threatened with a veto because of the spurious claim that it would require quotas.

That is a disheartening development. It is discouraging that almost 40 years after the Supreme Court ruling in Brown versus Board of Education, a full quarter century after passage of the Voting Rights Act and the Civil Rights Act, a full quarter century since America's conscience was awakened by the use of attack dogs and fire-hoses against peacefully assembled American citizens—it is discouraging to learn that we have come so far in time but so short a distance in understanding.

The bill before us does not constitute a major shift in civil rights law. It does not grant discontented employees carte blanche to harass their employers. It requires the same stiff burdens of proof that were required before 1989 and it grants no novel relief to those who are able to meet these substantial requirements.

Yet, despite months of protracted negotiations to seek agreement with President Bush's stated goal of wanting a bill that would reverse these Supreme Court rulings, we still face the likelihood of a veto.

The reasoning for a veto is with all due respect, faulty. The bill does not require quotas. Indeed, it explicitly rejects quotas. The President himself has said that he supports the goal of the legislation—workplaces free of the practices that lead to race-based or gender-based discrimination. He has claimed he wants to sign such a bill.

With the passage of this conference report, he will have the opportunity to sign such a bill.

This legislation does not impose novel demands on corporate employment practices. This legislation does not require quotas. It will not result in quotas. This legislation explicitly rules out any such intention. It explicitly instructs the courts that no quota-style employment action is required or condoned in law.

It is, therefore, difficult to understand the source of the President's concerns about this bill.

The measure gives employers the defense of business necessity with which they have successfully defended against these suits for almost 20 years. It creates no novel causes of action against employers.

Most important of all, it restores the most fundamental American value to this area of law: Equality of opportunity.

It does not mandate equal results. It simply requires that everyone get a fair chance. That is the goal and the promise of our system: That every American is entitled to fair treatment.

It is one of the proudest boasts of our system that in America, no matter who your parents, no matter if they were rich or poor, black or white, Asian or Hispanic, you have a fair chance, an equal opportunity to compete with the most well-born, the best-connected, the most fortunate people in our society.

That fair chance was given to so many of us in past decades. We are now trying to ensure it for others in the future, those who face barriers of a different kind—barriers of race or sex or ethnic origin.

It is the most basic American promise. It is a promise we cannot deny to some Americans unless we want to see it eroded for all Americans.

If today we suggest that a certain degree of unfairness in the workplace is acceptable, if we suggest that reflexive prejudices should not necessarily be penalized, then how long will it be before we accept the claim that segregated workplaces or neighborhoods or schools reflect free choices which we should not disrupt? If we accept the idea that a little bit of discrimination does not matter much in the larger scheme of things, when that discrimination is turned against us, what will be our protection?

It has been too long since an American leader reminded the American people that we are one nation; that the laws we depend upon must serve all of us, not just the favored few; that the fair chance we seek for ourselves must also be available to our neighbor; that our neighbor is an American deserving of the same freedoms and rights we take for granted.

It took the civil rights marches of the 1960's to remind us that the rule of law cannot endure when some are systematically denied the protection of the law which is guaranteed to us all.

Today we face no dramatic crisis such as civil war or civil disobedience. But the challenge we face today is no less real.

It is the lifelong challenge of America: To assure every American a fair chance; the equal opportunity promised by our Constitution. The legislation before us is one element of that challenge.

Yet we face a veto threat from a President who says he wants to sign a civil rights bill. We face a veto threat from a President who has agreed that the Supreme Court's rulings of the last term require correction. We face a veto threat based on vague fears, against a bill framed with very precise language.

That is unfortunate.

It is a rejection of the harsh history through which all Americans, black and white together, have come in the last quarter century.

We fought segregation by law and habit. We fought discrimination based on fears and silent hatreds. We sought to give all our people, black and white together, the economic growth and personal security that will allow them to see each other as fellow Americans, not as potential threats.

Our tragedy has been that our history is bound together and we will succeed or fail together. But that is also our great hope.

America will never be, like South Africa, two nations inhabiting the same continent.

We will always strive toward the goal of one nation, with liberty, justice, opportunity and respect for all.

We have come a far way toward that goal. But the road still stretches long before us.

The promise of our Constitution and our law is great. It is an inspiration to other nations and other societies.

Our ideals have nurtured our achievements. We have created the most widely prosperous, the most just society in the history of the world. How tragic it will be if we fall short of what we can do.

It does not reflect the President of all the people, the President whose vision of a kinder and gentler nation restored American spirits and hopes. It does not reflect the President who sees our society brightened by a thousand points of light.

We have seen stirring events abroad, as the people of Eastern Europe come to grips with the distortions communism forced upon their societies for 40 years. We are seeing the people of the Soviet Union struggle with the deformations that communism brought to their societies for seventy years.

We know that none of these societies will be able to escape their history, however unsought, however unfair. Their future goals and their current preoccupations mirror conflicts frozen in place for decades, aspirations submerged, goals delayed.

Unlike those societies, America does not have to overcome 40 or 70 years of repression. But, like them, we are not free of our own history. And in that history, the relations of the races have been a central fact.

The legacy of our national history is something none of us can escape. That legacy has left Americans of all colors with responsibilities as well as rights.

One of those responsibilities is to create the conditions in our society and in the hearts and minds of our children which will prevent for all time a recurrence of the darkest days of racial conflict in the past.

That is a responsibility for parents, teachers and leaders of all races.

Sadly, for the past decade, our leaders have not fulfilled this responsibility.

In the black community, voices that should have spoken of constructive action have instead turned to recrimination.

In the white community, leaders who should have reminded us of our moral responsibilities sought, instead, to remind us of our differences.

That is why the legislation before us today is important.

It seeks to correct several Supreme Court rulings whose effect would be to dramatically reduce the ability of employees to seek the protection of the law against workplace discrimination.

But, more important, it seeks to restore, once again, the common American understanding that ours is a Nation based on equality, on fairness, and on justice for all. This bill deserves to be supported by every Senator and it also deserves the President's prompt signature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. SPECTER addressed the Chair.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, although he is on the other side of the issue, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, earlier today I spoke at some length and will summarize now by urging my colleagues to support this conference report. Even as we move toward the vote, Mr. President, there are continuing negotiations to try to adjust one point through a concurrent resolution which would bring the President into total agreement with this bill.

Mr. President, there have been very extensive negotiations, and I, along with a number of my colleagues—Senator DANFORTH and Senator JEFFORDS—got into this matter at the request of the President to try to work out a bill.

After Labor Day, the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. HATCH] and former Secretary of Transportation, William Coleman and I sat down around the clock for many days and crafted a bill which is before the Senate tonight. It is not a quota bill, Mr. President, because it does not take statistics and impose that statistical or quota burden on the employer. Instead, it requires that the employee plaintiff prove with particularity the specific business practice or practices which led to the disparity in the statistics or the disparate impact. At that juncture, you come back and the employer may avoid liability by showing business necessity or good business reasons for what he has done.

There was agreement early on, Mr. President, that the decision of the Supreme Court in Wards Cove handed down last year should be changed. For days on end and weeks on end and months on end, we have been crafting the specific language which would meet that goal.

When Mr. Coleman and Senator HATCH and I finished the bill, Senator HATCH said that he found the bill acceptable, although not perfect; he would recommend it to the President, although he would side with the President if the President decided to oppose the bill.

I submit, Mr. President, that there is no one in this body who has more erudition or capability to understand the impact of a labor bill or civil rights bill than Senator HATCH who is the ranking Republican on that committee. I was a party to those negotiations, and I suggest that this is carefully crafted and it ought to be adopted. I believe that a very strong vote by the Senate tonight will be an impelling factor in working out the last minor detail which will bring this country together on a very important item. It would indeed be tragic, Mr. President, if 65 percent of the Congress were to support the civil rights bill and it were to be vetoed and we would not have a civil rights bill in this country.

The minorities and women have good reason to conclude that they are not getting a fair share of economic opportunity. And at a time when Washington has made very significant cutbacks, it is incumbent upon the Federal Government to make sure that everybody has a fair opportunity at a job and a fair opportunity at promotion; that is not a quota bill; that it be balanced, not to put an unreasonable burden on business but to provide fairness, and this bill accomplishes those objectives.

I thank the Chair and yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. How much time do I have remaining, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator controls 2 minutes 12 seconds.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I certainly will finish in that time and we can go to a vote.

Mr. President, the decision before us is not about restoring prior antidiscrimination law. It is about whether the Senate wishes to lead this country down a short road to quota hiring and promotion. It is about whether the Senate wants to slam the courthouse door on some Americans who wish to assert claims of a denial of their civil rights, and it is about whether we will turn title VII into a litigation bonanza for lawyers.

Mr. President, I have on prior occasions on the floor today explained my role in this matter and I draw my colleagues' attention to my own remarks on this subject, so I will not repeat it again after what the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania has said. I commend him for working and striving so hard to try to bring everybody together. We failed but that does not mean we cannot resolve these problems in the future by sitting down and doing what needs to be done.

Mr. President, I rise today to oppose the conference report and to urge my colleagues to do the same. My opposition, Mr. President, is coupled with both frustration and sadness that the parties have not been able to come together on legislation that all of us could enthusiastically support.

The conference report, however, on which we will shortly be voting, is not such legislation. I know that better than most, since I have recently worked day and night trying to resolve problems with the current bill.

It is correct that this revised conference report includes some revisions which were the product of negotiations in which I participated. But these revisions do not even extend to many of the bill's provisions with which I have serious problems. What's more, even those provisions that have been revised have not been changed to the extent I and others thought necessary. Therefore, while I believe some limited improvements had been made, I always acknowledged that the bill still had serious flaws. The changes are clearly insufficient to meet the concerns raised with this legislation.

Mr. President, it comes down to this:

Does the Senate wish to turn the Civil Rights Act of 1964 on its head?

Does the Senate wish to reverse 25 years of title VII policy?

Does the Senate wish to replace the principle of equality of opportunity for individuals with a requirement of equality of results for groups?

Does the Senate wish to lead this country down a short road to quota hiring and promotion?

Does the Senate wish to slam the courthouse door on innocent Americans who wish to assert equal protection and civil rights claims just because it is expected that many such claimants will be white males?

Does the Senate wish to convert title VII from a statute aimed at conciliation and settlement into a statute which will exacerbate conflict in the workplace and emphasizes protracted, costly litigation?

If the Senate wishes to do these things, Mr. President, my colleagues will vote for the conference report.

The time-honored test on civil rights legislation should always be, does it help us to ensure that every American, regardless of race, ethnicity, sex, or disability, will be treated the same? When measured against this standard, Mr. President, this latest version of S. 2104 fails.

First, let us look at the issue of quotas, which the Senator from Massachusetts claims he has finally resolved. Let me quickly mention that if the proponents of this bill wanted to be certain to avoid quotas, they would have accepted Senator DOLE's amendments made by this act, or in any statute amended by this act, shall be construed to require, permit, or result in the adoption or implementation of hiring, promotion or termination quotas * * * on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin.

But, the proponents of the bill objected to that amendment. And, unfortunately, the conference version of S. 2104 does not solve the quota problem. Some claim that all we need to do is to put language in the bill that states that the legislation does not require or encourage quotas, and so the majority added such language in the bill that states that the legislation does not require or encourage quotas, and so the majority added such language in the version of S. 2104 which passed the Senate with 34 negative votes. In conference, another totally cosmetic change was made, adding the word "encourage" to this clause, but none of this language accomplishes anything.

No one on this side has ever asserted that the bill contains specific language demanding quotas. The authors of this bill are too sophisticated for that. The way we encounter quotas under S2104 is not through actual language specifically calling for quotas. Instead, the quota problem is caused by the manner in which S. 2104 drastically rewrites the rules concerning disparate impact cases. This bill leaves an employer with no real alternative but to do all it can to avoid being sued in the first place. And, the only way to avoid being sued is to guarantee that each job in one's work force is a perfect, numerical match of the work force in the relevant labor market for that job. And, the only way to accomplish this requirement is to use hiring and promotion quotas. A clause in the bill saying—"Oh, we don't really mean this to happen"—is meaningless because the operative provisions of the bill will lead to this result, as I have described.

Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act already bans intentional discrimination as, for example, when an employer simply decides not to hire any minorities for a job. Title VII, as construed by the Supreme Court, also bans neutral devices that screen out a higher proportion of one group than other groups when the devices are not job-related. This is the "disparate impact" standard set forth by the Supreme Court in Griggs versus Duke Power (1971). S. 2104 completely rewrites the principles of that decision in the guise of "restoring" it.

Under current law, dating back to 1971, this is what is illegal under title VII's disparate impact theory: A neutral device which causes a disproportionate impact on a particular racial, ethnic, or gender group and is not job-related. Accordingly, it is no surprise that the burden of persuasion is on the plaintiff to prove the existence of each of these elements of wrongdoing—just as the burden is on the plaintiff to establish each element of a tort or contract claim.

Current Supreme Court case law, such as New York City Transit Authority versus Beazer, (1979), however, facilitates the plaintiff's ability in a disparate impact case to meet his or her burden of proving that illegal discrimination occurred. The plaintiff need not prove all of these elements in the initial presentation to the court. At the outset, the plaintiff merely has to identify the specific employment practice he or she is complaining about and show that it causes a disparate impact on his or her group. This constitutes the plaintiff's prima facie case. At that point in the case, the employer must come forward with a credible explanation of "business necessity," justifying the use of the employment practice—or practices—in question. In the words of Griggs, "business necessity" means that employment practices should be "related to job performance" and that "any given requirement must have a manifest relationship to the employment in question." [401 U.S. at 431, 432]. This is a burden of production of evidence, of articulating legitimate reasons for an employment practice.

Once the employer meets this burden, the case has now been sufficiently focused so that the plaintiff is then put to his or her ultimate burden of persuasion—of proving that the employer's explanation is unpersuasive, and therefore, that the employer is guilty of discrimination. The Supreme Court made this clear in 1979, in the Beazer case. Thus, the plaintiff never has to disprove all possible justifications for an employer's practice; the plaintiff's task is simplified by forcing the employer to explain the basis for its practice. It is then—and only then—that the plaintiff must prove that the practice is not job-related and thus discriminatory. This is fully consistent with the manner in which garden variety title VII intent cases are tried. Moreover, from the outset of the case, the plaintiff has the full opportunity for discovery as to the employer's explanations and the evidence in support of those explanations.

For example, if a plaintiff shows that a fire department's employment test disproportionately denies members of a particular group a job opportunity, it is then up to the employer to articulate a justification for the test. The employer might argue that it relied on a 20-year-old study by an industrial psychologist which concluded that the test will yield qualified firefighters. The plaintiff now is on notice as to the justification for the test. The plaintiff can then attack the study's methodology, and can introduce other evidence that the study is faulty or that other tests do an equal or better job of selecting firefighters and with less impact on the group. The plaintiff need not rebut every possible justification for the test, only that which is proffered by the employer. The plaintiff, in short, must prove there is discrimination. There is nothing new or unusual about this.

S. 2104 drastically rewrites the manner in which disparate impact cases are brought under title VII in three crucial ways. In so doing, it overturns Supreme Court decisions in Griggs versus Duke Power Co. (1971), New York Transit Authority versus Beazer (1979), Wards Cove Packing Co. versus Atonio (1989), and others. I stress that the rewriting of the definition of "business necessity" is only one of at least three components that make S. 2104 a quota bill.

First, under S. 2104, a plaintiff is not required to identify the specific employer practice or practices allegedly causing the disparate impact—the imbalance—in its prima facie case. Indeed, many, if not most, disparate impact cases will never be narrowed in scope under bill. Yet every Supreme Court disparate impact has focused on particular practices. Instead, under this bill, a plaintiff need merely point to an imbalance in a job and allege that all of the employer's hiring or promotion practices cause the imbalance.

Second, at this point, S. 2104 does not shift to the employer a burden of producing evidence explaining its employment practices, with the plaintiff retaining the ultimate burden of persuasion to prove that the employer committed discrimination. Instead, S. 2104 shifts the burden of persuasion to the employer to prove that it did not commit discrimination with respect to its employment practices. This requires the employer to prove its innocence and is contrary to Supreme Court precedent. This shift in the burden of persuasion to the employer occurs even though the plaintiff has not shown, and the employer may not know, the cause of the imbalance. It is impossible for an employer to defend itself without incurring tremendous litigation costs.

These seemingly technical changes are highly significant: They make racial, ethnic, and gender imbalance alone illegal. By so doing, title VII becomes a statute whose mandate is not equal opportunity for individuals but equal outcomes for groups. This reverses 25 years of title VII policy. The plaintiff, in any number of cases, can win by merely showing that the number of employees in a job do not parallel the racial, ethnic, or gender breakdown of the labor force for that job, and alleging that all of an employer practices result in the disparity, even if there are many legitimate explanations for the difference. For example, a business with fewer minorities in a particular job may be located in a neighborhood distant from minority neighborhoods and poorly served by public transit. Under this bill, such an explanation is no defense. The easiest way to avoid a lawsuit and its great costs will be to hire and promote by quota. This is true even when the comparison is between members of a group in a job and the qualified members of that group in the actual applicant pool.

Thus, even before we come to S. 2104's rewriting of the definition of "business necessity," S. 2104 is a quota bill.

Third, S. 2104 does clearly redefine the term business necessity, which is the basis of the employer's justification. The bill clearly changes the concept of business necessity from what it was under Griggs. The proponents of this bill have floundered around with so many different definitions of this term, I have lost track of their number. One thing common to these definitions is that they do not represent the Griggs formulation. The current definition says, in relevant part, that:

> In the case of employment practices involving selection * * * or practices primarily related to a measure of job performance, [business necessity means] the practice or group of practices must bear a significant relationship to successful performance of the job or, in the case of other employment decisions, do not involve selection, the practice or group of practices must bear a significant relationship to a manifest business objective of the employer.

The first part of this definition indicates that the bill's proponents finally located the Griggs case, because for the first time they use language appearing in that decision. But, it is the wrong language. This language is from the question presented to the Court. It is not the holding of the Court. To the best of my knowledge, the particular language in the conference report does not appear in any other Supreme Court decision.

The Griggs test is "manifest relationship to the employment in question." This is the definition cited in the Supreme Court's decisions in New York City Transit Authority versus Beazer (1979), Dothard versus Rawlinson (1977), Connecticut versus Teal (1984), and Albermarle Paper Co. versus Moody (1975). Why not use the actual language?

The significant relationship language, applicable to selection practices, is different from manifest relationship and will be construed, as it is intended to be, as a much tougher standard than Griggs. Moreover, the term "successful job performance" permits the employer only to set minimum criteria. If an employer imposes requirements seeking job performance beyond the minimum standard that can be characterized as successful, those requirements will be struck down if they fall with a disproportionate impact. As Frank J. Landy, president of the Society of Industrial and Organizational Psychology, wrote on September 7, 1990, to Congressman AUGUSTUS HAWKINS:

> The use of the term "sucessful" to describe job performance creates an inappropriate dichotomy. It is a well accepted principle in our profession (a principle with wide empirical support) that performance is continuous and not dichotomous. There is no magic line that separates successful from unsuccessful performance. Rather, the generally accepted principle is that higher scores imply higher performance, if the test is job-related. If it is job related, ranking of candidates from the top scorer to the bottom scorer should be the rule rather than the exception. For this reason, we are concerned about the implications of the term "successful" performance in [S. 2104]. In addition, this terminology might suggest that the standard for comparison is minimal qualifications necessary to perform the job. Griggs, on the other hand, permitted employers to adopt higher standards rather than only minimal ones.

In a September 13, 1990, letter from Raymond D. Fowler, chief executive officer of the American Psychological Association, and Alan G. Kraut, executive director of the American Psychological Society, these two experts noted:

> The term "successful" within the definition should be eliminated since it implies that a level of minimal job performance is acceptable for all jobs. We also believe that the term "manifest relationship," which was adopted in the Griggs decision, should replace the term "significant relationship."

In other words, if an employer has been minimally satisfied to date with an employee's performance, but adds standards that require better performance, and those standards fall with a disproportionate impact, they will be struck down under this bill.

Given the way S. 2104 allows blanket challenges to employer practices, switches the burden of persuasion, imposes more stringent justifications on an employer, and eliminates the traditional defenses available to an employer in a title VII suit, there is only one effective means for avoiding liability. Never be sued in the first place. And, how does one avoid being sued? By hiring and promoting persons on the basis of race, sex, and national origin so that one's work force exactly matches the outside labor force for each particular job. Remember, under the revised disparate impact standard, the bottom line is a statistical disparity. If one eliminates that disparity, then one cannot be used. By utilizing employment practices which produce equal numerical results, better known as quotas, an employer can avoid liability.

The bill allegedly resolves some of the problems surrounding the issue of causation; that is, identifying the employment practice that causes the statistical disparity. While I believe that some limited improvement was made in the actual language of the bill on this discrete issue, even the revised language is not my preferred solution. The Supreme Court cases require the plaintiff to identify the specific practice or practices which "cause" the disparity or disparate impact.

In contrast, the revised version refers to practices "responsible in whole or in significant part" for the disparity. Further, the joint explanatory statement of conference committee takes back what I had viewed as at least some improvement in the language of the bill. It seriously waters down the requirement in the bill by explaining that the "significant part" requirement only rules out practices that make a "trivial or insubstantial contribution" to the disparate impact.

The proponents assert that if a plaintiff cannot identify through discovery and other means the practice causing the disparate impact, then why shouldn't he or she be able simply to challenge a group or all of the practices and make the employer provide the justification. The argument fails to address one practical point. If the plaintiff cannot identify the practice which causes the disparity through a discovery process which makes available every employer document and policy, then how can we expect the employer or anyone else to determine what causes the disparity?

Moreover, in 1971, and ever since, the disparate impact theory has been formulated by the Supreme Court to address specific, identifiable neutral devices causing disparate impact and which are not related to the employment in question. The disparate impact theory is not intended for use as a broad-gauged attack against an employer's practices. Congress made clear in section 703(j) of title VII that a mere imbalance in a job is not illegal. This bill, even with this language, effectively overturns this 25-year-old title VII policy.

As Justice O'Connor said in Watson:

> It is completely unrealistic to assume that unlawful discrimination is the sole cause of people failing to gravitate to jobs and employers in accord with the laws of chance. * * * It would be equally unrealistic to suppose that employers can eliminate, or discover and explain, the myriad of innocent causes that may lead to statistical imbalances in the composition of their work forces. Congress has specifically provided that employers are not required to avoid "disparate impact" as such.

Citing section 703(j), as I just did.

As Justice White said in Wards Cove:

> Just as an employer cannot escape liability under title VII by demonstrating that, "at the bottom line," his work force is racially balanced (where particular hiring practices may operate to deprive minorities of employment opportunities) a title VII plaintiff does not make out a case of disparate impact simply by showing that, at the bottom line, there is racial imbalance in the work force. As a general matter, a plaintiff must demonstrate that it is the application of a specific or particular employment practice that has created the disparate impact under attack. Such a showing is an integral part of the plaintiff's prima facie case in a disparate-impact suit under title VII.

Both Justices O'Connor and White warned that a contrary rule invites employers to utilize quotas to avoid a lawsuit.

If a plaintiff cannot identify the practice or practices causing disparate impact in a job, even with the records the EEOC requires employers to maintain, and with the help of discovery, then he or she has available the intentional discrimination theory of liability under title VII.

Kingsley R. Browne, associate professor of law at Wayne State University and a witness before the Labor Committee has written:

> Until this bill, it has always been the law that a disparate-impact plaintiff must challenge specific practices causing the disparate impact. All of the Supreme Court's disparate-impact cases have involved specific challenges to discrete employment practices such as diploma requirements or standardized tests. Attacks on an employer's overall employment processes have consistently been analyzed under a disparate-treatment analysis. Indeed, in the case most directly on point, Furnco Construction Corp. v. Waters, the Court specifically held that where plaintiffs mounted a broad-based challenge to an employer's hiring practices, the case should be analyzed as a disparate-treatment case rather than as a disparate impact case. The Court in Furnco distinguished disparate-impact cases such as Griggs and Albemarle Paper Co. v. Moody on the ground that they involved employment tests or "particularized requirements." The Ninth Circuit employed similar reasoning in rejecting a comparable-worth claim in AFSCME v. State of Washington, holding that the state's practice of reliance on the market in setting wages could not be challenged under a disparate-impact theory. The court held that "[d]isparate impact analysis is confined to cases that challenge a specific, clearly delineated employment practice applied at a single point in the job selection process," and not to judgments involving "assessment of a number of complex factors not easily ascertainable." These considered judicial judgments spanning the last two decades are now being discarded as if they had never existed.

Let me just mention one of the many consequences of allowing a plaintiff to challenge all of an employer's practices without identifying which ones cause the disparate impact: there will be an explosion of comparable worth lawsuits. This bill will resurrect the previously discredited "comparable worth" theory of pay discrimination under title VII. Under this theory, pay discrimination exists if persons in a predominantly female or minority job are paid less than persons in a different job which is predominantly male or nonminority, and some subjective job evaluation study rates the two jobs as comparable in worth. The comparable worth theory rests on the assertion that an employer's whole set of compensation practices, including reliance on market place factors, causes a disparate impact on the compensation of women and minorities. This theory has been rejected by virtually every court which has considered it under title VII. [E.g., AFSCME v. State of Washington, 770 F. 2d 1401 (9th Cir. 1985)].

Under this bill, however, the comparable worth theory will be a winner. Once a plaintiff alleges that all of an employer's pay-setting practices cause a disparity in pay between, say, a predominantly female and a predominantly male job, no employer relying on the marketplace can win that lawsuit. Here is what then-Judge Kennedy, now Justice Kennedy, said in the well-known AFSCME versus State of Washington decision:

> AFSCME's disparate impact argument is based on the contention that the State of Washington's practice of taking prevailing market rates into account in setting wages has an adverse impact on women, who, historically, have received lower wages than men in the labor market. Disparate impact analysis is confined to cases that challenge a specific, clearly delineated employment practice applied at a single point in the job selection process. * * * The instant case does not involve an employment practice that yields to disparate impact analysis. As we noted in an earlier case, the decision to base compensation on the competitive market, rather than on a theory of comparable worth, involves the assessment of a number of complex factors not easily ascertainable, an assessment too multifacted to be appropriate for disparate impact analysis. In the case before us, the compensation system in question resulted from surveys, agency hearings, administrative recommendations, budget proposals, executive actions, and legislative enactments. A compensation system that is responsive to supply and demand and other market forces is not the type of specific, clearly delineated employment policy contemplated by Dothard and Griggs; such a compensation system, the result of a complex of market forces, does not constitute a single practice that sufficies to support a claim under disparate impact theory. AFSCME v. State of Washington, 770 F2d at 1405–06.

If we accept the language of this bill, then we overturn this case of comparable worth. The bill's language that says that if a plaintiff cannot identify the practices causing imbalance then the plaintiff can make a blanket disparate impact challenge against all of an employer's practices creates a huge loophole. In a claim of pay discrimination no one, as then-Judge Kennedy indicated, will be able to identify the specific practices responsible for a particular pay level—that is one of the geniuses of the free market. Under this bill, a plaintiff can indict the free enterprise system and overturn it in the setting of wages. Havoc will result in our economy.

I suggested a way of addressing this concern. My preferred language was not included in the conference report. The language in the conference report states: "Nothing in this subsection is intended to overrule existing cases involving comparable worth." This is very ambiguous language—it is one of the changes that I passed along to the administration, but it does not clearly solve the comparable worth concern. It can be read as nothing more than grandfathering the result in prior cases. But it does not clearly preclude the use of the comparable worth theory after enactment of the new language of this bill.

One other provision, added in conference is wrongly cited as antiquota language: "The mere existence of a statistical imbalance in an employer's work force on account of race, sex, religion, or national origin, is not alone sufficient to establish a disparate impact violation." This was added to section 4.

This language also does not solve the quota problem. As explained by its supporters, this amendment merely requires statistical comparisons between the racial composition of the jobs at issue and the racial composition of the qualified population in the relevant labor market. But, as I have argued for months, this does not avoid the quota problem. Let me use one example to explain why. Suppose a person from a specific group is rejected for a job at a plumbing company. Twenty percent of the plumbers in the relevant geographical labor market are from the group; but only 10 percent of the company's plumbers are from that group. The rejected applicant sues, alleging illegal disparate impact under this bill. All the plaintiff would have to do is show that in the relevant labor market 20 percent of the plumber are from the groups, that the employer has filled its plumber jobs at only half of that percentage, and allege that a group—or all—of the company's hiring practices cause the imbalance. The plaintiff then wins, even if the allegations are somewhat narrowed later in the case, which is not likely to happen in many cases. The only way an employer can win is if, in a reversal of traditional American jurisprudence, the employer can prove its innocence, and do so under a much stricter standard than the Supreme Court set forth in Griggs versus Duke Power.

In short, a mere imbalance in a job—regardless of the overall work force's numbers—is still the basis of a claim under this bill. Moreover, a plaintiff never alleges a mere statistical imbalance anyway; he or she always alleges that employer practices, together with the statistical imbalance, is illegal. This language does not solve the problem.

S. 2104 places in serious jeopardy a wide variety of employment standards which the courts have found to be lawful.

Suppose an employer requires extensive prior flight experience for airline pilot positions. Such a requirement has been upheld by lower courts under Griggs versus Duke Power well before the Wards Cove decision. Under S. 2104, however, it will likely be struck down. For example, in the face of a lawsuit by a plaintiff with 200 hours of flight experience, an airline must prove that a requirement of 500 hours prior flight time is significantly related to successful performance of the job. The court will not be concerned with what standard yields the most qualified employee or is more likely to gaurantee the safety of fellow employees and customers. The standard court will look to see what criteria yields a minimally qualified employee. Further, once an employer uses a particular standard, say, 500 hours of flight experience, it will be impossible for an employer to justify raising its standards to require greater competence or safety, such as 1,000 hours of prior flight experience, if it falls with a heavier impact on a group.

S. 2104's new formulations effectively eliminate an employer's ability to use traditional job standards, such as experience requirements, personnel reports, interviews, and supervisory evaluations. How can they meet a requirement that they bear a "significant relationship to successful performance of the job?" The bill's language is a new standard.

MARTIN VERSUS WILKS

The revised bill also has many other flaws. For example, it continues in section 6 to deny some Americans their equal opportunity to a day in court to assert the most fundamental rights of all: the right to equal protection of the laws and the right to be free from invidious discrimination. It insulates reverse discrimination embodied in a consent decree from effective challenge by a person never a party to the lawsuit in which the consent decree is entered. This section contains some changes from the version which passed the Senate, but does not cure the fundamental problems in this section. It does not represent my preferred suggestions. Basically, all the changes do is provide more detailed notice to employees who are not parties to a case that they are about to lose their right to a future day in court.

Under the bill, therefore, an employee, and most other persons are still denied the right to a day in court after he or she is harmed by a consent decree in a case to which he or she was not a party. Keep in mind, Mr. President, that a right to a day in court does not guarantee a party that he or she will win. All I am talking about here is allowing people to have a fair chance in court to have their say. When we considered this in July, I was only allowed to offer one amendment to ensure that day in court. The amendment would not have changed the law as to who should prevail on the merits of any case. This issue has nothing to do about whether any particular consent decree is lawful or not, it is only about the right to have a fair chance to claim that a consent decree has operated to harm someone. Still, the Senator from Massachusetts successfully offered a meaningless second degree amendment to vitiate my amendment.

Mr. President, suppose you are an employee at a fire department or any other public or private employer. Assume that your employer is being sued under title VII by members of a particular racial, ethnic, or gender group, seeking large backpay awards and numerical relief, whether labeled goals or quotas, in future hiring and promotion. You don't know how hard the employer will resist the lawsuit or for how long. You don't know whether the case will be settled. You don't know whether the remedy in that case might harm you at some point in the future. And, if you try to intervene in the case too early, you could be denied intervenor status because you are premature and will slow down and clutter up the case.

After a few years of litigation, a proposed consent decree suddenly becomes public. It includes numerical relief based on race, ethnicity, or gender. If you seek to intervene upon learning of the proposed consent decree, you can be denied intervenor-party status as untimely. You have a chance to comment on the proposed remedy at a fairness hearing scheduled several weeks after the consent decree is announced, but that is a limited opportunity. It is not the same as being a party in the case. You have little opportunity for discovery or to prepare your arguments. You cannot even appeal an adverse decision. And, of course, it would cost a good deal of money to get into the case, and you still can't be completely certain you are going to be hurt by the consent decree.

A year after the consent decree is entered, you seek a promotion. You are ranked 6th on the promotion list but are passed over for someone else ranked 85th, because of your race or gender, in order to implement the consent decree.

When would you prefer to be able to assert your fundamental right to equal protection of the laws and the right to be free of unlawful discrimination? When the loss is adopted, or when you are actually harmed in fact by operation of the consent decree? The Supreme Court says you should be able to assert your right when you are harmed. This bill says "no."

Is there any substitute for being able to bring a case claiming concrete harm? You studied hard for the promotion test. You learned various job skills, including qualification as a paramedic. You obtained a fire science degree. You had a variety of experiences, including being a chief of a small suburban fire department and service as lead worker and acting officer. You placed sixth on the promotion list. But you were passed over by number 85 on the list, who had none of these qualifications, because of your skin color or gender in order to implement the consent decree. Is that not a more appropriate point to have your claim heard by the court?

This is the position a witness before the Labor Committee, Birmingham, AL firefighter James Henson, found himself in. In Martin v. Wilks, the Supreme Court said his lawsuit challenging actions under the consent decree could proceed. Whether he prevails is a separate issue that turns on the legality of the consent decree as applied to him; but he is entitled to be heard in his own lawsuit. This bill would bar James Henson from having this case heard. He and others like him lose the fundamental right to a day in court if this bill becomes law. Again, I stress, all the Court said in Martin v. Wilks is that you have a right to a fair day in court to be heard, it did not say anything about whether you should win or lose once you get into court.

Ironically, the bill contains several double standards. For example, the bill preserves current case law which protects the right of some Americans to challenge consent decrees, but not others. Suppose the EEOC or the Department of Justice sues an employer on behalf of minorities, asserting the employer discriminated against them in promotions. Assume further that the employer and the Federal Government propose a consent decree which only provides promotions and back pay for some of the minority employees. After the consent decree is entered, in this example, a minority employee who did not get such relief if free to sue the employer in an independent lawsuit to seek it, notwithstanding the consent decree settling the case. But, by overturning Martin versus Wilks, S. 2104 would effectively bar a nonminority employee harmed by this consent decree from ever suing to protect his or her rights when the harm occurs. Sure, that is finality—but only in one direction.

I might add, even if this section is constitutional, which I do not believe it is, we are not obligated to provide Americans only the bare constitutional minimum. For example, the Constitution only prohibits intentional racial discrimination by State and local government employers. Yet the proponents of this bill want to place in title VII rules barring unintentional conduct causing disparate impact.

The Constitution does not prohibit racial or gender discrimination by private employers, but Congress outlawed it in 1964 and gave people a right to sue in Federal court.

The Constitution does not grant compensatory or punitive damages for such discrimination, but this bill does.

The Constitution does not prohibit racial discrimination in the terms and conditions of private contracts, but we are agreed that we should do so in section 1981, and this bill does so.

The Constitution does not prohibit racial and disability discrimination in private housing, but Congress outlawed such discrimination and gave people a day in court to vindicate those rights.

Similarly, even if section 6 is constitutional, why should we grant the bare minimum required by the Constitution when it comes to equal protection of the law? Why shouldn't Jim Henson and others have a right to a day in court if they feel they are being denied that equal protection of the law? Senators do not really need constitutional experts to decide how to vote on this amendment. They just need to ask themselves—is it fair to keep out of court people who are asserting equal protection claims? They do not win their case under this amendment. They just get a chance to be heard after they are actually harmed by implementation of a consent decree.

This bill gives plenty of rights to women and minorities not required by the Constitution. Why should we not allow a right for a day in court to allow people to protect their civil rights and their right to equal protection of the laws?

Mr. President, there are some additional problems with this bill that we have not yet discussed. They help convert title VII from a statute aimed at conciliation and settlement into a statute which will foster costly, protracted litigation, and exacerbate conflict in the work force. Several important provisions of this bill have been little remarked upon, but will have a profound effect on title VII litigation, removing incentives to settle cases.

PRICE WATERHOUSE

Historically, our legal system has been premised on the notion that those who commit wrongs must recompense the injured parties for injuries caused by those wrongs. The Civil Rights Act of 1990 takes a far different approach. It provides that where an employment action is taken for both discriminatory as well as legitimate motives, the employer should be liable for injunctive relief, attorney's fees, and costs, even if the action would have been taken without the discriminatory motive. Although compensatory relief has been eliminated, this provision remains a needless spur to litigation.

A much more sensible solution, and one that would prevent unnecessary cases from further clogging already crowded courts, would be to leave intact the Price Waterhouse decision, written by Justice Brennan. Otherwise, we will be doing what Senator Case warned us against when title VII was originally enacted, writing a "thought control bill" that punishes people on the basis of what they think, even if what they do is completely legal.

In section 9, the bill overturns the Supreme Court's decision in Evans versus Jeff D. There, the court reaffirmed the right of parties to resolve all aspects of a dispute including the right to attorney fees. In other words, if the parties to a suit agree to a settlement at some during the litigation, the settlement agreement can cover attorney fees.

The bill requires that any title VII settlement presented to a court must be accompanied by a certification from the parties or their attorneys that a waiver of attorney fees by the plaintiff was not compelled as a condition of settlement. As I understand it, this provision was included to guarantee that plaintiffs and their attorneys could not be coerced into signing settlements that did not provide adequate compensation for the plaintiff's attorney. Apparently, there is a concern that attorneys who cannot get their share of the settlement from a client will be reluctant to sue employers in the future. Again, it is interesting to see just who is the key group S. 2104 is attempting to protect.

The problem with this provision is that title VII already provides for attorney fees, so the typical settlement will cover this issue as well all other claims. The bill, however, would segregate out the issue of attorney fees and require the parties and their counsel to sign a paper certifying that attorney fees were not compelled to be waived.

Mr. President, how the parties and the lawyers get to a settlement is a matter which should be left to the parties and their lawyers. The bill would have the court review every settlement on this point and allow a disgruntled plaintiff or his or her attorney to revisit the issue after the settlement is agreed to. And, in the case of frivolous lawsuits, they will be even harder to settle.

The bill also undermines the chances for settlement of cases by its treatment of offers of judgment under title VII. This is another instance where the bill departs from the title VII's longstanding emphasis on conciliation and settlement. The Supreme Court's 1985 decision in Marek versus Chesney held that there was no reason to treat title VII cases differently from other civil litigation. Under rule 68 of the Federal Rules of Civil Procedure, up until 10 days before trial, the defendant can offer the plaintiff a dollar settlement. If the plaintiff declines the settlement and goes to trial and wins less than the settlement offer, the employer need not pay the plaintiff's costs incurred after the settlement was declined. Title VII includes attorney fees as part of costs.

This procedure induces the plaintiff to make a realistic assessment of the case and to treat settlement in a reasonable manner. But it does not force the plainiff to settle if the plaintiff thinks a greater amount can be recovered in a trial. It also forces the employer who wants to settle to come up with a settlement figure that has some chance of being accepted by the plaintiff. In this manner, lengthy and costly trials can be avoided.

S. 2104 would effectively eliminate the use of offers of judgment. It does this by taking out existing title VII language that treats attorney fees as part of costs. Thus, under this bill, if a plaintiff rejects an employer's formal settlement offer and later wins a judgment for less than the amount of the offer, the plaintiff can still obtain attorneys fees from the time he rejected the offer. An important incentive for settlement will be lost, and there will be no incentive to force the plaintiff to make a realistic assessment of the case.

Next, section 7 of the bill expands the time for filing a charge to 2 years. Presently, charging parties have up to 300 days in most jurisdictions. They have 180 days if there is no State deferral agency to handle the charge. This has proved to be ample time to file a charge. It is basically the same filing period we provided in the Age Discrimination in Employment Act. Indeed, the existing 300 days is substantially longer than the 180 days for filing a charge under the National Labor Relations Act. By expanding the title VII filing period to 2 years, S. 2104's supporters cannot point to any Supreme Court decisions that needs to be overturned. Instead of encouraging quick resolution of disputes, this bill encourages them to fester, and thus exacerbate tension and discord in the workplace.

In addition, S. 2104 would allow the plaintiff to file a charge not just from the time of the alleged illegal occurrence, as under current law, but also from the time the alleged illegal occurrence "has been applied to affect adversely the person aggrieved, whichever is later." This language overturns at least three Supreme Court decisions: United Airlines v. Evans, 431 U.S. 553 (1977); Delaware State College v. Ricks, 449 U.S. 250 (1980); and Chardon v. Fernandez, 454 U.S. 6 (1981). This opens the door to many stale claims. For example, suppose a person is laid off for intentionally discriminatory reasons in 1990 but does not bring a title VII action within 6 months—or within 2 years, if this provision is changed, per S. 2104. Under current law, this person has foregone his or her title VII claim. If the person is later rehired in 1995, under this bill the person can seek retroactive seniority lost due to the 1990 discrimination, and 2 years of backpay. Moreover, he will be able to seek uncapped compensatory damages and punitive damages of $150,000 or the total of his backpay and compensatory damages as a result of the loss of 5 years seniority and lowered earnings, pain, and suffering since 1990. Oddly, here again, civil rights plaintiffs get two bites of the apple after being harmed. But, an innocent person harmed by implementation of a consent or litigated judgment is effectively barred from bringing a constitutional or civil rights claim. Under these provisions of S. 2104, employers will be forced to defend charges years after events occurred. The existing title VII charge filing requirements are adequate and do not need to be expanded. Even if all of the quota and day-in-court problems are solved, which they are not, the impact of these provisions are profound. They are reason alone to reject this bill.

The latest version of S. 2104 is a seriously flawed bill. It stands for the following propositions:

First, hiring the most qualified applicant is no longer a defense to a charge of discrimination.

Second, employment standards will be seriously eroded.

Third, employers will be exposed to massive back pay liability if their jobs do not reflect statistical balance, that is, quotas, based on race, ethnicity, color, gender, and religion.

Fourth, employers will be required to resort to quota hiring and promotion in order to avoid future liability under the revised theory of discrimination found in this bill.

Fifth, plaintiffs are still able to challenge all of an employer's employment practices upon the mere showing of a racial, ethnic, gender, or religious imbalance in a particular job as compared to the relevant labor pool.

Sixth, upon the showing of this mere imbalance, this failure to meet the quota, the employer is guilty until it proves itself innocent.

Seventh, a far more onerous burden of justification is placed on employers than exists under the Griggs decision.

Eighth, some Americans will be denied their equal opportunity to a day in court to assert the most fundamental rights of all: The right to equal protection of the laws and the right to be free of invidious discrimination.

Ninth, title VII will become a litigation bonanza for lawyers.

Tenth, title VII will be dramatically transformed. It will no longer be a statute encouraging conciliation, settlement of claims, and quick provision of relief to victims of discrimination. It will, instead, be a statute where protracted and costly litigation will be the tool of first resort.

As I said before, the further we as a nation retreat from the principle that all Americans must be treated the same, the closer we come to the guagmire of a spoils system that has more to do with one's birth than one's qualifications. An individual's qualifications and abilities will be less important than the numerical standing of the group to which he or she belongs. And inevitably, group will be pitted against group. The unfortunate fact is that S. 2104 has little to do with the principle or promise of title VII, but it has much to do with creating a brand new era of discrimination.

I am prepared to yield back any time I have.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, do I have time remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio controls 2 minutes 57 seconds. The Senator for Utah controls 1 minute.

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President I ask unanimous consent I be made a cosponsor of the measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. METZENBAUM. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATCH. I yield back my time.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report. The clerk will call the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. EXON] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] would vote "yea."

Mr. SIMPSON. I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] and the Senator from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] are necessarily absent.

I further announce that if present and voting, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. HATFIELD] would vote "yea."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LAUTENBERG). Are there any other Senators in the Chamber desiring to vote?

The result was announced—yeas 62, nays 34, as follows:

So the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE HIGHWAY TRUST FUND FORMULA

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I have filed an amendment that I plan to offer tomorrow to the reconciliation package regarding the highway trust fund formula change. I am very concerned that the small States are having the formula changed without consideration by the Environment and Public Works Committee.

Next year, the Congress will consider the matter of the 5-year highway bill. In the last highway bill, we reached a very complicated agreement on the highway trust fund formula. It is my strongest feeling that the Committee on Finance quite appropriately can increase a tax that goes into general revenue and the highway trust fund, but the moneys that come out of the highway trust fund and any changes in the allocation formula—require action by the proper committee, the Environment and Public Works Committee.

Mr. President, I know that refunds to States range from at least 85 percent up to amounts above that. But there are many other formulas that are not so favorable to the small States.

For example, in the current savings and loan situation, we can make the argument to some of our friends from Texas that Texas gets more than other States. My State has not had any large-scale failures in savings and loans. I feel we are helping to pay for the sins of other States.

So these various formulas work out in different ways. There are housing formulas. There are some States that have more savings and loan failures than others. Some have more student loan failures. It is hard to allocate these things equally. But we reached an agreement regarding the allocation of highway trust funds in the Environment and Public Works Committee.

I feel that this is being violated in the reconciliation package, because the Finance Committee has gone the extra step of changing the allocation formula, and that is unfair to small States. I speak for a small State; I represent a small State. At the constitutional convention there was debate between the large States and the small States. They agreed to a great compromise, where there were more Members of the House for the large States and two Senators from each State to protect the rights of small States.

This highway trust fund formula is a fundamental example of the need for small State Senators to speak out on behalf of their States. So, Mr. President, I have filed an amendment and shall offer it tomorrow, or at an appropriate time, to the reconciliation package to protect the rights of small States, but also to keep the committee system intact. The Environment and Public Works Committee is supposed to set the highway trust fund formula allocations, and I shall insist that it continues to do so.

I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Beginning on page 22, line 15 of subpart B of part I of subtitle D of title VII, strike all through page 23, line 3.

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for morning business with Senators permitted to speak therein.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

AIRLINE SLOT RESTRICTION REGULATIONS

Mr. DASCHLE. I rise today to discuss my continuing concern that rural States are not sharing equitably in the benefits of our deregulated air transportation system.

It seems that all too often my colleagues and I who represent significant rural constituencies find ourselves coming to the floor of the Senate with our backs against the wall pleading for reasonable access to our national transportation network for rural America. Support for maintenance of the Essential Air Service Program is perhaps the most conspicuous case in point.

Today, however, I take the floor not to argue for additional Federal mandates to promote service to rural areas, but rather to call attention to an opportunity for the Federal Government to promote service to rural areas by easing an existing regulation.

American Airlines has indicated an interest in expanding its service to South Dakota and North Dakota. However, the present slot restrictions at Chicago's O'Hare International Airport effectively prevent the airline from initiating this service.

I understand why slot restrictions are necessary at four of our Nation's busiest airports. While it is clear that slots available for landing and take-off are constrained by congestion concerns, DOT restrictions on the use of slots for small commuter planes simply does not make sense. It prevents airlines from expanding service to small-and medium-sized communities that are still waiting for the full benefits of the deregulated industry. In the meantime, the residents of rural America, in part because of the slot restrictions, continue to pay a high premium for a national air transportation network that does not provide competitive service to them.

American Airlines has petitioned the Department of Transportation to amend the slot restrictions at O'Hare to allow stage 3 aircraft with 110 seats or less to use those slots, and that rulemaking is pending. I support American Airlines' position. If the deregulated airline industry is to work effectively, it should have the flexibility to provide service to new areas. South Dakota and North Dakota are two areas that would benefit from this proposed rulemaking.

Mr. President, the airline industry should be afforded reasonable flexibility to maximize the benefits of deregulation to the public nationwide. Regulations that once served a legitimate public purpose, like those imposing slot restrictions, should be reviewed expeditiously and amended where appropriate.

TERRY ANDERSON

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I rise to inform my colleagues that today marks the 2,040th day that Terry Anderson has been held captive in Beirut.

Again we are reminded of the multitude of frustrations plaguing the families of the hostages remaining in Lebanon. This past weekend an Associated Press journalist, Megan McNiff, interviewed Joseph Cicippio's son, David. Her article identifies Joseph Cicippio's freedom from captivity as his son's greatest hope and the possibility that the Government doesn't care as his greatest fear. I rise today that Mr. Cicippio might know that this body shares his hope. And that this Senator—for one—does care.

CENSORSHIP IN SINGAPORE

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, Singapore has been a model of economic success and stability. Nonetheless, the Government of Singapore continues to exhibit a deep mistrust of its own citizens. This is clearly shown by its continued censorship, especially its censorship of foreign periodicals. Government officials apparently believe that Singaporeans cannot be left to make their own judgments. In short, the Government believes in a vigorous economic marketplace, but will not allow freedom in the marketplace of ideas.

According to the Department of State "Country Reports on Human Rights Practices for 1989" "The [Singaporean] Constitution permits official restrictions on the freedom of expression. In practice, freedom of speech and press is circumscribed * * *." This unfortunate fact was again illustrated yesterday when the Wall Street Journal announced that the Government of Signapore's harassment of its sister publication, the Asian Wall Street Journal, has become so intense that it has been forced to suspend circulation in Singapore. Moreover, today the New York Times reports that Singapore's Prime Minister, Lee Kuan Yew, has launched another attack on "the foreign press," blaming the media for the Tiananmen Square massacre. His attacks on the far Eastern Economic Review are well known, indeed infamous.

This intolerance of criticism and free speech reflects deep—and irrational—fears. Singapore is a strong and stable society. Its people are intelligent and well-educated. It has prospered as few nations have through a vigorous capitalist economy. Yet, in 1987–88 the Government arrested, rearrested, and apparently mistreated nine of its citizens for participating in an alleged "Marxist plot." The reaction to the supposed "threat" from these nine individuals was so wildly out of proportion to any conceivable threat—even assuming the Government's most extreme claims—that it defies explanation.

Worse. This type of hostility toward dissenting views and repression of speech and association run the danger of creating the very discontent that they purport to suppress. The Government cannot suppress thought. Trying to do so only invites instability.

Mr. President, during the cold war the United States embraced many nations which did not share our commitment to free speech and human rights. But the cold war is over. Anti-communism will no longer justify drawing close to nations which suppress freedom within their own borders. One wonders, therefore, about reports that the United States is negotiating with the Government of Singapore concerning the possibility of basing United States military operations in Singapore. Is this necessary? More importantly, given the Government of Singapore's distrust of its own citizens, is it wise? The Government's continued censorship and excessively paternalistic attitude toward its citizens raise very substantial doubts about the wisdom of reaching any cooperative military agreement with the Government of Singapore.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that yesterday's Wall Street Journal editorial and today's New York Times article be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Oct. 15, 1990]

A MATTER OF REGRET

We'd like to express our regret, to readers of the global Wall Street Journal, that we are suspending our remaining circulation in the Republic of Singapore. We have concluded that trying to meet the conditions being imposed by the government of Singapore would degrade the integrity of the publication we offer readers throughout the world.

We take this step in a mood of sorrow rather than petulance. We have gone to great efforts to win global circulation for The Wall Street Journal, The Asian Wall Street Journal and The Wall Street Journal Europe, and are proud to count 114 nations where they circulate. We hate to lose any, let alone one with Singapore's prosperity and promise. The Asian Journal and our sister publication, the Far Eastern Economic Review, have taken the brunt of Singapore's efforts to control the foreign press; we have borne this difficulty precisely because of the esteem we hold for its people, its businessmen and their accomplishments.

When Singapore restricted the circulation of the Asian Journal from 5,000 to 400 copies in 1987, our legal counsel advised us to withdraw the remaining copies, advising that they served principally to subject us to the jurisdiction of Singaporean law. Instead, we defended ourselves vigorously in Singapore courts, with little prospect of immediate success, at great expense, and at great turmoil to our editors and executives. In the course of events, our editor and our publisher in Asia have been served with contempt-of-court charges carrying potential jail sentences, and the president of Dow Jones & Co. has been sued for libel on the basis of statements made in New York City. Yet rather than abandon Singapore, we have persisted for the sake of 400 copies.

The government of Singapore has now chosen to codify and augment its press practices in a new licensing law, requiring a license to circulate and providing a government minister with a range of peremptory powers, including the restriction of circulation, an apparently unlimited power to impose conditions on licensing, a requirement for a bond against legal judgments and so on. Its First Deputy Prime Minister has announced that offshore publications may be required to sign a statement agreeing not to claim rights under the Singapore constitution in lawsuits, apparently to spare authorities the embarrassment of defending their actions in public court hearings.

What worries us here is not any one provision. Governments in many nations can already ban us overnight. Other governments require licenses. With or without bonds, we pay valid judgments against us. What worries us is the purpose to which, five years of experience warns us, these powers will be put.

What the government of Singapore wants is for the foreign press to practice self-censorship. A facade of factual reporting will be allowed, but any statement by authorities must be taken at face value; lest it disturb either the political monopoly of the People's Action Party or the pretense of democracy, the press shall not report the opinions of critics within Singapore, let alone the defenses of those in disputes with the government. Those publications that cooperate will be rewarded with larger circulations, as Time Warner Inc.'s Asiaweek was after its recent cover story on retiring Prime Minister Lee Kuan Yew. Those that insist on independence will be hauled into court, handcuffed in defending themselves, forfeit bonds held by the minister, then post new bonds and sign new waivers for their next license.

We think our reporters, editors and publishers have already proved themselves as courageous as any, but see little to be gained by sentencing them to the labor of Sisyphus. Yet we cannot accept the Singapore government's implicit bargain and practice self-censorship. Our aim is to offer our readers around the world one thing: an independence of judgment, the assurance that whatever mistakes we make are our own, not the result of being bent to someone else's agenda. If we start to censor ourselves over 400 copies in Singapore, readers the world around will have reason to doubt our credibility. Yet we have little else to sell, and little else to contribute to a larger public purpose.

We will continue to report on Singapore as best we can from afar, as we have with other inhospitable nations in the past. We regret the inconvenience to traveling readers, and to the 5,000 whc once read us in Singapore. We hope that some future government will someday find it in the interest of Singapore to have us back, as governments of other nations also have. But we are determined that when we circulate in Singapore it will be with our credibility intact.

SINGAPOREAN CITES SIREN SONG OF TV

(By Steven Erlanger)

BANGKOK, THAILAND, October 15.—On the day that The Asian Wall Street Journal decided to stop circulation in Singapore because of press restrictions, Singapore's Prime Minister, Lee Kuan Yew, blamed television reporting for the deaths near Tiananmen Square in Beijing in June 1989.

Mr. Lee made the remark today in Hong Kong, in a speech to the Commonwealth Press Union, before leaving for China. His trip there will be his first since Singapore normalized relations with Beijing in August.

Mr. Lee said Chinese students had been seduced by television coverage of demonstrations in the Philippines and South Korea into believing that they could alter conditions in China.

Such coverage, more than any desire for freedom, he said, encouraged Chinese students to protest.

"China's students forgot that China was a very different country from either the Philippines or South Korea, two countries with close links with the United States, where the media and Congress wield immense influence."

TELEVISION IS BLAMED

Television was responsible for this amnesia, he suggested, saying, "I believe it is this contextless television experience that led to the tragedy of Tiananmen on June 4." On that day, the Chinese Army attacked demonstrators and killed at least several hundred in the streets around the square.

Mr. Lee, who was educated in Britain as well as Singapore, has often spoken of the damage done to Singapore's Asian nature by the individualism of Western values, and often praises his own understanding of Confucianism as a system of communitarian hierarchy and respect.

In a similar fashion, he criticized China's students for not understanding the need for patience and circumspection in their dealings with their aged leaders.

"They had achieved a dialogue with Government leaders," he said. "If they had been patient and circumspect, they could have contributed over 10 years to the gradual opening up of the system, which had already started."

Mr. Lee, 67 years old, is stepping down as Prime Minister in November after more than 30 years in office. A blunt and combative man, he enjoys annoying journalists and challenging their assumptions about how Asian societies function.

HONG KONG PRESS CRITICIZED

In this vein, he also criticized "the foreign press" in Hong Kong, a British colony, for trying "to foist Western values" on the citizens there. He said the Western press had "crusaded for their vision of democracy" in Hong Kong and had thus caused the Hong Kong stock market to fall after the killings in Beijing.

By the Western press, Mr. Lee seemed to have in mind The Asian Wall Street Journal and its sister publication, The Far Eastern Economic Review, both owned by Dow Jones & Company, which have been regular targets for his criticism and libel suits in Singapore.

The Journal and the Review, whose reporters are not allowed to work in Singapore, are the only regional publications in Asia that try to provide Western standards of objective journalism to the societies there. Mr. Lee has had running battles with both publications since 1987, when he restricted the Journal's circulation in Singapore from 5,000 copies to 400, contending that the paper was interfering in Singapore's internal affairs.

The Journal had published an article about Singapore's plans for its stock market but refused to publish the entire text of a 1,500-word letter the Government wrote in response. Singapore also limited the Review to 400 copies for its reporting on political opposition in Singapore and the treatment of dissidents there. In response, the Review stopped its circulation altogether, causing Singapore to alter its copyright laws to allow a local, advertisement-free reprint of the Review to be sold.

PAPER HALTS CIRCULATION

The Journal fought in the courts to restore its circulation. But after the publication of new regulations on the foreign press, approved by Singapore's Parliament on Aug. 30, the Asian Journal announced in an editorial today that it, too, was halting its circulation in Singapore.

The regulations require foreign publications to post an unspecified security deposit against legal judgments and obtain an annual permit if they distribute more than 300 copies in Singapore and carry articles on politics or current affairs in "any country in Southeast Asia," a requirement that will also apply to the Paris-based International Herald Tribune, partly owned by The New York Times and The Washington Post.

Mr. Lee's announced successor, First Deputy Prime Minister Goh Chok Tong, has also said that foreign publications may be required in the future to sign a waiver of rights under the Singaporean Constitution in lawsuits, the Journal's editorial said.

"What worries us is the purpose to which, five years of experience warns us, these powers will be put," the paper said. The Singaporean Government wants the foreign press "to practice self-censorship," it continued. "A facade of factual reporting will be allowed," it said, but nothing to disturb what the Journal called "the political monopoly of the People's Action Party or the pretense of democracy."

Tonight in Hong Kong, Mr. Lee called the Journal's decision unimportant. "Besides," he said, "anything of importance is immediately faxed to anyone who's got an interest in knowing it."

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. McCathran, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 10:05 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the bill (S. 3091) to amend the act incorporating the American Legion so as to redefine eligibility for membership therein; without amendment.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4238) to amend the Public Health Service Act to extend various programs with respect to vaccine-preventable diseases.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4757) to provide permanent authority for the U.S. Supreme Court Police.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 520) granting the consent of Congress to amendments to the Washington metropolitan area transit regulation compact.

The message further announced that the House has passed the following bills, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 4956. An act to revise, codify, and enact without substantive change certain general and permanent laws, relating to transportation as subtitles II, III, and V-X of title 49, United States Code, "Transportation", and to make other technical improvements in the Code; and

H.R. 5769. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes.

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bills were read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 4956. An act to revise, codify, and enact without substantive change certain general and permanent laws, related to transportation, as subtitles II, III, and V-X of title 49, United States Code, "Transportation", and to make other technical improvements in the Code; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H.R. 5769. An act making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

The following bill, received from the House of Representatives for concurrence on October 12, 1990, was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 5388. An act to designate certain lands in the State of North Carolina as wilderness, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

The following bills, previously received from the House of Representatives for concurrence, were read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 5004. An act to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act to designate certain segments of the Mills River in the State of North Carolina for potential addition to the wild and scenic rivers system; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

H.R. 5497. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain lands to be added to the Fort Raleigh National Historic Site in North Carolina; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

H.R. 5507. An act regarding the Early Winters Resort; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, October 16, 1990, he had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 2540. An act to authorize the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution to plan, design, construct, and equip space in the East Court of the National Museum of National History building, and for other purposes.

S. 3046. An act to redesignate the Federal building located at 1 Bowling Green in New York, NY, as the "Alexander Hamilton United States Custom House."

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. BURDICK, from the Committee on Environment and Public Works, without amendment:

S. 2500. A bill to amend title 23, United States Code, to control billboard advertising adjacent to Interstate Federal-aid primary highways, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 101-532).

By Mr. REID, from the Committee on Appropriations, without amendment:

S. 3207. An original bill making appropriations for the Legislative Branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 101-533).

By Mr. BYRD, from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments:

H.R. 5769. A bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes (Rept. 101-534).

By Mr. HOLLINGS, from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, without recommendation without amendment:

H.R. 5170. A bill to amend the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1991 and 1992, to improve aviation safety and capacity, to reduce the surplus in the Airport and Airway Trust Fund, to authorize the Secretary of Transportation to grant authority for the imposition of airport passenger facility charges, and for other purposes.

By Mr. BIDEN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, with an amendment:

S. 982. A bill to repeal a provision of Federal tort claim law relating to the civil liability of Government contractors for certain injuries, losses of property, and deaths and for other purposes.

By Mr. HOLLINGS, from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute:

S. 3094. A bill to authorize certain programs of the Federal Aviation Administration, to require the Secretary of Transportation to implement a National Noise Policy, to authorize airport passenger facility charges as an exception to the general prohibition of state taxation of air commerce, and to repeal certain regulations pertaining to airport operating slots.

By Mr. SASSER, from the Committee on the Budget, without amendment:

S. 3209. An original bill to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 4 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1991.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. WARNER:

S. 3205. A bill to expand the boundaries of the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battlefields Memorial National Military Park, Virginia; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. BURNS:

S. 3206. A bill to provide for the disposition of certain Federal lands created from the public domain in the State of Montana, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. REID, from the Committee on Appropriations:

S. 3207. An original bill making appropriations for the Legislative Branch for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes; placed on the calendar.

By Mr. MITCHELL (for himself and Mr. COHEN):

S. 3208. A bill to amend section 11122 of title 49 United States Code, relating to freight cars; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. SASSER, from the Committee on the Budget:

S. 3209. An original bill to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 4 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1991; placed on the calendar.

By Mr. RIEGLE (for himself and Mr. GARN):

S. 3210. A bill to prevent federally insured savings banks and their affiliates from evading restrictions on risky activities and other safeguards; to the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. WILSON (for Mr. PACKWOOD):

S. 3211. A bill to provide for agency consultation to consider the Northern Spotted Owl; placed on the calendar.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. WARNER:

S. 3205. A bill to expand the boundaries of the Fredericksburg and Spotsylvania County Battlefields Memorial National Military Park, Virginia; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EXPANSION OF BOUNDARIES OF FREDERICKSBURG AND SPOTSYLVANIA COUNTY BATTLEFIELDS MEMORIAL NATIONAL MILITARY PARK

● Mr. WARNER. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce legislation to include land that is historically significant to the Civil War Battle of the Wilderness within the boundaries of the Fredericksburg and Spottsylvania County Battlefields Memorial National Military Park. The same bill has been introduced by my colleague in the House of Representatives, Congressman FRENCH SLAUGHTER.

Mr. President, my colleagues in the Senate will recall that last year they approved legislation later enacted into law authorizing the National Park Service to purchase 762 acres of private land and 593 acres in scenic easements for the expansion of the Military Park. In enacting this legislation, Congress recognized the significance of the Fredericksburg-Spotsylvania area. Four important Civil War battles occurred in this area on the way to the pivotal Battle of Richmond: those of Fredericksburg, Chancellorsville, Wilderness, and Spotsylvania Court House.

The Confederate Army achieved substantial gains during both the battles of Fredericksburg, in December 1862, and Chancellorsville, in April 1863. The Confederate gain at Chancellorsville was also marred because of the loss of the famed Gen. Stonewall Jackson. During the battles of Wilderness and Spotsylvania Court House both in May 1864, General Grant succeeded in pushing Lee back closer to Richmond, despite significant losses. Although these two battles are viewed by historians as Confederate gains, they mark the beginning of a long campaign in which the Federal Army under Ulysses S. Grant ultimately gained its objectives.

The bill I am introducing is designed to foster the preservation and interpretation of Longstreet's flank attack at Wilderness Battlefield. The site is currently owned by a private developer and slated for housing construction. The landowner has now indicated that he is interested in working with the Park Service, Spotsylvania County officials, and private preservation groups to reach an agreement on the protection of this site. Secretary of the Interior Lujan, who only recently announced a plan to encourage public-private partnerships to protect battlefields, has expressed support for purchase of this land, as the first test of his plan.

At this time, discussions among interested groups have yielded a plan for a private preservation group to purchase the land from the developer and hold it until the Department of the Interior is able to purchase the land. The key to making this idea work is the adoption of the legislation I introduce today. While there is not adequate time to consider this legislation during this Congress, I plan to reintroduce the same bill next year. It is my hope that my fellow Senators will consider and approve this bill expeditiously at that time.●

BOXCAR INTERCHANGE PROTECTIONS FOR SMALL RAILROADS

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, along with Senator COHEN, I am today introducing legislation to preserve railroad boxcar interchange protections for class II railroads.

Those protections are scheduled to expire on October 30, 1990. In recent years, the Interstate Commerce Commission [ICC] has allowed destination railroads to deduct empty mileage charges from boxcar hire charges or to store empty cars free of such charges. Railroads also are allowed to negotiate agreements governing boxer hire charges, empty movements, and storage. The ICC permanently exempted small class III railroads from this policy, while Class II railroads were provided with only a 4-year exemption which is now due to expire.

On February 27, 1990, the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad, which is a class II railroad, filed a petition to preserve indefinitely the class II exemption under the ICC's boxcar hire rules.

On October 2, 1990, the ICC denied this petition by a 3 to 1 vote. The ICC Office of Compliance and Consumer Assistance had recommended in favor of the petition. The Office of Economics opposed it.

This decision will affect the State of Maine and the Bangor & Aroostock Railroad [BAR] almost exclusively. Of the approximately 3,400 boxcars owned by class III railroads, approximately 2,500 are owned by the BAR. At the same time, the BAR shares many of the basic characteristics of a class III railroad: limited revenues, limited geographic scope, and limited market power.

The BAR also operates from a unique geographic position affecting boxcar traffic in and out of New England. Located in the Northeast tip of the United States, Maine is literally the "end of the line"— except that it is the "beginning of the line" for BAR boxcars which flow out of the State into interstate commerce. As a result, there is a lack of terminating traffic on the line. The Bar is focused on serving local Maine customers in the paper and forest products industry, who ship to larger highly competitive markets, and they require a high quality, exceptionally maintained boxcar fleet.

In the ICC's Voting Conference on October 2, ICC staff argued that the BAR's petition for a permanent exemption was based on an "unproven worst case scenario concerning its ability to adjust to the new interchange system and increase the efficiency of boxcar use" and that the BAR's claims of undue financial burden lacked "documentation or detail." Instead of directly addressing Maine's unique circumstances, the ICC apparently intends that the BAR should first suffer financial loss in order to demonstrate the need for the exemption which thus far has been in force.

The ICC acknowledged that should the BAR lose revenue and declined to class III status, it would become entitled to the permanent exemption. That would require a loss of approximately $6 million in revenue.

The ICC staff viewed the class II exemption as a "cross-subsidization" and argued that the ICC should not "subordinate interests of connecting carriers and their shippers" to those of the BAR and Maine shippers. Instead, the ICC staff recommended, special protections should be limited to class III carriers.

Here again, the ICC did not directly address Maine's special circumstances or the similarity of the BAR to class III carriers. The interests of the State of Maine themselves seem to have been subordinated to a myopic adherence to strict theory and strict revenue threshholds.

The one dessenting ICC Commissioner noted the BAR's similarity to a class III railroad, its lack of direct connection to other railroads, lack of terminating traffic, and lack of access to boxcars in traffic. When asked whether "geographical location makes any difference," the ICC staff responded that it did not—but without offering adequate explanation.

The ICC staff acknowledged that loss of the protection "will have some effect" on the BAR's revenues, but offered no detailed estimate. Furthermore, the BAR "might very well be able to negotiate with others to minimize any adverse impact." The ICC staff then noted that the BAR 4 years ago supported "what was at the time a political solution in terms of an agreement between Conrail and small class III carriers which provided, if you will, for the class II to get accustomed to life in a different environment."

The dissenting ICC Commissioner noted that the "political solution" preserving the class II exemption for 4 years probably was little more than the best, pragmatic result that could be negotiated. Nothing in terms of Maine's unique circumstances have changed since then. The dissenting Commissioner declared: They took what they could get 4 years ago and got the 4 years and they weren't going to complain * * * their geographical location certainly hasn't changed nor have the traffic patterns changed."

The ICC staff's transactional analysis seemed to argue that if the BAR "had made serious and significant attempts to negotiate arrangements for a car hire and movements of empty cars * * * that if these negotiations had been unsuccessful," then perhaps the recommendation and decision might have been different. This view—and the view that the BAR still can negotiate to "minimize" adverse impacts—ignores the lack of negotiating leverage for a small carrier in its position.

Even though the BAR by revenue is a class II carrier, its circumstances are more like those of a class III carrier. The ICC did not directly address or discuss these special circumstances other than to affirm that special protections are necessary for class III carriers.

In the voting conference, the ICC Chairman observed that "It is always unfortunate that whenever a line must be drawn there are people close to the line on both sides, but that lines must be drawn for practical purposes."

It this case, however, the line apparently was drawn less for practical purposes than theoretical ones. If agency judgment is in error in drawing such lines, Congress retains the power to correct them.

The intent of the legislation is intended to restore practicality by preserving the exemption for class II railroads. At the same time, Senator COHEN and I recognize the ICC's concern for economic efficiency. The protection of the exemption should be justified by special circumstances, and should be reasonable in relation to its purpose. Under the legislation, "special circumstances" shall be deemed to exist when, except for purely intrastate commerce, the ratio of freight cars loaded on a railroad to those unloaded is greater than 2 to 1.

This approach at least seems more appropriate than the situation now created by the ICC, where eligibility for the exemption is based entirely on a class II and class III distinction as determined by revenue.

Earlier this year, the Maine congressional delegation indicated to the ICC a desire to work with the agency in addressing such issues. That is still our intention and desire. There may be other formulations—or solutions—which can serve the purpose of this bill.

We are interested in exploring all possible solutions. One other alternative may be simply to adjust the revenue threshold for class II carriers—which also at least seems more reasonable then requiring a small carrier with special circumstances first to lose revenue in order to qualify for the exemption.

We welcome the assistance of the ICC and other carriers in reaching an appropriate balance of interests. We would prefer that legislation ultimately not be necessary. However, we also are committed to representing the interests of the State of Maine in this issue.

Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senator MITCHELL in sponsoring legislation which would extend to the Bangor & Aroostook Railroad in Maine the basic boxcar hire and car service exemptions which are made available to class III railroads.

In 1986, boxcar interchange protection was accorded to class III railroads on a permanent basis. Class II railroads, such as the Bangor & Aroostook serving Maine, were given 4 years of the same protection. The class II exemption expires this month.

Located in the northeast tip of the continental United States, Maine is truly "the end of the line." Small carriers like the Bangor & Aroostook are completely focused on serving local Maine customers, particularly in the paper and forest products industries, who compete in larger, highly competitive markets. Maine paper shippers require a high quality, exceptionally maintained boxcar fleet. The Bangor & Aroostook needs a dependable stream of boxcar revenue to maintain its fleet and acquire additional boxcars. Loss of the exemption would threaten this revenue stream and the ability of the Bangor & Aroostook to support Maine industries which depend on the railroad.

I believe therefore, it is entirely appropriate to extend to the Bangor & Aroostook the protection that is permanently maintained for class III carriers. The Bangor & Aroostook shares the basic characteristics of class III carriers such as limited revenues, limited geographic scope, and limited market power. It also operates from a unique geographic position affecting boxcar traffic in and out of the State.

The Interstate Commerce Commission considered such exemption in Ex Parte No. 346 (Sub-No. 19B). The entire Maine congressional delegation, Maine's railroad shippers, and the Interstate Commerce Commission's Office of Compliance and Consumer Assistance all recommended this exemption be extended to the Bangor & Aroostook. However, on a split 3 to 1 vote, the Commission decline to extend the car hire protection. It is apparently the Commission's view that the interests of northern Maine can be adequately served through a series of bilateral agreements between the Bangor & Aroostook and its connecting railroads.

I sincerely hope that it will be possible for the Bangor & Aroostook to negotiate a series of agreements which will give a measure of financial and operational predictability for their Maine boxcar fleet. However, I have continuing concern whether a small company will have adequate leverage in negotiations with multibillion-dollar mega railroads. In the event bilateral negotiations are not sufficient to protect Maine's interests, the enactment of this legislation will be both appropriate and necessary.

SAVINGS BANK SAFETY AND SOUNDNESS ACT OF 1990

● Mr. RIEGLE. Mr. President, for myself and Senator GARN, I rise to introduce the Savings Bank Safety and Soundness Act of 1990, a small but important piece of legislation that is urgently needed to close a loophole in last year's thrift rescue legislation.

Last year's legislation, the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989, imposed sharp restrictions on the powers of State-chartered thrift institutions. Those restrictions were essential. During the 1980's a number of States had vastly expanded the permissible activities of State-chartered thrifts. During its 1989 hearings on the condition of the thrift industry, the Banking Committee heard about State-chartered thrifts making all kinds of extremely risky investments—windmill farms, junk bonds, you name it—all underwritten by Federal deposit insurance.

The consequences of that situation were tragic for America's deposit insurance system and its taxpayers. Fifty-four percent of the Federal Government's savings and loan deposit insurance losses in 1987 and 70 percent of such losses in 1988 were attributable to State-chartered thrift institutions in Texas and California alone, two of the States that led the charge on expanding the permissible activities of their thrift institutions.

FIRREA put an end to such abuses by generally restricting State-chartered thrifts to activities permissible for federally chartered institutions. No more junk bonds. No more direct investments. Sharp limits on commercial real estate lending. And a sharp limit on the quantity of loans those institutions could make to a single borrower.

We should have learned an important lesson: States should not be permitted to exploit Federal deposit insurance for the benefit of the local tax base. I thought we had all learned that lesson. I wish we had all learned it. But it appears that some of the States did not.

On September 27, the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, Timothy Ryan, drew the Banking Committee's attention to the problem. He said:

[T]here is a movement afoot in a number of states to pass legislation creating a savings bank charter that could allow many institutions that we know today as "savings association" to escape many of the FIRREA reforms. . . . [Such legislation would give State-Chartered savings banks] broader authorities than savings associations have in key areas including the qualified thrift lender test, the scope of permissible investments, the applicable limits on junk bond holdings, and the limits on commercial real estate lending. We believe that the savings bank legislation creates a mechanism for depository institutions that were clearly within the purview of the Congress' FIRREA reforms to escape the reach of those reforms by operating under a different kind of charter.

Charter flips allow State-chartered thrifts to get out from under the restrictions of FIRREA for the simple reason that FIRREA's restrictions apply to institutions under OTS regulation. But the primary regulator of State-chartered savings banks is the FDIC. And while the FDIC has legal authority to impose comparable restrictions on the institutions it regulates, it has not chosen to do so. An article in the October 5 Washington Post by Jerry Knight brought out the fact that insolvent savings banks are still operating, potentially at significant government expense. The article noted, in part, that:

> The biggest savings bank in the nation is already broke and all-but-certain to require a government rescue costing upwards of $1 billion. Six New England savings banks with more than $1 billion apiece in deposits are struggling to survive.

I commend Director Ryan for bringing the problem of charter conversions to the attention of Congress. It is clearly a legitimate issue. In the 13 months since FIRREA's enactment three States have enacted new legislation permitting State-chartered thrifts to convert to savings bank charters, and I understand that another 8 States are considering such legislation.

In the Wall Street Journal of October 16, reporter Paul Duke notes that "State regulators dispute the assertion that the savings bank charter allows thrifts to dodge federal restrictions" and he quotes Sarah Hargrove, Secretary of Banking in Pennsylvania, as saying that "[t]hat is the most specious argument they could come up with."

But it is not a specious argument. Lest there be any doubt whatever on this point, let me put in the record an August 20 memorandum summarizing the "advantages of converting" from a thrift charter to a savings bank charter. This memorandum was discussed in The Savings and Loan Reporter of October 12, 1990. The first advantage the memorandum lists is "escape from OTS regulation, supervision, and examination." The second advantage it lists is "no QTL test." The third advantage is "no loan-to-one-borrower regulation."

Congress should not permit such evasion. There is no reason why savings banks should not face the same safety and soundness regulations that other insured depository institutions face. There is no reason why they should enjoy forebearances that other insured depository institutions do not. And there is no reason at all why Congress should stand idly by and allow the ranks of such institutions to swell through charter conversions.

I recongize it is late in the session. I recognize the procedural obstacles to closing this loophole in FIRREA this year. But I encourage my colleagues, in both Houses, to take a look at the legislative language we are introducing with a mind toward closing that loophole as soon as we can. I think it does the job. It stops thrift institutions from using charter conversions to get around the activity restrictions of FIRREA.

I ask unanimous consent to place in the record the articles from the press I have mentioned; the text of the legislation we are introducing today; a brief description of its contents; and a letter from the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, Mr. Ryan, endorsing legislation to correct the charter converison problem. I should note that the bill we are introducing today incorporates substantially all of Mr. Ryan's suggestions for legislative reform.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 3210

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Savings Bank Safety and Soundness Act of 1990".

(2) in subsection (a)(2), after "savings bank", by striking the comma and inserting "that is a Bank Insurance Fund member,"; and

(3) in subsection (q)(4), by inserting ", any savings bank that is a Savings Association Insurance Fund member," after "any savings association".

(b) AMENDMENT TO THE HOME OWNERS' LOAN ACT.—Section 2(4) of the Home Owners' Loan Act (12 U.S.C. 1462(4)) is amended by inserting at the end the following: "The term 'savings association' includes a 'savings bank' (as defined in section 3 of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act) that is a Savings Association Insurance Fund member."

SAVINGS BANK SAFETY AND SOUNDNESS ACT OF 1990 SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE

This section designates the bill as the "Savings Bank Safety and Soundness Act of 1990".

SECTION 2. PREVENTING SAVINGS BANKS FROM EVADING RESTRICTIONS ON RISKY ACTIVITIES, LIMITS ON LOANS TO ONE BORROWER, AND OTHER SAFEGUARDS

The Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery, and Enforcement Act of 1989 prohibited federally insured thrift institutions from investing in junk bonds, limited thrifts' exposure to commercial real-estate lending, restricted risky State-authorized powers, limited the amount of money a thrift could loan to any one borrower, and imposed other safeguards on thrifts' operations. But many thrifts are now seeking to evade these safeguards by reclassifying themselves as "savings banks" rather than "savings associations."

This section makes it clear that thrift institutions insured by the Savings Association Insurance Fund cannot escape FIRREA's safeguards by becoming "savings banks."

DEPARTMENT OF THE TREASURY,
OFFICE OF THRIFT SUPERVISION,
Washington, DC, October 11, 1990.

Hon. DONALD W. RIEGLE, Jr.,
Chairman, Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR CHAIRMAN RIEGLE: I know from your comments at the Committee's hearings on September 27th that you are concerned about the growing phenomenon of savings associations attempting to circumvent the requirements of FIRREA simply by changing the form of their charter to become state "savings banks." I share your concern. In my view, these efforts to change savings bank laws are attempts to evade FIRREA's reforms by elevating the form of the charter over the substance of that statute's requirements. They are inconsistent with the general principle that thrift institutions operating with the protections afforded by federal deposit insurance under the Savings Association Insurance Fund, must submit, in return, to the safeguards provided by federal law. At the same time, I would point out that FIRREA provides thrifts with the option to convert to a bank charter, or be so regulated, while remaining SAIF-insured.

The Office of Thrift Supervision has prepared draft legislation that would make absolutely clear that such FIRREA-evasion will not succeed. The Office of Management and Budget advises that there is no objection to the submission of this draft report to Congress from the standpoint of the Administration's program. This draft would clarify that all SAIF-insured thrifts are regulated as savings associations and are therefore subject to all of the safeguards and restraints that FIRREA imposes on savings associations.

Thank you for your attention to this important issue. My staff and I stand ready to provide any further assistance you may need.

Sincerely,

TIMOTHY RYAN,
Director.

Re Conversion to a Pennsylvania State-Chartered Savings Bank.

During the past few months, we have spoken to many of our thrift clients about the significant advantages of converting from a Federal or State savings and loan association or Federal savings bank charter to a Pennsylvania state-chartered savings bank. We are sending you this memo to make sure that you have received this information.

Several Pennsylvania savings and loan associations have already announced plans to convert to State savings banks.[1] If your institution has not yet carefully considered this option, we urge you to do so promptly since we fear that this "window of opportunity" will shortly be closed. The purpose of this memo is to provide you with a thumbnail sketch of the advantages of converting and the procedure which must be followed in order to convert. Obviously, the advice provided in this memo is general in nature. The feasibility of conversion for your institution may be determined only after analyzing your unique circumstances. We have already done such an analysis for several of our thrift clients and we would be delighted to provide you with a similar analysis on an expedited basis.

The first part of this memo will discuss the regulatory framework for savings and loan associations and federal savings bank located in Pennsylvania versus state savings banks located in Pennsylvania. The second part of this memo will discuss the advantages of converting to a state savings bank. The third part of this memo will discuss certain other factors which should be considered. The fourth part of this memo will discuss the conversion procedure.

I. REGULATORY FRAMEWORK AND BACKGROUND

A federal savings and loan association or federal savings bank is regulated, supervised and examined by the OTS and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (the "FDIC"). A state savings and loan association [2] is regulated, supervised and examined by the OTS, the FDIC and the Pennsylvania Department of Banking (the "Department").

A state savings bank is regulated, supervised and examined by the Department and either the Federal Reserve Board (if it elects to become a member of the Federal Reserve System) or the FDIC (if it elects not to become a member of the Federal Reserve System). The important point is that a state savings bank is not regulated, supervised and examined by the OTS. A state savings bank's deposits would continue to be insured by the SAIF.

A federal savings and loan association or federal savings bank is governed principally by the Federal Home Owners Loan Act of 1933 (the "HOLA"). A state savings and loan association is governed principally by the HOLA and the Pennsylvania Savings Association Code of 1967. A state savings bank is governed principally by the Pennsylvania Banking Code of 1965 (the "Banking Code") (the same statute which governs state commercial banks), and either the Federal Deposit Insurance Act (if it elects not to join the Federal Reserve System) or the Federal Reserve Act (if it elects to join the Federal Reserve System).

One unfortunate by product of the Financial Institutions Reform, Recovery and Enforcement Act of 1989 ("FIRREA") is that it subjects all healthy OTS-regulated thrifts to very onerous regulatory shackles (e.g., loans-to-one borrower limits similar to national banks, qualified thrift lender test). These onerous FIRREA provisions do not apply to state savings banks.

There has been much discussion in recent months about the desirability of converting from a thrift to a commercial bank. This is not a practical alternative, at present, for many thrifts [3] because of the: (1) severe federal tax liability which may be triggered by the recapture of the bad debt reserve, (2) inability of a mutual thrift to convert to a commercial bank, and (3) OTS' resistance to such applications. None of these drawbacks apply to state savings banks.[4]

Until recently, only a handful of states, including Pennsylvania, provided for the separate chartering of state savings banks. Thus, the risk that OTS might lose all of their healthy thrifts was minimal. Unfortunately, thrifts located in states which did not provide for a state savings bank charter have lobbied their legislators to authorize such a charter. Quite recently, Illinois and Indiana passed state savings bank laws. Several other states, including Texas, are considering bills that would create separate state savings bank charters. If this trend continues (as we expect it will), it is possible that OTS may at some future time resist applications filed by its constituents to convert to state savings banks. In our view, it is only a question of how long it will take before this very attractive option is closed by the OTS. Thus, any delaying in filing a conversion application may result in it being considerably more difficult to obtain approval.

II. ADVANTAGES OF CONVERTING

The following is a brief summary of the significant advantages of converting into a state savings bank:

1. Escape from OTS regulation, supervision and examination and avoidance of OTS examination fees and assessments

OTS, unlike the FDIC or the Federal Reserve Board, has the authority to assess savings institutions for its working capital needs and to impose fees and assessments in connection with its supervisory activities. We believe that in most instances, even after factoring in the expenses of conversion, the "bottom line" net income of your institution will improve during the first year after conversion to a state savings bank by virtue of your avoidance of OTS assessments.

2. No OTL test

A state savings bank, unlike a thrift regulated by OTS, is not subject to the "qualified thrift lender" test which, effective July 1, 1991, will require that 70 percent (increased from 60 percent) of an institution's "portfolio assets" be invested in residential mortgage loans and related qualifying investments.

3. No loan-to-one borrower regulation

One of the most onerous provisions of FIRREA is the one which subjects OTS-regulated institutions to the same loan-to-one borrower regulation which applies to national banks. This FIRREA provision does not apply to state savings banks and there is no other state or federal law (other than general "safety and soundness" concerns) which subjects state savings bank to a loan-to-one borrower restriction.

4. Broader investment authority

Pennsylvania savings banks may invest greater amounts than OTS/regulated thrifts in service corporations and in real estate development. In fact, in light of a recent amendment to the Banking Code, Pennsylvania savings banks are authorized to invest up to 3 percent of assets (or such higher amount as is approved by the Department) in service corporations, up to 1 percent of assets in real estate and, with the approval of the Department, up to 3 percent of assets (limited to no more than 1 percent of its assets in a particular investment) in "wild card" investments (i.e., investments not otherwise authorized by the Banking Code). Also, Pennsylvania savings banks may lend unlimited amounts to service corporations. By contrast, OTS-regulated thrifts may invest up to 2 percent of assets in service corporations and may make "conforming loans" to service corporation subsidiaries up to 50 percent of capital; they may not engage directly in real estate development. In addition, state savings and loan associations may not generally engage in activities which are not permitted to a federal savings and loan association. Finally, a state savings and loan association (but not a state savings bank) now needs FDIC approval in order to organize a service corporation.

5. Broader lending authority

Pennsylvania savings banks have more authority than OTS-regulated thrifts in terms of the aggregate amount of commercial loans, commercial real estate loans and consumer loans they may make. Prior to FIRREA, it was possible for a federal or state savings and loan association or a federal savings bank to invest up to 40 percent of total assets in loans secured by nonresidential real property. As you know, FIRREA reduced this limit to only 400 percent of capital. State savings banks are not subject to any limitations with respect to the percentage of assets which may be invested in loans secured by nonresidential real property.

OTS-regulated thrift institution may only invest up to 10 percent of their assets in commercial loans not secured by real estate. State savings banks, on the other hand, are permitted to invest up to 20 percent of their assets in commercial loans not secured by real estate.

A state savings bank may make consumer loans up to 30 percent of its assets without having to include commercial paper an corporate debt securities in this "basket" (as is the case with OTS-regulated thrifts).

6. Membership in the Federal Home Loan Bank System

A state savings bank has the same membership privileges in the Federal Home Loan Bank System as an OTS-regulated thrift. Some of our clients have expressed an interest in relinquishing their membership in the Federal Home Loan Bank System and redeeming the Federal Home Loan Bank stock which they own. It is not yet clear whether an OTS-regulated thrift will be able to do so. A state savings bank, however, does not need to be a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank System. For thrift institutions that generally do not borrow from the Federal Home Loan Bank of Pittsburgh, it may, in fact, make sense to relinquish membership in the Federal Home Loan Bank System since new obligations imposed upon the Federal Home Loan Banks by FIRREA have already significantly reduced the dividends they are paying to members.

III. OTHER FACTORS TO CONSIDER

1. Capital requirements

The capital regulations that apply to different types of depository institutions are substantially similar in nature. Most OTS-Regulated institutions that are in compliance with the three aspects of the new capital regulations should also be in compliance with the capital requirements that would apply to a state savings bank.

2. Federal and Pennsylvania taxation

Converting to a state savings bank charter would have no adverse federal or state income tax consequences. Because of the Pennsylvania Mutual Thrift Institutions Tax, we have recommended to a number of our clients that they consider organizing a Delaware investment company subsidiary. Such a subsidiary may be formed by a Pennsylvania savings bank as well as an OTS-regulated thrift.[5]

3. Branching and interstate acquisitions

There are no significant differences in the ability of a state savings bank to expand geographically as opposed to an OTS-regulated thrift.

4. Corporate governance

The trustees (equivalent to directors) of a state savings bank, like the directors of a state savings and loan association, may take advantage of the reduced liability and expanded indemnification rights which are authorized by the Pennsylvania Directors Liability Act. Federal savings and loan associations and federal savings banks are unable to take advantage of the reduced liability and expanded indemnification rights.

5. Mutual holding company

If you are presently organized in mutual form and are interested in forming a mutual holding company, a bill has been introduced in the Pennsylvania legislature which would authorize mutual holding companies for state savings banks. While the authorization for OTS-regulated thrifts to establish mutual holding companies was enacted by Congress in 1987, OTS has not yet seen fit to even propose a regulation which would implement this authority.

6. Stock conversion in future

If you are a mutual institution and think that at some point in the future you may be interested in converting to stock form, it is much more preferable to convert to stock form as a state savings bank rather than as an OTS-regulated thrift. This results from the fact that, while the OTS has very stringent and detailed stock conversion regulations, the FDIC, the Federal Reserve Board and the Department have no regulations. One of the major concerns of mutual thrift management contemplating a stock conversion is that management will lose control. OTS regulations create that possibility by severely limiting the percentage of stock which may be purchased by management in a stock conversion. Management of a state savings bank may in effect purchase a controlling block of stock in connection with its conversion. As you may know, the Green family ended up owning Firstrust Savings Bank in Philadelphia after first converting its mutual federal savings and loan association to a mutual state savings bank.

7. Less regulation

While a state savings bank will be regulated by the Banking Code and certain regulations adopted by the Federal Reserve Board and the FDIC, these regulations are much less extensive and detailed than OTS' regulations. Although it is difficult to relate this regulatory burden to hard dollars, there is no doubt that there is a cost associated with this burden.

IV. PROCEDURE

In addition to obtaining approval by your board of directors and your members or stockholders, the transaction will require approval of both the Department and the OTS. If you elect to become a member of the Federal Reserve System, you will also need approval of the Federal Reserve Boards. If you elect not to become a member of the Federal Reserve System, there is no need to obtain approval from the FDIC, even though the FDIC will be your principal federal regulator.

If you would like to discuss these ideas in more detail, please feel free to give me a call (215-977-2144). As stated at the outset of this memo, we believe that the savings in OTS assessments in the first year alone will, in most instances, be greater than the cost of converting. Unfortunately, this opportunity may not last much longer if the OTS is deluged with applications by thrifts to convert to state savings banks in states that have recently enacted state savings bank laws.

[1] We understand that at least two Pennsylvania state-chartered savings and loan associations (Home Savings, Tamaqua and Pennsylvania Savings Association) have already filed conversion applications with the Office of Thrift Supervision (the "OTS") and that Progress Federal Savings Bank has announced plans to convert.

[2] This would include a state savings and loan association which is using the words "Savings Bank, PaSA" as part of a fictitious name. Such institutions are not legally chartered as savings banks.

[3] If you are a stock thrift that is well capitalized and can absorb the impact of the recapture of the bad debt reserve, it would be worthwhile to consider converting to a national bank or state commercial bank.

[4] OTS recently approved the application of Aberdeen Federal Savings and Loan Association to convert to a state savings bank in the State of Washington.

[5] Forming a Delaware investment company might be a way to avoid liability for this state tax. This is something which you may want to consider doing even if you elect not to convert to a state savings bank.

SAVINGS BANKS: THRIFT HYBRIDS MAY BE NEXT FOR RESCUE

(By Jerry Knight)

A little-known group of hybrid financial institutions that are part bank and part savings and loan have emerged as a new problem for federal banking regulators.

The nation's 465 savings banks are suffering from the same bad real estate loans that have infected the banking and savings and loan industries and upwards of two dozen of them—some worth more than $1 billion—are now expected to fail, government officials and private banking experts agree.

Prevalent in New England, savings banks are state-chartered institutions that nevertheless are insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.

The savings banks won exemption from the restrictions on high-risk investments such as junk bonds and real estate speculation imposed in last year's savings and loan cleanup bill by arguing that they were not suffering from the same problems that wiped out the savings and loan insurance fund.

But since then, the economy of the Northeast has slipped into a recession, and the savings banks are looking more and more like the S&Ls of the Southwest, posing a threat to the FDIC fund that protects depositors when banks fail.

Provisions for potential savings bank failures are one of the reasons FDIC Chairman L. William Seidman recently added $1 billion to his estimate of how much the fund will lose this year, raising the projected loss to $3 billion. To pay for the losses, the FDIC recently raised the insurance premium it charges banks, including savings banks.

Because of the savings banks' unusual niche in the nation's banking system, the FDIC has never included them in its regular reports on the health of the banking system, but now FDIC statisticians are preparing a special report to the FDIC's board of directors on the problems of the savings banks.

"The industry as a whole is sound, but we have some problems," said an FDIC official who asked not to be identified. "There are some that are suffering from [past-due] loans. There are some that are not going to make it."

Private analysts state the problem even more bluntly.

"There are a number of relatively large New England thrifts that will definitely not make it," said Don J. Kauth, a banking specialist with First Albany Corp., an upstate New York investment firm.

"You'll see a number of failures and government-assisted transactions" to sell savings banks, agreed Bruce Harding of Salomon Brothers Inc., the New York investment banking firm.

Data gathered from private sources and interviews with government officials and industry analysts make clear that the savings banks are in trouble. They show:

The savings bank industry as a whole is losing money. The biggest savings bank in the nation is already broke and all-but-certain to require a government rescue costing upwards of $1 billion. Six New England savings banks with more than $1 billion apiece in deposits are struggling to survive.

The General Accounting Office said three savings banks are among the 20 substantial bank failures that are expected to occur in the next few months, although that detail was not mentioned when the GAO predicted the failures last month.

Federal regulators project that as many as three dozen savings banks may fail, and private experts are no more optimistic.

Half a dozen savings banks have failed since the real estate markets in the Northeast started to slide, and more are headed in that direction, predicted James Moynihan, a Boston banking specialist with Advest Inc., a regional brokerage firm. "The entire New England scene has been deteriorating . . . since January of '87 and it isn't getting any better."

Moynihan predicted substantial FDIC losses in Massachusetts, which has the most serious real estate troubles, the most savings banks and the most failures so far.

Connecticut "has deeper problems than Massachusetts," he added. "Connecticut has always lagged Massachusetts," and its problems are just now showing up as real estate ailments spread down from Massachusetts and up from New York.

In New Hampshire and Maine—where the savings bank troubles are fast approaching a crisis—six of the seven largest institutions are struggling to survive, Kauth said. Each of them has more than $1 billion in assets, and if all six were to fail, the total cost to the FDIC could easily exceed $1 billion.

The largest savings banks and the largest potential losses to the FDIC are in New York state. Harding said several institutions began suffering when the Manhattan condominium market fell apart in response to the declining fortunes of Wall Street firms and the big banks.

As a group, the savings banks lost $426 million last year, plus another $52 million in the first three months of this year, according to the latest industry reports from W.C. Ferguson & Co., a Washington and Dallas firm that specializes in banking data.

Ferguson's statistics show the savings banks wrote off $1.3 billion in loans as uncollectable in the 12 months ended in March. Their bad loans jumped from $4 billion to $6.5 billion during that period and are still growing unchecked.

Fortunately, the savings banks were in unusually strong financial condition when their problems began to develop, because many of them took advantage of the boom markets of the mid-'80's to sell stock and build up their capital.

"The New England thrifts had more capital to lose than the southeastern and southwestern ones," Kauth said. "The question is whether the nonperforming assets will outlast the capital."

Ironically, it was the sales of stock to build up their capital that got many savings banks into trouble. After they raised the additional capital, the banks had to put it to work, so they invested heavily in real estate.

The result was exactly what happened in Texas a few years earlier: The thrifts took advantage of laws allowing them to switch from their traditional home mortgage business into commercial real estate, made huge bets and lost.

Their strong capital has enabled most of the New England thrifts to absorb their losses so far, but analysts said the worst is yet to come.

One sign of trouble ahead is that prices of the stocks of savings bank companies are continuing to decline. "I don't see any sign of the savings bank stocks turning around. If the market is the proper tool [for making predictions], we have a way to go," Moynihan said.

Kauth said he believes "a dozen Massachusetts thrifts are immediate candidates to be taken over" and that there are big failures coming soon in Maine and New Hampshire. "New Hampshire Savings currently appears to be the most vulnerable to failure," he said, and OneBancorp., the biggest savings bank in Maine, is "unlikely to survive as an independent entity."

The biggest question mark in the savings bank business is the biggest savings bank: Goldome of Buffalo, N.Y., with $10 billion in assets. It has been insolvent for several years but is being allowed by the FDIC to continue operating.

Goldome had debts that exceeded its cash assets by $467 million as of April 1. To meet future capital standards, Goldome will have to raise an additional $300 million in capital. Coming up with nearly $800 million will be virtually impossible, the investment analysts said.

Goldome's finances are so bad that regulators could shut it down at any time. FDIC officials would not comment on why they have not moved in.

STATE LEGISLATURES MAY BE CREATING LOOPHOLE FOR S&LS

(By Paul Duke, Jr.)

WASHINGTON.—State legislatures may be opening a huge loophole that allows savings and loans to evade the regulations placed on them last year, federal regulators said.

The loophole, under which S&Ls change their charter and become savings banks, in some cases could permit thrifts to return to their risky past of junk-bond investments and aggressive real estate development, the regulators believe. The change in charters also would allow the institutions to escape one of two layers of federal regulation.

But state regulators and some trade group officials angrily denied they are trying an end-run around federal regulation. They said the thrifts are simply trying to cut costs by turning to less expensive state regulation and accused the federal regulators of engaging in a pointless turf battle.

Timothy Ryan, the director of the Office of Thrift Supervision, said he believes he can stop a stampede of thrifts through the loophole simply by declaring that the state legislatures are defying Congress's clear intention to rein in the industry. In an interview, Mr. Ryan promised to deny applications for a charter change in cases where he believes the motivation is to side-step the bailout law. But that approach is sure to be challenged in court. Meanwhile, some members of Congress may move as early as this week to pass legislation prohibiting such charter-switching.

"In my view, these efforts are blatant attempts to evade [the S&L Law's] reforms," Mr. Ryan said in the text of a speech scheduled for delivery today in Chicago. He said he wouldn't allow Congress's intent "to be circumvented by misguided and manipulated state legislatures."

Many states had savings banks before the thrift law was passed last year. Mr. Ryan said he is most concerned about the states that have passed laws allowing thrifts to become savings banks since then—Illinois, Indiana and Louisiana. Similar bills are pending in at least seven other states, including California, Texas and Florida, the scene of some of the worst thrift losses. Many of the statutes, Mr. Ryan said, allow the thrifts to hold junk bonds and other equity investments, and get into real estate development.

The switches don't affect the thrifts' federal deposit insurance.

State regulators disputed the assertion that the savings bank charter allows thrifts to dodge federal restrictions. "That is the most specious argument they could come up with," said Sarah Hargrove, secretary of banking in Pennsylvania, home of two thrifts that have switched to savings bank charters since the thrift law was passed.

Ms. Hargrove said state-chartered thrifts face three regulators—her agency, the OTS, and the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp.—and are interested in switching charters "to get rid of one of the layers."

John Seymour, the top S&L regulator for Illinois, said the OTS was driven by the "fear that healthy S&Ls will convert to savings banks and leave OTS with only unhealthy institutions to regulate." Mr. Seymour said the new Illinois law forbids savings banks from holding junk bonds and places restrictions on real estate development similar to those in federal law. However, the Illinois law does allow the savings banks to maintain a lower percentage of their assets—60 percent—in housing-related investment—than S&Ls, which must hold 70 percent.

Mr. Ryan denied that he was fighting over turf, noting that he isn't opposed to thrifts' becoming commercial banks because they are properly supervised and regulated. He conceded that some OTS fees are too high and said the agency is trying to bring down the costs.●

At the request of Mr. CRANSTON, the name of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. PRESSLER] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2100, a bill to increase the rates of compensation for veterans with service-connected disabilities and the rates of dependency and indemnity compensation for the survivors of certain disabled veterans; to amend title 38, United States Code, to improve veterans' compensation, healthcare, insurance, and housing programs, and to provide for transitional group residences for veterans recovering from substance-abuse disabilities; and for other purposes.

S. 2901

At the request of Mr. PRYOR, the name of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. BRYAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2901, a bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 to simplify the application of the tax laws with respect to employee benefit plans, and for other purposes.

S. 2925

At the request of Mr. DIXON, the names of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], the Senator from Florida [Mr. MACK], and the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. DODD] were added as cosponsors of S. 2925, a bill to authorize the minting and issuance of coins in commemoration of the quincentenary of the discovery of America and to authorize the payment of the proceeds of the sale of such coins to the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Scholarship Foundation for the purpose of establishing a scholarship program, and for other purposes.

S. 2961

At the request of Ms. MIKULSKI, the names of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. BRYAN] and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KERRY] were added as cosponsors of S. 2961, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to promote greater equity in the delivery of health care services to women through expanded research on women's health issues, improved access to health care services, and the development of disease prevention activities responsive to the needs of women, and for other purposes.

S. 3069

At the request of Mr. JEFFORDS, the name of the Senator from New York [Mr. MOYNIHAN] was added as a cosponsor of S. 3069, a bill to provide a method of locating private and Government research on environmental issues by geographic location.

SENATE RESOLUTION 296

At the request of Mr. ROTH, the names of the Senator from Florida [Mr. GRAHAM], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. FOWLER], and the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SANFORD] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 296, a resolution to express the sense of the Senate the support of Taiwan's membership in the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

SENATE RESOLUTION 338

At the request of Mr. SASSER, the names of the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. BINGAMAN], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. LAUTENBERG], and the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 338, a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that the Department of Commerce should utilize the statistical correction methodology to achieve a fair and accurate 1990 Census.

SENATE RESOLUTION 340

At the request of Mr. BURDICK, the names of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. ARMSTRONG], the Senator from Montana [Mr. BURNS], and the Senator from Delaware [Mr. ROTH] were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 340, a resolution to express the sense of the Senate that any proposal to increase the Federal-aid highway program's minimum allocation percentage from 85 to 95 percent should be addressed as part of the legislative process to reauthorize surface transportation programs in 1991.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

HATCH (AND METZENBAUM) AMENDMENT NO. 3000

Mr. MITCHELL (for Mr. HATCH, for himself and Mr. METZENBAUM) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 5759) to amend the Age Discrimination in Employment Act of 1967 to clarify the application of such Act to employee group health plans, as follows:

On page 2, strike lines 3 through 10 and insert the following:

(2) in subparagraph (D)—

(A) by inserting after "For purposes of this paragraph" the following: "and solely in order to make the deduction authorized under this paragraph",

(B) by striking "and" at the end of clause (i),

(C) by striking the period at the end of clause (ii) and inserting "; or", and

(D) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iii) the package of benefits provided by the employer is as described in clauses (i) and (ii).".

RECLAMATION PROJECTS AUTHORIZATION AND ADJUSTMENT ACT

HEINZ (AND KOHL) AMENDMENTS NOS. 3001 THROUGH 3005

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. HEINZ (for himself and Mr. KOHL) submitted five amendments intended to be proposed by them to the bill (H.R. 2567) entitled "Reclamation Projects Authorization and Adjustment Act of 1990," as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 3001

At the end of the bill, insert the following:

SEC. . ELIMINATION OF ABUSES OF RECLAMATION PROGRAM.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This section shall amend and supplement the Act of October 12, 1982 (96 Stat. 1261, 1263) and Acts supplementary thereto and amendatory thereof, and may be referred to as the "Reclamation Reform Act Amendments of 1990".

(b) AMENDMENTS.—The Reclamation Reform Act of 1982 (Act of October 12, 1982, 96 Stat. 1261, 1263), as amended, is amended as follows:

(1) Section 202(4) is amended by inserting before the period ", and including minor children".

(2) Section 202(6) is amended by—

(A) striking "owned or operated under a lease" and inserting "owned, leased, or operated."; and

(B) striking the second sentence and inserting "In determining the extent of a landholding, the Secretary shall include all direct and indirect landholding of any individual or legal entity; except that the attribution of indirect landholdings shall be made in proportion to the beneficial interest held by such individual or legal entity.".

(3) Section 202(7) is amended by striking the period and inserting ": Provided, That all such persons are citizens of the United States or resident aliens thereof.".

(4) Section 202(9) is amended by striking the period and inserting ": Provided, That all such persons are citizens of the United States or resident aliens thereof.".

(5) Section 202 is amended by adding the following new paragraph and redesignating subsequent paragraphs accordingly:

"(8) The term 'operator' means the individual or entity that performs the greatest proportion of the decisionmaking or supervision for the agricultural enterprise on a given landholding or parcel of irrigation land at a given point in time. For the purpose of this definition—

"(A) if an operator is an employee, subsidiary, or otherwise part of a larger entity, the larger entity is also the operator;

"(b) equipment and labor sharing activities among neighbors or family members shall not by themselves be used as a basis for a conclusion that a joint farming operation among such neighbors exists;

"(C) performance of a specific agricultural service for a farm or farm operation, such as agricultural chemical application, pruning, or harvesting shall not by itself cause the party performing such a service to be considered the operator of the land served;

"(D) provisions of an agreement which, as quality control measures, require certain actions to be taken by a landholder with regard to the care of a crop shall not by themselves cause such an agreement to be construed to establish a farming operation;

"(E) provisions of an agreement which permit one party to take operational control over certain land parcels upon specified events shall not by themselves cause such an agreement to be construed to establish a farming operation unless and until such provisions are implemented;

"(F) This definition is not intended and shall not be interpreted to limit the size of farms or farming operations. This definition is intended to limit the delivery of federally subsidized irrigation water to farms and farm operations not larger than 960 acres.".

(6) Section 203(b) is amended by inserting after "leased", wherever it appears, the following: "or operated".

(7) Striking section 206 and inserting the following:

"SEC. 206. As a condition to the receipt of irrigation water for lands in a district which has a contract as specified in section 203, each landowner, lessee, or operator within such district shall furnish the district, in a form prescribed by the Secretary, a certificate that they are in compliance with the provisions of this title, including a statement of the number of acres leased or operated, the terms of any lease or operating agreement, and, in the case of a lessee, a certification that the rent or other fees paid reflect the reasonable value of the irrigation water to the productivity of the land. The Secretary may require any lessee or operator to submit for the Secretary's examination a complete copy of any lease or other relevant agreement executed by each of the parties thereto.".

(8) Section 214(a) is amended by striking "lands in a district which are held by an individual or corporate trustee" and inserting "individual or corporate trustees acting" and by inserting at the end of the paragraph the following: "Such ownership and pricing limitations shall, however, apply to trusts as they would to any other legal entity, and to trustees who also serve as operators.".

(9) Section 224(c) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall establish appropriate and effective penalties for failure to comply with any provision of this Act or any regulation established pursuant to this Act.".

(10) Section 224(e) is amended by inserting in the final sentence immediately before the phrase which begins ", such land may be sold," the following: "And provided further, That the involuntarily acquiring party is not a former owner who sold the land from excess status, or the successors or assigns thereof".

(11) Section 224(i) is amended by striking the last sentence and inserting "The interest rate applicable to underpayments shall be equal to the rate applicable to expenditures as provided in section 202(3)(C).".

(12) Section 228 is amended by inserting "operator or" immediately before "contracting entity" wherever they appear.

(13) Add the following new section 229 and redesignating succeeding sections accordingly:

"SEC. 229. The Secretary, Secretary of the Treasury, and the Secretary of Agriculture shall negotiate and execute a memorandum of understanding or other appropriate instrument to permit the Secretary access to and use of available information collected or maintained by the Department of the Treasury and Department of Agriculture which would aid enforcement of the ownership and pricing limitations of Federal reclamation law, including this Act.".

(14) Section 203 is amended by striking "230" and inserting "231".

AMENDMENT No. 3002

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . MARKET PRICES IN COST-BENEFIT ANALYSIS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Interior shall evaluate all unstarted reclamation projects in accordance with the Statement of Procedures adopted in June 1987 by the Assistant Secretary of the Department of Agriculture, the Acting Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Army, the Washington Representative of the Tennessee Valley Authority, and the Assistant Secretary of the Department of the Interior.

AMENDMENT NO. 3003

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . FAIR MARKET VALUE FOR SALES OF LAND.

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Section 209(f)(2) of the Reclamation Reform Act of 1982 is amended by striking "the date of enactment of this Act," and inserting "October 12, 1982 but before the enactment of the Reclamation Reform Act Amendments of 1990".

(b) FAIR MARKET VALUE.—Section 209(f) of such Act is further amended by adding at the end the following:

AMENDMENT NO. 3004

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . CAPITAL COST RECOVERY.

(a) Section 208(a) of the Reclamation Reform Act of 1982 (96 Stat. 1261) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Such price shall be sufficient to recover an appropriate and substantial share of the fixed costs of construction of works connected with water supply and allocated to irrigation and all other appropriate charges.".

(b) Section 208(c) is amended by adding at the beginning of the sentence "The first sentence of subsection (a) and all of subsection (b) of".

AMENDMENT NO. 3005

At the appropriate place, insert the following new section:

SEC. . REPEAL OF WATER SERVICE CONTRACT RENEWALS.

Section 1(1) of Public Law 84-643 (43 U.S.C. 485h-1(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) not include in any long term contract under subsection (e) a provision for renewal of such contract. If the Secretary decides, in his discretion, to negotiate and execute a renewal of a contract under subsection (e), such renewal contract shall include among other provisions, specific water conservation requirements (including implementation of all cost-effective conservation measures), and penalties for failure to compy with such requirements, and provision for annual pricing adjustments to reflect all applicable government costs, appropriate conservation incentives, and any environmental mitigation obligations;".

MAINE ACADIAN CULTURE PRESERVATION ACT

JOHNSTON AMENDMENT NO. 3006

Mr. LEVIN (for Mr. JOHNSTON) proposed an amendment to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1756) to provide for preservation and interpretation of sites associated with Acadian culture in the State of Maine, as follows:

On page 3, line 5, after "history," insert "historic preservation,".

On page 4, line 23, strike "1 year" and insert in lieu thereof, "6 months".

On page 4, line 24, strike "Secretary, in consultation with the Commission," and insert in lieu thereof, "Secretary".

On page 6, lines 4 and 5, strike "after completion of the study required by section 5," and insert in lieu thereof, "after consultation with the Commission,".

On page 6, line 11, strike "develop and operate" and insert in lieu thereof, "develop, operate, and maintain".

On page 6, line 12, strike "programs" and insert in lieu thereof, "to develop and operate programs".

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BOND ACT

SASSER AMENDMENT NO. 3007

Mr. LEVIN (for Mr. SASSER) proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 5482) to waive the period of congressional review for certain District of Columbia acts authorizing the issuance of District of Columbia revenue acts, as follows:

on page 4, line 19, after the words "except that", insert the following: "the proceeds of bonds issued under such Act shall be utilized solely for renovation and rehabilitation of a presently existing stadium and any related, necessary infrastructure improvements appurtenant to such stadium; and that".

SURVIVABILITY AND RECOVERY OF INSULAR AREAS FROM SEVERE STORMS

JOHNSTON (AND McCLURE) AMENDMENT NO. 3008

Mr. LEVIN (for Mr. JOHNSTON, for himself and Mr. McCLURE) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 2362) to enhance the survivability and recovery of the insular areas from severe storms, as follows:

In section 3, after the word "appropriated", insert "to the Secretary"; and after the words "public health and safety", strike "or" and insert "and" in lieu thereof.

In section 6, strike the words "25 percent" and insert "10 percent" in lieu thereof; and at the end of the section strike the period and insert the following: ": Provided, That the President may require a 50 percent local match for assistance in excess of 10 percent of the estimated aggregate amount of grants to be made under section 406 of such Act for any disaster.".

In section 7, strike the words "Mariana lands" and insert "Mariana Islands" in lieu thereof.

At the end of the bill strike Section 8 and add the following new sections:

"SEC. 8. GUAM HOSPITAL.

There is authorized to be appropriated $2,500,000 to complete the renovation of the Guam Memorial Hospital.

"SEC. 9. DISPOSAL OF EXCESS FEDERAL LANDS ON GUAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION.—As a prerequisite for the transfer of excess lands under section 11, the Government of Guam must enact legislation which—

(1) establishes an excess lands commission the purpose of which shall be to dispose of lands received pursuant to this title to promote economic self-sufficiency and private sector development in Guam;

(2) provides that the Commission shall have the power—

(A) to hold all right, title, and interest in and to all real property transferred under section 11;

(B) to dispose of real properties or interests therein transferred under section 11 in accordance with the laws of Guam and the priorities set forth in the enabling legislation as required pursuant to paragraph 4 of this subsection;

(C) to resolve conclusively all issues related to lands transferred under section 11 and without appeal to any other agency or court of law except as otherwise expressly provided by the laws of Guam; and

(3) provides that the Commission shall make annual reports to the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives, on or before February 15 of each year, on the disposition of lands transferred pursuant to this title and on the activities and actions of the Commission during the reporting period; and

(4) establishes priorities for the distribution and disposal of the excess lands.

(b) UNITED STATES PERSON.—(1) As used in this title, the term "United States person" means—

(A) any citizen, national, or permanent resident alien of the United States,

(B) any partnership, corporation, or other entity organized under the laws of the United States, any of the several States, the District of Columbia, or any Commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States, in which citizens, nationals, or permanent resident aliens of the United States beneficially own or control (directly or indirectly) more than 50 per centum of the outstanding voting securities or other voting interest of the partnership, corporation, or other entity, or

(C) the government of any of the several States, the District of Columbia, or any Commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States.

(2) A partnership, corporation, or other entity described in paragraph (1)(B) shall be presumed to be controlled by individuals who are citizens, nationals, or permanent resident aliens of the United States if—

(A) such individuals are a majority of the partners of the partnership or a majority of the members of the board of directors of the corporation or other entity; or

(B) such individuals have the authority to appoint a majority of the members of the board of directors of the corporation or other entity.

(c) OWNERSHIP OF UNITED STATES PERSONS OF LAND HELD IN TRUST.—For the purposes of this section, the term "ownership of United States persons" means, in the case of a portion of land held in trust, the legal and the beneficial interests of such trust must be held by United States persons.

SEC. 10. TRANSFER OF EXCESS FEDERAL LAND LOCATED ON GUAM.

Except for lands within the boundaries of the War in the Pacific National Historic Park, the Administrator of General Services shall transfer, without consideration and without encumbrances, all right, title and interest of the United States (together with any improvements thereon) in and to any real property on Guam which is determined to be excess under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 471 et seq.) to the Commission to be established by the laws of Guam for disposition in accordance with section 10. Any property subject to this title shall not be subject to Public Law 100-77 (101 Stat. 482). Title to any real property conveyed pursuant to this title shall revert to the United States if the Commission attempts to convey or otherwise transfer ownership of such property other than to a United States person.

SEC. 11. REPEAL OF CERTAIN CONDITIONS ON LAND TRANSFERRED TO GUAM.

Section 818(b)(2) of Public Law 96-418 (94 Stat. 1782), as amended, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 12. TERRITORIAL ENERGY ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.

(a)(1) The Secretary of Energy, pursuant to the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Policy Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5901, et seq.), may grant financial assistance to Insular area governments to carry out projects to evaluate the feasibility of, develop options for, and encourage the adoption of energy efficiency and renewable energy measures which reduce the dependency of the insular area.

(2) Any applicant for financial assistance under this section must evidence coordination and cooperation with, and support from, the affected local energy entities in the area with necessary expertise to successfully effectuate the project, including, but not limited to, the local energy agencies, power authorities, and public works departments.

(3) In determining the amount of financial assistance to be provided for a proposed energy-efficiency or renewable energy measure, the Secretary shall consider—

(A) whether the measure will reduce the relative dependence of the Insular area on imported fuels;

(B) the ease and costs of operation and maintenance of any facilities contemplated as a part of the project;

(C) whether the project will rely on the use of conservation measures or indigenous, renewable energy resources that were identified in the 1982 Territorial Energy Assessment or are identified by the secretary as consistent with the purpose of this section;

(D) whether the measure will contribute significantly to the quality of the environment in the Insular area; and

(E) any other factors which the Secretary may determine to be relevant to a particular project or measure.

(4) The Secretary shall require at least 20 per centum of the costs of any project under this section to be provided from non-Federal sources. Such cost sharing may be in the form of in-kind services, donated equipment, or any combination thereof.

(b) for the purpose of this section, the term—

(1) "Insular area government" means the government of American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Federal States of Micronesia, Guam, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Republic of Palau, or the United States Virgin Islands.

(2) "1982 Territorial Energy Assessment" means the assessment prepared by the Department of Energy pursuant to the Omnibus Territorial Act. (P.L. 96-597, 94 Stat. 3480; as amended by P.L. 99-213, 97 Stat. 1460)

(c) For each fiscal year, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this section, $500,000.

BAN ON MINERAL RESOURCE ACTIVITIES IN ANTARCTICA

KERRY AMENDMENT NO. 3009

Mr. LEVIN (for Mr. KERRY) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 2575) to urge the Secretary of State to negotiate a ban on mineral resource activities in Antarctica, and for other purposes, as follows:

In amendment , delete all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Antarctica Protection Act of 1990".

For the purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "Antarctica" means the area of the Antarctic convergence as defined in section 303(1) of the Antarctic Marine Living Resources Act of 1984 (16 U.S.C. 2432);

(2) the term "mineral resources" means all nonliving natural nonrenewable resources, including fossil fuels, minerals, whether metallic or non-metallic, but does not include ice, snow or water;

(3) the term "person" means any individual, corporation, partnership, trust, association, or any other private entity existing or organized under the laws of the United States, or any officer, employee, agent, department, or other instrumentality of the Federal Government or of any State or political subdivision thereof; and

(4) the term "minerals resource activity" means 1 prospecting, exploration, or development activities in Antarctica of mineral resources, but does not include scientific research within the meaning of Article III of the Antarctic Treaty, done in Washington on December 1, 1959.

SEC. 3. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the Antarctic continent and its associated and dependent ecosystems is a distinctive environment providing a habitat for many unique species and offering a natural laboratory from which to monitor critical aspects of stratospheric ozone depletion and global climate change;

(2) Antarctica is protected by a series of international agreements, including the Antarctic Treaty and associated recommendations, the Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Seals, and the Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources which are intended to conserve the renewable natural resources of Antarctica and to recognize the importance of Antarctica for the conduct of scientific research;

(30 recurring and recent developments in Antarctica, including increased siting of scientific stations, poor waste disposal practices, oil spills, increased tourism, and the over-exploitation of marine living resources have resulted in serious questions about the adequacy and implementation of existing agreements to protect the Antarctic environment and its living marine resources;

(4) the parties to the Antarctic Treaty have recently negotiated a Convention of the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities which the United States has signed but not yet ratified;

(5) the Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities does not guarantee the preservation of the fragile environment of Antarctica and could actually stimulate movement toward commercial exploitation;

(6) the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties have agreed to a voluntary ban on Antarctic mineral resources activities which needs to be made legally binding;

(7) the level of scientific study, including necessary support facilities has increased, in part to justify achieving the status of a consultative party under the Antarctic Treaty, to the point that some scientific programs may be degrading the Antarctic environment; and

(8) the planned 1990 special consultative meeting of parties to the Antarctica Treaty and the imminence of the thirtieth anniversary of the Antarctica Treaty provide opportunities for the United States to exercise leadership toward protection and sound management of Antarctica.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of the Act to—

(1) strengthen substantially overall environmental protection of Antarctica;

(2) prohibit prospecting, exploration and exploitation of Antarctic mineral resources by United States citizens and other persons or entities subject to the jurisdiction of the United States;

(3) urge other nations to joint the United States in immediately negotiating one or more international agreements to provide an indefinite ban on all minerals activities in Antarctica and comprehensive protection for Antarctica and its associated and dependent ecosystems; and

(4) urge all nations to consider a permanent ban on Antarctic mineral resource activities.

SEC. 4. PROHIBITION ON ANTARCTIC MINERAL RESOURCE ACTIVITIES.

Pending an agreement among the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, in force for the United States, to which the Senate has given advice and consent or which is authorized by further legislation by the Congress, which includes an indefinite ban on Antarctic mineral resource activities, it is unlawful for any person to engage in, finance, directly or indirectly, or knowingly provide assistance to any Antarctic minerals resource activity.

SEC. 5 INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT.

(a) It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State should enter into negotiations with the consultative parties described in paragraphs (1) and (2) of Article IX of the Antarctica Treaty, done at Washington on December 1, 1959, for the purpose of concluding one or more international agreements—

(1) to seek a prohibition or indefinite ban on Antarctic mineral resource activities by all parties to the Antarctic Treaty;

(2) to grant Antarctica special protective status as land of science dedicated to wilderness protection, international cooperation and scientific research;

(3) to conserve and protect permanently the natural environment of Antarctica and its associated and dependent ecosystems;

(4) to ensure that the results of all scientific investigation relating to geological processes and structures be made openly available to the international scientific community, as required by the Antarctic Treaty; and

(5) to include other comprehensive measures for the protection of the Antarctic environment.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that any treaty or other international agreement submitted by the President to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification relating to mineral resources or activities in Antarctica should be consistent with the purpose and provisions of this Act.

SEC. 6. ENFORCEMENT.

A violation of this Act, any regulation promulgated under this Act, or a term or condition of a license issued under this Act shall be deemed a violation of the Antarctic Marine Living Resources Convention Act (16 U.S.C. 2431-2444) and shall be enforced under that act by the Under Secretary or another Federal official to whom the Under Secretary has delegated this responsibility.

CONSENT TO AMENDMENTS OF THE HAWAIIAN LEGISLATURE TO THE HAWAIIAN HOMES COMMISSION ACT, 1920

AKAKA AMENDMENT NO. 3010

Mr. LEVIN (for Mr. AKAKA) proposed an amendment to the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 154) to consent to certain amendments enacted by the Legislature of the State of Hawaii to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920; as follows:

On page 2, line 4, strike "Act 84".

ON THE EFFORTS OF TYLER-SEWARD-KUBISH POST 44, AMERICAN LEGION

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, it is important that all Americans join together to salute the courage of the members of our Armed Forces presently on duty in the Middle East. As these brave men and women are putting their lives on the line in defense of peace, we should take time daily to remember them and to pray for their safe return.

In this regard, I am pleased to bring to the attention of my colleagues the important efforts of Tyler-Seward-Kubish Post 44, American Legion, of the Bantam, CT, area. The members of this post have erected a "Remember" display at the Bantam Veterans Memorial, and are adding another flag to the display each week that our troops remain in the Middle East. This display is important in reminding Americans not to forget our countrymen in the Middle East, who stand ready to combat aggression at sea, in the air, and on land.

The members of Post 44 are also working to recognize the service and the sacrifice of Americans in wars past. On the first Saturday of each month, the members of the Tyler-Seward-Kubish Post raise the burial flag of a veteran, and this flag flies proudly over the veterans memorial until the following month, when the ceremony is repeated in tribute to another veteran. The families of the deceased veterans participate in the raising and retirement ceremonies for their relatives' flag. Post 44 is also involved in an ongoing project to rebuild and beautify the Bantam War Memorial. The post is raising money to purchase individual bronze markers for each of the wars and conflicts in which Americans have fought since our Nation declared its independence. Once this effort is completed, the memorial will truly be an "All Wars Memorial."

Mr. President, when tornadoes roared through Connecticut in July 1989, they leveled the Bantam Borough Hall and destroyed Post 44's records and furnishings. As veterans, however, the members of Post 44 are used to facing adversity and overcoming it. Today, they are reminding all of us of the meaning of patriotism—the willingness to defend one's country, and, if we are not in the front lines ourselves, the duty to stand squarely behind our fellow Americans who are.

I commend the members of Post 44, and I ask that a letter from Mr. Arthur G. St. John, Post 44 Americanism chairman, along with a written description of the "All Veterans Memorial," be included in the RECORD.

The material follows:

TYLER-SEWARD-KUBISH
POST, No. 44, INC.,
Bantam, CT, October 5, 1990.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER J. DODD,
U.S. Senator, Weathersfield, CT.

DEAR SENATOR DODD: Something is going on in Bantam, Connecticut that you and the entire nation should be aware of . . . and for a change . . . its something good. The Tyler-Seward-Kubish Post 44 American Legion and the people of the Bantam area are: proud of their country; proud of their flag; proud of those in the military service, especially those serving in the Persian Gulf area; proud of the veterans of all wars.

This may sound like motherhood, baseball and apple pie, but the difference is . . . we're doing something about it . . . and here's a brief profile of what we're doing.

Proud of our Country—When we opened our Memorial Day services on May 27th 1990, we asked everyone to turn to their neighbor, shake his or her hand and say "I'm Proud to be an American". This was enthusiastically received and will now be a Bantam tradition for our future services.

Proud of our Flag—Through the generosity of several local businessmen, our American Legion Post, the Bantam Firemen and numerous other citizens, we erected a 50 foot flag pole adjacent to the existing memorial flag pole at the Bantam War Memorial . . . installed lighting and now "Old Glory" flies 24 hours a day, spot lighted at night, according to the flag code.

Proud of those in the Military, especially those serving in the Persian Gulf—We've built a "Remember" display and for each week service men and women are in the Persian Gulf, we place a 10" x 15" American Flag on the display and will continue to do so each week until our troops have returned home from the Persian Gulf and our reservists to a reserve status.

Proud of our Veterans—On the first Saturday of each month, we honor a deceased veteran and raise his or her burial flag on our community memorial flag pole, and the flag flies until the first Saturday of the following month when the flag of another deceased veteran is then flown. The families of deceased veterans appreciate the honor bestowed on their family member and are present for the flag raising and retiring ceremonies. This program was started in November of 1989 and has been conducted monthly ever since. Currently, the schedule is filled through September 1991 with many more completing the forms citing the personal and military service history of the veteran which is read at the ceremonies and published in the local press. A "Book of Honor" records this data and the month during which the veteran was honored.

Proud of our Veterans—Post 44 has undertaken a program of reconstruction and beautification of the Bantam War Memorial area and have redesignated it the "All Wars Memorial." A fund drive is currently underway and we know that the people of Bantam and surrounding areas will support this project with the same spirit that they supported other community projects in the past. The unique part of the final configuration is that it will have individual cast bronze symbols for each of the wars since the Revolution; one for the peace time conflicts such as Lebanon, Granada, Panama and the Persian Gulf; and one for those who served in peace time . . . truly as "All Wars Memorial."

I've taken the liberty of enclosing data on the above programs to further acquaint you with what is happening in Bantam. During the July 1990 tornado that devastated Bantam, the Bantam Borough Hall was completely demolished and along with it the Post meeting room, all the Post records and furnishings of Post 44. What was not destroyed is the spirit and enthusiasm for our programs of Americanism and Community Service. War finds ordinary men doing extraordinary things. What we're doing, we consider an appreciation of what we have here in the United States and we want to set an example of appreciation and honor for the younger generations to follow.

The above might appear to be insignificant when compared to the budget deficits, disarmament, trade deficits and the Persian Gulf crisis, but amid all of the turmoil, I wanted you to know that Bantam is alive and well; that we remain 100 per cent behind our President and our country; and we want the whole world to know that "We're Proud to be Americans." As our nation's leader, I thought you might find this a refreshing taste of American.

Good luck in all your endeavors, and May God Bless You and God Bless the United States of America.

Sincerely,

ARTHUR G. ST. JOHN,
Past Department Commander, Department of Connecticut, Post 44 Americanism Chairman.

ALL WARS MEMORIAL

The "All Wars Memorial" in its final form will be just that . . . a memorial paying tribute to the men and women who served their country since the Revolutionary War.

Just as there were 13 original stars and stripes in our nation's flag; and just as there were 13 original colonies; at this time in history, 1990, there are 13 symbols to represent those who served their country in times of war and in times of peace.

Revolutionary War * 1775-1776.
War of 1812 * 1812-1814.
Indian Wars * 1817-1898.
Mexican War * 1846-1848.
Civil War—Confederate * 1861-1865.
Civil War—G.A.R. Union * 1861-1865.
Spanish American War * 1898-1902.
World War I * 1917-1919.
World War II * 1941-1945.
Korean War * 1950-1955.
Vietnam War * 1959-1975.
Universal Military Conflict Service—Lebanon, Granada, Panama, Persian Gulf.
Peace Time Military Service.

Symbols commemorating each of the above in the history of the United States, will be displayed in cast bronze form, mounted on steel stanchions around the perimeter of the bluestone "Court of Honor."●

HEIFER PROJECT INTERNATIONAL

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, I wish to join with President Bush and the U.S. Agency for International Development today in paying tribute to an Arkansas organization, Heifer Project International, for the work it has done in addressing our world wide hunger problem.

Heifer Project International is among 10 individuals and organizations being awarded the 1990 Presidential End Hunger Award today at ceremonies at the White House. Suitably enough, today has been designated as World Food Day which began in 1980 to mark the founding of the U.N. Food and Agriculture Organization.

These awards were first made in 1983 to increase public awareness of world hunger and to encourage American involvement in the search for solutions.

The awards are made in recognition of efforts to expand research and education in the development and provision of food supplies; to focus public attention on hunger; and for exceptional commitments shown by individuals and organizations.

Heifer Project International is a worthy recipient. The 46-year-old organization helps farmers around the world produce more protein-rich foods by providing them with high quality cows, chickens and sheep, along with extensive training in their care.

Participating farmers have been able to increase food production to where they not only feed their own families, but have enough extra to sell at local markets for added income.

To help "leverage" the program's impact, families receiving an animal from Heifer Project must agree to pass on the firstborn female animal to an approved neighbor and help that family get started in food production.

I congratulate Mr. Thomas H. Hemphill, the current executive director of Heifer Project International, as well as the many staff members, volunteers and donors who have contributed so much over the years to the success of this program.●

THE HONORABLE JENNINGS RANDOLPH AWARDED BY NATIONAL CAPTIONING INSTITUTE

● Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, our esteemed former colleague, Jennings Randolph, of Elkins, WV, was recently honored for his "Lifetime Contributions" for the cause of the disabled. It was the first award of its kind ever given by the National Captioning Institute [NCI], which introduced, with the help of congressional support, closed captioned television to the Nation in 1980.

When we look back at the work of legislators on behalf of the disabled that set the stage for later laws, the name of Jennings Randolph tops the list. Ever since Jennings Randolph was elected first to the House of Representatives—in the "100 Days" of the Roosevelt administration in 1933—he was not only a voice of compassion, but a man with a mission. His purpose was a simple but sometimes forgotten one—the people came first, and that all individuals were entitled to equal access under the law. It was not surprising that issues relating to the disabled were to become major factors in his legislative priorities.

Legislation that became public law benefiting the blind, the deaf, and hard of hearing, and physically and mentally disabled individuals, all have the unmistakable stamp of the former Senator from West Virginia. His later work as chairman of the Subcommittee on the Handicapped, as it was then called, is legendary.

The NCI award was presented by a board member of the group and old friend of the Senator's Nanette Fabray, before an admiring group of Senator Randolph's many former friends and colleagues. His doctors would not permit him to travel to receive the award, but he was very "present and accounted for".

It was my privilege and honor to accept the award on behalf of Senator Randolph.

Mr. President, I would like my colleagues to share in the commentary of the evening as it evolved under the leadership of Nanette Fabray, the mistress of ceremonies.

Nanette Fabray: In our celebration of 10 glorious years, NCI did not want to forget a certain band of legislators who were present at the creation of social legislation that focused on the disabled—who were there when it wasn't the easiest issue to promote—who convinced other Members—often by addressing the full House and the Senate—that equal access for all citizens meant precisely that—all citizens, whatever their disability.

In researching these brilliant pioneers, we immediately came to the conclusion that one in particular who arrived as a Member of the House in the midst of the Great Depression and then who later served in the Senate with equal distinction was a gentleman with a heart as big as his beloved State of West Virginia. A legislator truly of the people whose vision inspired anyone who worked with him: Here was a man capable of moving mountains and believe me, because I had the extraordinary good fortune to follow his career, and to know him—he moved mountains. I dare to say that without his early work in both the House and the Senate, we would not have had an Americans With Disabilities Act * * * NCI is proud to give our first lifetime contributions award to the former chairman of the Senate Subcommittee of the Handicapped—as it was then called—to a great American who cannot be with us tonight because his doctors will not permit him to travel—but is loved by many in this room—including me—the Honorable Jennings Randolph.

Accepting on behalf of Senator Randolph, the Honorable JAY ROCKEFELLER of West Virginia.

(Senator ROCKEFELLER then reads a statement from Jennings Randolph.)

Remarks of Jennings Randolph: I'm overjoyed with this honor bestowed upon me by the National Captioning Institute, and deeply regret that coincidences prevent me from being with so many precious and dear friends like Nanette Fabray.

NCI shares all the goals and objectives I worked for in Congress since arriving during the "100 days" in 1933 as a Member of the House, and later in the Senate on the Subcommittee of the Handicapped where early legislation developed to assist the deaf and others with disabilities, such as the Randolph-Sheppard Act. To receive an award from an organization like NCI, that brings joy to thousands of children through "Sesame Street" and knowledge to hearing-impaired adults and others learning English, is a personal joy that brings tears to my eyes.

The fact that my dear colleague and friend, DANNY INOUYE, is receiving an NCI award for his current work for the disabled, demonstrates the powerful continuity of this just and noble cause. And nothing could please me more than the fact that the current occupant of my seat, Senator JAY ROCKEFELLER of West Virginia, another true believer, is accepting this award for me. I thank you all from the depths of my being.

Nanette Fabray: Senator ROCKEFELLER, on behalf of the National Captioning Institute, I am proud to present this decoder to be donated to an appropriate institute in West Virginia in Senator Randolph's name.

Thank you Senator, on behalf of both NCI and the extended Randolph family; I am sure all of us will remember this evening with a special fondness.

Mr. President, I know I speak for my colleagues when I say this award was a most deserved one, and I applaud NCI for recognizing the unique career of a magnificent American legislator and friend.●

OVERT ACTS OF ANTI-SEMITISM

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President I call the attention of my colleagues to the recent sentencing in Moscow of an individual who engaged in overt acts of anti-Semitism. Konstantin Smirnov-Ostashvili, a member of the rightwing Pamyat Society, was prosecuted and convicted for his role in the disruption of a meeting of Jewish writers at the House of Writers in Moscow last January. Those attending the meeting were subjected to physical threats and anti-Semitic epithets.

The fact that this individual is being punished is most welcome, especially in light of the Soviet Union's past anti-Semitic policies. The prosecution of this case is another one of the many remarkable changes we have witnessed in the U.S.S.R. over the past few years, and one I applaud the Soviet Government for pursuing.

I ask that an article on this case be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The article follows:

RUSSIAN GETS 2-YEAR TERM IN HATE TRIAL
ANTI-SEMITISM CASE STIRRED CONTROVERSY

(By Elizabeth Shogren)

Moscow, October 12.—In a court case without precedent in the Soviet Union, a militant nationalist Russian was sentenced today to two years at hard labor for stirring up ethnic hatred at a time of increasing Soviet antisemitism.

Konstantin Smirnov-Ostashvili, 54, a leader of the right-wing Pamyat Society, was convicted of leading an attack on Jewish writers. He was the first person prosecuted under a Soviet law intended to ensure racial harmony among the country's 100 or more ethnic groups.

"In making the decision on punishment, the court has taken into account that the crime committed is notable as a great danger to society," Judge Andrei Muratov said in sentencing Smirnov-Ostashvili.

The trial, sensational and often raucous, lasted for almost three months and became the focus of a struggle between Russian supremacists and political liberals as well as a demonstration of government concern over the rise in antisemitism.

As the judge read out the verdict, Smirnov-Ostashvili's supporters stood on benches in the courtroom and unfurled banners, one of which bore the message, "Court—are you serving the law or Zionism?"

Smirnov-Ostashvili, a factory worker, was on trial for organizing a group of Russian nationalists who broke up a liberal political forum at the Central House of Writers in January. The intruders roughed up the participants, shouting, "Go to Tel Aviv" and "Yids."

No one was seriously injured, and Smirnov-Ostashvili, who used a megaphone to shout down the speakers at the forum, was the only person charged after a lengthy investigation by police.

The trial, which began July 24, was nearly as chaotic as the political forum was. Smirnov-Ostashvili and his supporters interrupted the judge, screamed at witnesses, berated lawyers and used the courthouse for impromptu political rallies.●

PHILANDER SMITH COLLEGE COLLEGIATE CHOIR

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise today in recognition of one of the great college choirs of Arkansas and this Nation. As Philander Smith College, a fine educational institution deep in tradition, celebrates its 113th year in existence, the Philander Smith College Collegiate Choir celebrates its centennial. For the benefit of my colleagues and readers of the RECORD, I would like to quote material published by Philander Smith College for the choir's 100-year anniversary celebration:

Available college information in the years 1890-91 suggests that a small group of singers born to ex-slaves were organized by Miss Nellie A. James to form the first singing group on the campus. Miss James, a Methodist missionary, was one of many who traveled from the North for the cause of educating Negroes in the South.

During the early years, the singers, known as the "sextet," consisted of a soprano, an alto, two tenors and two baritones. These polished and well-mannered groups often traveled for months across the country, singing to Methodist congregations to raise money for the college. Mrs Jennie B. Bats, a soloist in the traveling choir in 1917, explains, "* * * for many years the school depended heavily on the funds raised by the singers. * * *"

In 1934, the Philander Smith College Choir, as it was called, reached its greatest prominence under the direction of Miss Ruth Helen Gillum. Her structured and disciplined style of direction led the choir to national respectability and gained recognition for herself as a composer-arranger. Her published Negro folk arrangements include "There's no Hiding Place" (dedicated to the Philander Smith College Choir), "Roll, Jordan Roll" and Miss "Choric Dance." Mrs. Thelma T. Woodfolk, a soloist under Miss Gillum, described her as "a woman full of beauty and virtue, {with} great dedication. * * *" During Miss Gillum's tenure, the choir had the distinct honor of appearing on the same program with Prima Donna Marion Anderson and the famous "Wings Over Jordan" on CBS Radio.

From 1934 through 1969, the choir reached a series of performance plateaus which have been warmly referred to as "The Glory Years." With the acquisition of a bus, the choir further increased its popularity with concerts and appearances on radio and television programs throughout the state and nation.

For the final 10 years of this successful 35-year period, the choir was under the masterful baton of Carl G. Harris, Jr. (now Ph.D.). Mr. Harris expanded the rich tradition of the choir by skillfully organizing annual concert tours through cities and fine academic institutions. He was the first to conduct the college choir accompanied by a symphony orchestra.

Mr. Harris is responsible for giving the choir its present designation. His insertion of the title "Collegiate" has given the choir the sense of class and distinction it holds today. Ending an era, his choral groups compiled numerous and well-documented moments in the history of Philander Smith College. His accomplishments are still largely unequalled.

Mr. President, this is an outstanding choir and, under the current leadership of Director Stephen L. Hayes, it has maintained its most noteworthy tradition. Year after year, Mr. Hayes has done a tremendous job of molding young voices into a choir that makes Arkansas proud.

In celebration of the choir's 100th anniversary, the Philander Smith College will host a symposium and choral festival for Arkansas high schools and colleges, an organ recital by Dr. Anthony E. Williams of Fisk University, and a concert by the Collegiate Choir at Little Rock Central High School. The highlight of the year will be a choral festival featuring some of the Nation's most outstanding historically black college and university choirs.

UNITED STATES-VIETNAMESE RELATIONS

● Mr. McCAIN. Mr. President, last week I addressed the Senate on the subject of United States-Vietnamese relations. The purpose of my remarks was to express my support for improved relations with Vietnam, but only if the pace and scope of those developing relations were linked to progress on several outstanding humanitarian questions and on progress toward real political reforms in Vietnam.

Of the bilateral humanitarian issues I enumerated in my statement, the most important was the full accounting of Americans missing in action in Vietnam. As public debate begins in earnest on normalized relations with Vietnam, I want to reemphasize just how central the resolution of POW/MIA questions is to progress on the question of normalization.

In short, Mr. President, there can be no progress toward normalization unless Vietnam determines that the time has arrived to finally and definitively conclude all the outstanding POW/MIA cases that it is in its power to resolve. Better relations with Vietnam, and with Cambodia and Laos, for that matter, will not occur absent their full cooperation in the fullest possible accounting for the nearly 2,300 Americans who remain missing in Southeast Asia.

I have no doubt, Mr. President, that if the Government of Vietnam wanted to resolve this issue, it could do so immediately. We must convince the Vietnamese that it is in their best interests to do so. Our responsibility as Members of Congress is to help Hanoi understand certain facts of American political life as they pertain to our relations with Vietnam.

As President Bush has declared, and President Reagan before him, resolution of the POW/MIA issue is a national priority. This issue is an open wound in American history. As long as it remains unresolved, the last chapter of our war in Vietnam cannot be concluded. The healing of our own national divisions and our hostilities with Vietnam will never be concluded until we Americans are satisfied that all those lost Americans that can be accounted for are accounted for. There are 2,300 American families who know only that their sons, brothers, husbands, and fathers left for Southeast Asia one day, and have yet to return. They do not know why. Better relations with Vietnam are vastly less important to Americans than relieving those families from suffering this cruel uncertainty.

No serious public official will seek the approval of the American people for better relations before that great national task is accomplished. Vietnam veterans groups, rightly, would be outraged by the suggestion that Hanoi should enjoy the fruits of American friendship before the United States is assured of Vietnamese good faith in determining the fates of American missing. Few American veterans of any war would tolerate such a singular weakening of American resolve. Indeed, very few Americans, period, will acquiesce in improved relations with Vietnam until Vietnam has convinced them that this last, sad chapter in our long, troubled relationship with that country has been closed. Only then, will Americans and Vietnamese undertake a new relationship, free of the animosity and bitter memories that disturb our present relations.

Mr. President, I have been encouraged by recent improvements in Vietnamese cooperation on this matter. Due in large part to the extraordinary efforts of Gen. John Vessey, the President's special emissary to Vietnam for the POW/MIA question, numerous joint expeditions, investigations, forensic efforts, and technical meetings have taken place. The results of these activities are appreciated, but they fall far short of satisfying U.S. objectives.

For his tireless and selfless service, General Vessey deserves the gratitude of all Americans. When I spoke to him recently he expressed his encouragement by Vietnam's improved cooperation with his mission. However, there are several areas that require much greater cooperation from Hanoi. We in Congress should take every opportunity to support General Vessey's mission and stress to Vietnam that he must receive whatever cooperation he requires to complete his mission.

General Vessey identified several areas in which he believes Vietnam could greatly assist his efforts. He believes that the time is long overdue for a complete resolution of the so-called discrepancy cases involving at least 163 Americans that evidence and eyewitness accounts suggest were, at last report, whether alive or dead, under the control of the Vietnamese. We are certain that it is well within the capability of Hanoi to immediately provide the United States with evidence that will conclusively determine the fates of these missing Americans.

Although I have often heard claims that Americans are still held captive in Indochina, I have yet to see conclusive evidence. Like all Americans I would welcome and immediately act upon such evidence should it exist. In the absence of conclusive evidence, we must pursue allegations of captive Americans on the assumption that some Americans may indeed be alive and held against their will in Vietnam. The burden of proving otherwise rests squarely with the Vietnamese. They can move forward dramatically on this issue by immediately accounting for all the remaining "discrepancy cases."

General Vessey also believes that Hanoi should do more to help with planning the investigations of MIA cases; permitting far greater access to witnesses, including military witnesses, and not just civilians who have been coached to provide Government supplied responses to the general's questions; in opening all pertinent documentary files to American inspection; and in repatriating those remains that the Government of Vietnam almost certainly has in its possession.

I strongly support General Vessey's efforts to secure this expanded cooperation from Vietnam. To help him continue his humanitarian service, he seeks the establishment of a permanent U.S. office in Vietnam to pursue POW/MIA investigations. I urge Congress to support Vessey in this endeavor, and I strongly recommend to the Government of Vietnam that it provide the general with the cooperation he seeks.

Vietnam has unilaterally repatriated more MIA remains than have been recovered through joint efforts with the United States. This strongly suggests that they have the capability to quickly conclude this matter on their own, and that they are intentionally delaying that conclusion. Eager for better relations with the United States, Vietnam turned over in August the remains of 70 individuals. As many as 20 servicemen may soon be accounted for as a result of this recent action. Of course, this also confirms the suspicions of many that Vietnam is warehousing American remains to use them as instruments in their pursuit of American favors. We must insist to the Vietnamese that there is absolutely no advantage to be gained by prolonging the uncertainty surrounding POW/MIA questions.

Mr. President, I accept that some American missing, like some of those who were lost over water, may never be accounted for. Yet, there are a great many mysteries concerning these lost Americans that can and must be resolved, not tomorrow, not at some unspecified time after we have normalized our relationship with Vietnam, but now. Whatever relations we undertake with Vietnam in advance of this problem's resolution will be anything but normal.

Mr. President, I am anxious to construct a new relationship with our old adversary. But Vietnam needs to understand that no matter how many Americans share my desire for better relations, we will not arrive at that moment until we have learned the fates of all those Americans who did not return home from Vietnam. Until we take home from Vietnam the answers to these questions, we will never take our leave of the trauma attending our association with that country.

Therefore, Mr. President, let us all take the opportunity provided by our current discussions with representatives of the Government of Vietnam, and by the forthcoming visit of Foreign Minister Nguyen Co Thach, to reaffirm this principle, this just demand. Let us state frequently and without qualification that the POW/MIA issue, which animates so many American attitudes toward Vietnam, will continue to be an impediment to better relations and the impetus for American policy until it is finally and conclusively resolved.●

FOR THE LOVE OF THEIR CHILDREN

● Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, the September Reader's Digest contains the poignant story of three sets of parents drawn together by the most heartbreaking of circumstances, the death of their children, Ceres Horn, Christy Johnson, and T.C. Colley, in the terrible 1987 Conrail-Amtrak collision near Chase, MD.

Entitled "For Love of Their Children," the article describes how Susan and Roger Horn, Anne and Arthur Johnson, and Susan and Tom Colley discovered that one of the causes of the collision was drug use by the engineer of the Conrail train. In the midst of their grief, these courageous parents vowed to do all that they could to see that a crash like the one at Chase could never happen again.

Within a few days of the tragedy, the Horns, the Johnsons, and the Colleys began to make their presence known in Congress. They testified before House and Senate committees responsible for transportation safety, demanding major safety reforms in the railroad industry and calling for mandatory random drug and alcohol testing of railroad and aviation workers, and commercial truck and bus drivers.

In the summer of 1988, the national grassroots organization these parents founded, Safe Travel America [STA], pushed the enactment of the most far-reaching new railroad safety laws in 20 years. By fall, the first step had been taken toward reaching another of STA's objectives: The Department of Transportation instituted mandatory random drug testing for a wide range of transportation professionals.

STA is still pushing for alcohol to be included in DOT's testing program. In addition, its members want mandatory random drug and alcohol testing written into law, so that a subsequent administration cannot undo what they have worked so hard to accomplish.

Nine times during the past two Congresses, the Senate has passed legislation which would codify DOT's drug testing rules and add alcohol testing. During the remaining days of the 101st Congress, I am optimistic that we can work with the House Energy and Commerce Committee to enact strong legislation requiring drug and alcohol testing of railroad employees.

At the same time, I am frustrated that the House Public Works Committee continues to avoid dealing with this critical safety issue. This is true in spite of a recent National Transportation Safety Board study showing that one-third of the commercial truck drivers killed in highway fatalities had been using drugs or alcohol. This is true even though the public has expressed outrage that three intoxicated Northwest pilots recently were allowed to fly a commercial jet between Fargo, ND, and Minneapolis, MN, because the Federal Aviation Administration lacked the authority to test them for alcohol use.

Mr. President, Safe Travel America and its founders can be proud of what they have accomplished "For Love of Their Children." Today, I join with them to urge my colleagues to continue to support random drug and alcohol testing legislation, and other transportation safety initiatives that will help ensure that our neighbors, our coworkers, our families, and especially our children are safe whenever they board a train or plane, or travel on our Nation's highways.

At this time, I ask that the September 1990 Reader's Digest article, "For Love of Their Children" be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in its entirety.

The article follows:

FOR LOVE OF THEIR CHILDREN

(By Trevor Armbrister)

In January 1987, Roger and Susan Horn's world shattered forever. On the afternoon of the 4th, a Boston-bound Amtrak train named the Colonial collided with a Conrail locomotive north of Baltimore. Their daughter Ceres, a 16-year-old Princeton freshman, and 659 other passengers were on board.

Ceres's mother, brother and sister rushed to the scene but were turned back. They returned to their Hunt Valley, Md. home. At midnight, a worried Susan Horn reached her husband, a Johns Hopkins mathematics professor lecturing in Israel. "There's been a train crash. You'd better come home," she said. She made a blizzard of calls, desperately seeking word. Hours passed. Nothing.

Then she heard a scream. Racing downstairs, she found 14-year-old Corinne sobbing in front of the TV. "They've just taken the body of an unidentified teen-age girl off the train," Corinne explained. At that terrible moment, Susan Horn knew.

At about the same time, Arthur and Anne Johnson of Potomac, Md., reached the command post Amtrak and the Red Cross had set up in a motel. Their 20-year-old daughter Christy, a junior at Stanford University in California, had also been on the train. Not until two o'clock that afternoon did the Johnsons learn of her death.

When Tom and Susan Colley of Shippensburg, Pa., heard about the wreck, they weren't overly concerned. Their son, 18-year-old photographer Thomas C. (T.C.) Colley, Jr., had been aboard a train that derailed in Ohio a year and a half earlier, and had not been hurt. This time they assumed he had found other transportation and was still en route to the Rhode Island School of Design in Providence.

But when Susan Colley didn't hear from T.C., she left messages at school and called the Red Cross and Baltimore-area hospitals. The afternoon following the crash, a news conference was held. The victims' next of kin, a police official said, were being notified. Ten minutes later, the Colleys' phone rang.

A Father's plea. All told, the wreck of Amtrak's Colonial left 16 people dead and 174 injured. When tests revealed that both Conrail engineer Ricky Lynn Gates and brakeman Edward "Butch" Cromwell had been smoking marijuana before the crash, the parents' grief turned to rage.

Roger Horn set out to learn all he could about the accident. He came from a railroad family, so he knew how trains were supposed to operate. After days of study, he concluded that "accident" was the wrong term. This had been a violent crime. Ricky Gates had ignored two warning signals instructing him to slow down; his locomotives had gone through a stop sign and into the Colonial's path. He hadn't heard the screech of the cab's alerter whistle—designed to warn of possible emergencies—because someone had muffled it with duct tape. Gates' motor-vehicle license had been suspended twice, and he was awaiting trial for drunken driving.

Horn learned that on January 20 a Senate subcommittee would be holding an oversight hearing about the crash. He volunteered to testify, but was told the list of witnesses already had been approved. He prepared testimony and drove to Washington anyway.

The hearing room was mobbed. Walking down the hall, Horn spotted a room marked "Senators Only," stepped inside and left a note for his Senator, Barbara Mikulski (D., Md.). Minutes later, in the hearing room, Horn saw the lawmaker read his note. At her request, Horn was asked to testify.

First Horn had to listen to the unions blame the railroads, the railroads blame the unions and both blame the Federal Railroad Administration. "Nobody talked about how to make things better," he recalls.

Finally, it was Horn's turn. "At first it seemed that this terrible event was a random accident," he began. "But the horror has been compounded by a growing realization that it was entirely preventable." The mammoth hearing room, which minutes before had been abuzz, suddenly fell still. Horn continued, "Those of us who have suffered most directly from this tragedy hope that it may be a stimulus to the Congress to enact new legislation." He stressed the need for new safety procedures, including tamper-proof safety devices on trains and random testing for substance abuse.

"Stay Angry." The next evening, sitting in the kitchen of their small farm, Anne Johnson read in the newspaper about Horn's appearance. "We must call him," she told her husband, a 68-year-old retired civil servant who ran a consulting business.

"How can I help?" Art Johnson asked when he reached Horn. The two had no idea that their efforts would mushroom into a national movement. On February 12, Johnson wrote letters to the families of all the crash victims, urging them to contact him.

Several weeks later, Tom Colley returned home from his job teaching drama at Shippensburg University to find his wife typing furiously at the dining-room table. "I'm angry," she said, "and I want to do something." Over the next several days, she and her husband wrote letters to 153 newspapers and to every member of Congress. Some papers used the letter as the basis for editorials, but only a dozen lawmakers bothered to reply. One—their own Senator, John Heinz (R., Pa.)—finally responded to their third appeal by soliciting their views on parental-leave legislation being considered by a subcommittee. "Here we are, a middle-aged couple who have lost our only child," Tom Colley said bitterly, "and he wants to know our opinion of a child-care bill."

The three couples had now joined forces. Eventually they got the ears of some key people on the Senate Commerce Committee and pressed for legislation. By mid-March their efforts had begun to pay dividends. The committee approved a bill—sponsored by Senators Ernest Hollings (D., S.C.) and John Danforth (R., Mo.)—that called for random drug and alcohol testing of all transportation employees in "safety sensitive" jobs.

On April 28 Danforth invited Roger Horn into his private office. The Senator's youngest daughter, Jody, had been scheduled to take the Amtrak Colonial on January 4, the Senator explained. Instead, she got a ride back to Princeton with her sister. Danforth realized how close she had come to death. "What happened wasn't right," he said. "Stay angry and keep pressing."

In May the Senate Judiciary Committee took up the Hollings-Danforth bill. The Johnsons sat in the hearing room as American Civil Liberties Union attorney Allan Adler testified before the committee. "Transportation employees will be the victims of this legislation," he said. "It could cost tens of thousands their privacy, dignity, reputations and jobs."

Constitutional Right? In June and July, Tom and Susan Colley joined the Horns and Johnsons at House subcommittee hearings. When none of the subcommittee chairmen showed the slightest interest in meeting with the families, they decided they needed a name to gain access. Anne Johnson came up with Safe Travel America (STA). They would register as a lobbying group, appeal to citizens everywhere to join their crusade, then impress Congress with their support.

In October, STA won an audience with Rep. John Dingell (D., Mich.), whose Energy and Commerce Committee controls railroad bills. "It was an astounding meeting," says Roger Horn. When the subject of drug and alcohol testing came up, "he delivered a monologue against testing for most of our 20 minutes, then thanked us for sharing our views with him."

Senator Danforth addressed 600 volunteers gathered on Capitol Hill for STA's first lobby day on October 7. "A few people want to defeat this legislation," he said. "They say there's some Constitutional right involved. There is no Constitutional right to take drugs and get into the locomotive of a train."

Free Drug Bust. On February 4, 1988, the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB) released its final report. The collision's probable cause, it confirmed, was "the failure, as a result of impairment from marijuana," of the Conrail engineeer to comply with signals that told him to stop.

Appearing before the Senate Commerce Committee, a chastened Ricky Gates, who had agreed to plead guilty, testified in support of random drug and alcohol testing. Later he would admit to having drunk "anywhere from a six-pack to two cases of beer a day" and to frequent use of marijuana with his Conrail co-workers.

The Horns, Johnsons and Colleys kept up the pressure for a substance-abuse bill, writing letters to newspapers everywhere. Cincinnati is the home of Rep. Thomas Luken (D., Ohio), chairman of the subcommittee responsible for railroads. Roger Horn flew there to appear on raido and TV shows and meet with newspaper editorial boards. In Washington on May 18, Luken, bowing to the pressure, promised to introduce a drug and alcohol testing bill.

From STA's point of view, however, the Luken bill was flawed. First, it applied only to railroad workers. Worse, it said that employees could not be fired the first time they were caught using drugs or alcohol on the job. They'd have to undergo rehabilitation at company expense. That was tantamount to offering them a free drug bust.

On June 15 Tom and Susan Colley flew to Atlanta to testify before a Department of Transportation (DOT) rule-making hearing on drugs and alcohol. One union, the Brotherhood of Railroad Signalmen, had agreed to random drug and alcohol testing but the rest of rail labor was still bitterly opposed.

Frustrating Delays. By then, the Senate had approved the Hollings-Danforth random drug and alcohol testing bill. But it was going nowhere in the House. When the 100th Congress adjourned in the fall, neither the Luken or the Hollings-Danforth bill had been adopted.

Back in Cincinnati, Luken was running for a seventh term. Tom Luken has to fight the leaders of his own party for his drug bill, his TV commercials proclaimed. The ads went on to say that the parents of the victims of the crash welcomed Luken's action and said the nation had been waiting for such a bill.

When Roger and Susan Horn heard that, they were so incensed at Luken's claim that they flew to Cincinnati to set the record straight. On October 26, they were on WCKY Radio's "Mike McMurray Show" when Congressman Luken called, questioning the Horns' credibility.

The station's operations manager offerred to put Luken on the show, but the Congressman declined.

In November, DOT Secretary Jim Burnley announced that drug-testing regulations would go into effect the following fall. The Horns, Johnsons and Colleys were elated. But they also knew the regulations could be loosened, or even scrapped, by Burnley's successors, so they continued the fight for tough drug and alcohol testing legislation.

In March 1989, by a seven-to-two vote, the U.S. Supreme Court upheld the post-accident drug testing of railroad employees. "On the present record," the majority agreed, "the compelling governmental interests served by the regulations outweigh employees' privacy concerns."

The Johnsons were in Hawaii for their first vacation in years when Attorney General Dick Thornburgh called with the news. "We're absolutely elated," Thornburgh told them. "Thanks for all you've done to make this possible."

Since September 1987, 99 air-traffic controllers have been dismissed or placed in rehabilitation for using drugs. And last March the NTSB released a report showing that one in three truckers tested after dying in highway accidents had ingested drugs or alcohol. One week later, tests showed that the three-man crew of a Northwest Airlines jet that had flown from Fargo, N.D., to Minneapolis carried high levels of alcohol in their systems.

Still, there is no random drug and alcohol testing legislation from Congress. The Horns, Johnsons and Coleys continue to stalk Congressional corridors and testify as often as they can. Their movement is larger now—over 1000 members in 35 states and three foreign countries—and they're confident they will prevail. "We're still three angry families," Art Johnson says.

On a sunny Sunday last May, Roger and Susan Horn dedicated a plaque to Ceres in a Baltimore County park. "I think she's in heaven cheering us on," Susan Horn said. "'Mother, Daddy,' she's saying, 'don't let it happen again.'"

It need not. Write to Rep. John Dingell, Chairman, House Committee on Energy and Commerce, and Rep. Glenn Anderson, Chairman, House Committee on Public Works and Transportation, Washington, D.C. 20515. Demand that they pass legislation—similar to Senate Bill 561 or House Bill 4848—that mandates random drug and alcohol testing for safety-sensitive employees in all forms of public transportation. Your life, and your children's may depend on it.●

TRADE AND AID

● Mr. DODD. Mr. President, I ask that Senator JOSEPH LIEBERMAN'S October 2 testimony before the Foreign Relations Committee be printed in the RECORD.

The testimony follows:

TESTIMONY OF SENATOR JOSEPH I. LIEBERMAN

I want to thank the Chairman and the other members of the Committee for holding this hearing today on the increasingly important topic of tied aid.

Benjamin Franklin said that no nation was ever ruined by trade. The United States may be in the process of proving him wrong. Since the mid-eighties, we have been running trade deficits well over $100 billion. America is not competing effectively in the international market place, and we are failing to deal with this problem in an effective and aggressive manner.

Our most recent trade figures for July were particularly disturbing. The monthly deficit was $9.3 billion up from the previous month deficit of $5.3 billion. That is nearly a 50% increase. What concerns me most is that these numbers do not reflect the increase that will occur as a result of the dramatic rise in the price of oil. In addition, Bill Archey of the Chamber of Commerce stated that our manufacturing exports were down some $2.8 billion. Our overall exports were down about $2.2 billion.

I come from a state that exports more per capita than any other state in the union. Seven percent of Connecticut's work force is involved in producing exports, compared with 4.5% nationally. The dollar volume of state exports grew by 18% last year. But international competition is increasing, and there is no guarantee that Connecticut's exporters will continue to remain strong.

One of our primary problems is that our exporters in Connecticut and across the country are at a competitive disadvantage because they do not have the kind of government support that their counterparts from Japan and the nations of the European Community have. They need government support to compete. Congress and the Administration must reach out to our exporting community to form a public-private partnership that will help them capture new markets. Our products are often competitive with the products of other nations, but it is our terms of trade—the packaging of a transaction—that makes life difficult for American exporters.

A primary difficulty confronting them is the issue of export financing and tied aid—the tying of economic aid to export sales. This predatory form of financing was supposed to have been put to rest with the Arrangement on Guidelines for Officially Supported Export Credits also known as the Arrangement. The Arrangement is an informal agreement among 22 of the 24 Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development (OECD) countries to set guidelines on export financing. It first came into existence in 1978, but its roots can be traced back to the 1960's. The most recent negotiations under the framework of the Arrangement, put into place in 1987, resulted in the Tied Aid Credit Agreement. The basic premise of this agreement is that a 35% minimum of concessionality—that is, the grant portion of a deal—must be reached in order to put forward a tied aid credit package.

It is important to remember that this 35% was designed to make tied aid too expensive a proposition for nations to pursue. If the threshold had been 20% or even 25%, a government might consider pursuing this kind of deal in order to help out an exporter; 35% was considered to be above that threshold or too expensive—at least in theory. The problem is that tied aid activity has increased since the 1987 version of the Arrangement was put into place because our foreign competitors have been willing to meet the 35% requirement because they are committed to the practice of using tied aid to help their exporters.

A new round of negotiations is going on at the OECD, but unless the United States has contingency plans in place to combat the tied aid practices of foreign nations then no negotiations or agreement will help. We do not adequately fund our tied aid programs for three reasons: much emphasis has been put on the Arrangement as a solution to the problem; official government support for exporters goes against traditional American policy of not mixing development aid and support for exports; and tied aid is very expensive.

The lack of commitment by the government to an aggressive tied aid program has caused U.S. exporters to lose out to their competitors in valuable overseas markets, including such areas as computers and telecommunications. According to Ambassador Ernie Preeg, a former chief economist at AID and one of the foremost experts on this issue, the "current market for capital goods transactions . . . which is inaccessible to U.S. exporters because of other governments, is $10 to $12 billion per year, resulting in an estimated $2.4 to $4.8 billion annual loss to U.S. exports. Future U.S. export loss in high-growth developing country markets could be far greater."

Using Ambassador Preeg's thoughts on this issue as a framework for the first title of my legislation, I have developed a program that should help our exporters get back in the game of winning contracts in developing country markets. I also want to take a moment to acknowledge the leadership of Senators Byrd, Boren, and Bentsen on this issue. I believe my bill to be complementary to their efforts. Like them, in my legislation, I put special emphasis on AID as a source of funding for tied aid transactions.

While AID must play an important role in helping our exporters meet the tied aid offers of their foreign competitors, the bill also includes a $500 million authorization for the Eximbank's war chest for fiscal years 1991 and 1992 because the Eximbank remains the key agency in the tied aid battle.

I applaud the efforts already made by Exim and AID in the packages that they put together earlier this year designed to help American exporters in Indonesia, Pakistan, the Philippines, and Thailand. That program is similar to what I am trying to do with my legislation. It makes use of Eximbank war chest funding, Bank guarantees, and a portion of AID's already committed Economic Support Funds. This "tied aid" package will amount to $500 million. It will, however, only be used to fund those projects that meet AID's development criteria and country priorities. In other words, the projects will be developmentally sound and in the best interest of the country involved. That is key for both the commercial and the development success of the projects.

Title I of my bill would permanently establish this type of cooperative effort between AID, Eximbank, and the Trade and Development Program (TDP). (TDP is charged with the financing and planning of projects in developing countries which are potential export markets for U.S. goods and services.) I would do this by setting up a Capital Projects Bureau at AID that would work with the other AID bureaus in putting together capital projects that would be beneficial to our exporters. These projects would be developmentally sound and consist of a 40% grant element. The annual budget for the newly formed Capital Projects Bureau would be $500 million.

Within the Bureau, there also would be a special program for Eastern Europe. Initially the Bureau would conduct a study of the various sectors of the economies of the nations of Eastern Europe that are most in need of rebuilding. Those sectors would become eligible for assistance under the Capital Projects Bureau and cooperative programs between it, the Eximbank, and the Trade and Development Program (TDP). The Bureau would establish desk officers and in-country presence for the nations of Eastern Europe.

We have a responsibility to help the nations of Eastern Europe. For over four decades we promised these nations that we would help them if they would rise up against their communist oppressors. They have done so, beyond anyone's expectations. Now we have to live up to our end of the bargain, but we must do so within our financial means. The best way to do this is to help them develop their infrastructure, from telecommunications to the building of roads and bridges. If, however, we are putting up taxpayer dollars to help these nations, we must be certain that American companies will benefit from our nation's investment. By creating the linkage that my bill outlines, I believe that we can achieve both objectives: helping the nations of Eastern Europe rebuild and getting American firms in on the ground floor of this rebuilding process.

In order to facilitate an even better working relationship among the various government agencies involved with development and export finance, I recommend the establishment of a Capital Projects Interagency Board that would be administered by AID, Eximbank, and TDP in my legislation and would be the judge and jury over which tied aid projects should go forward.

Such a board would bring these agencies even closer together as they deliberate on tied aid projects. Presently the National Advisory Committee (NAC) decides whether or not tied aid deal will go forward. The new Interagency Board will be better suited to handle this issue since that will be its sole function, unlike the NAC which has a number of other issues with which it must contend.

The final portion of Title I puts forward guidelines for our negotiators at the OECD talks on tied aid. These guidelines are designed to be supportive of U.S. efforts to combat the practice of tied aid. The Capital Projects Bureau will strengthen the hand of our negotiators so that the other participants in the talks will know that we are serious about being ready to compete for export markets.

I will not discuss the other titles of my bill today because they are not relevant to the subject of the hearing. But I would like to add that I believe that we have to make every effort to aid American exporters whether through revising our system of export controls or through creating a more flexible financing mechanism for defense exports. The other two title of my bill deal with these questions.

There was a time in our nation's recent history when trade was considered a kind of foreign aid program for our friends and allies. After World War II, we developed a world trading system that was really designed to give foreign nations access to our market while allowing them to protect their own. This system worked—too well. Now we run trade deficits that are out of control.

In order to take control of our economic destiny, we must eliminate our trade deficit. One of the most effective ways of achieving this is to reach out to our exporters and help them compete on a level playing field. Frank Doyle, one of my constituents and a senior Vice President at General Electric, said it best, "We won't win many orders without the best products at the best quality and the best price . . . But without competitive financing, we won't win any orders at all." I believe that my bill, as well as the bill introduced by Senators Boren, Bentsen, and Byrd, will help our exporters to better compete. I am sure that if we in government don't reach out to our exporting community more consistently and effectively, then our nation's competitiveness will be at further risk. We have a choice—to act or not to act. For me, the choice is clear. We must act.●

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 1756.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 1756) entitled "An Act to provide for the preservation and interpretation of sites associated with Acadian culture in the State of Maine", do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Maine Acadian Culture Preservation Act".

SEC. 2. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) recognize an important contribution made to American culture and history by the Acadian immigrants from France who settled in Nova Scotia and, following expulsion by the British in 1755, resettled in various North American colonies, including the territory that eventually became the State of Maine;

(2) assist local and State governments and other public and private entities in the State of Maine in interpreting the story of the State's Acadian settlers and their descendants as well as preserving Acadian music; arts, crafts, and folklore; and

(3) assist in identifying, gathering, and preserving sites, historical data, artifacts, and objects associated with the Acadians in Maine for the benefit and education of the public.

SEC. 2. MAINE ACADIAN CULTURE PRESERVATION COMMISSION.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is hereby established the Maine Acadian Culture Preservation Commission (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Commission"), which shall consist of 11 members appointed by the Secretary of the Interior (hereafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") not later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this Act, as follows:

(1) One member, who shall serve as Chair, appointed from among recommendations submitted by the Governor of the State of Maine.

(2) One member appointed from among recommendations submitted by the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the State of Maine.

(3) One member appointed from among recommendations submitted by the President of the Senate of the State of Maine.

(4) One member appointed from among recommendations submitted by the Chancellor of the University of Maine System.

(5) Three members appointed from among recommendations submitted by State and local historic, cultural or historic preservation organizations.

(6) Four members who are nationally recognized experts in fields of history, anthropology, and folklore, appointed by the Secretary.

(b) TERMS.—(1) Members of the Commission shall be appointed for terms not to exceed 3 years.

(2) The Secretary may stagger the terms of initial appointments to the Commission in order to assure continuity in operation.

(3) Any member of the Commission may serve after the expiration of his or her term until a successor is appointed. A vacancy in the Commission shall be filled in the same manner in which the original appointment was made.

(c) VOTING.—The Commission shall act and advise by affirmative vote of a majority of its members.

(d) COMPENSATION.—Members of the Commission shall receive no pay on account of their service on the Commission, but while away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of services for the Commission, members of the Commission shall be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703 of title 5, United States Code.

(e) EXEMPTION FROM CHARTER RENEWAL REQUIREMENTS.—Section 14(b) of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (5 U.S.C. App.) shall not apply to the Commission.

(f) TERMINATION.—The Commission shall terminate 10 years from the date of enactment of this Act.

(g) SUPPORT.—The Director of the National Park Service is authorized to provide such staff support and technical services as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Commission.

SEC. 4. DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION.

The Commission shall advise the Secretary with respect to—

(1) the selection of sites for interpretation and preservation by means of cooperative agreements pursuant to section 6; and

(2) the development and implementation of an interpretive program of the Acadian culture in the State of Maine pursuant to section 7(d).

SEC. 5. STUDY.

Within 1 year after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary, in consultation with the Commission, shall prepare and transmit to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate a comprehensive study of Acadian culture in Maine.

SEC. 6. COOPERATIVE AGREEMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In furtherance of the purposes of this Act, the Secretary is authorized, after consultation with the Commission, to enter into cooperative agreements with the owners of properties of natural, historical, or cultural significance associated with the Acadian people in the State of Maine, pursuant to which agreements the Secretary may mark, interpret, restore, and provide technical assistance for the preservation of such properties and pursuant to which the Secretary may provide assistance, including management services and program implementation.

(b) RIGHT OF ACCESS.—Each cooperative agreement shall provide that the Secretary, through the National Park Service, shall have the right of access at all reasonable times to all public portions of the property covered by the agreement for the purpose of conducting visitors through such properties and interpreting them to the public.

(c) ALTERATION OF PROPERTIES.—Each cooperative agreement shall provide that no changes or alterations shall be made in the property covered by the agreement except by mutual agreement between the Secretary and the other party to the agreement.

SEC. 7. ACADIAN CULTURAL CENTER.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized, after completion of the study required by section 5, to establish a center for the preservation and interpretation of Acadian culture within the State of Maine.

(b) ACQUISITION OF LAND.—The Secretary is authorized to acquire lands and interests therein, not to exceed 20 acres in total by donation, purchase with donated or appropriated funds, or exchange and to develop and operate facilities and programs at the center in furtherance of the purposes of this Act.

(c) OPERATION.—The Secretary may contract with public and private entities for the operation of the center in accordance with program standards approved by the Secretary.

(d) INTERPRETIVE PROGRAM.—In coordination with the Commission, the Secretary shall develop an interpretive program of the Acadian culture in the State of Maine.

(e) STATUTORY AUTHORITY.—The Secretary shall administer properties acquired and cooperative agreements entered into pursuant to this Act in accordance with the Act entitled "An Act to establish a National Park Service, and for other purposes", approved August 25, 1916 (16 U.S.C. 1 et seq.) and other statutory authority for the conservation and management of natural, historical, and cultural resources.

SEC. 8. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) COMMISSION.—For the purposes of carrying out the functions of the Commission, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary, not to exceed $250,000.

(b) OTHER PURPOSES.—(1) To carry out the other purposes of this Act, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary, subject to the limitations of paragraph (2).

AMENDMENT NO. 3006

(Purpose: To amend S. 1756, as amended by the House of Representatives)

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House with the following amendment which I send to the desk in behalf of Senator JOHNSTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN] for Mr. JOHNSTON proposes an amendment numbered 3006.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 3, line 5, after "history," insert "historic preservation,".

On page 4, line 23, strike "1 year" and insert in lieu thereof, "6 months".

On page 4, line 24, strike "Secretary, in consultation with the Commission," and insert in lieu thereof, "Secretary".

On page 6, lines 4 and 5, strike "after completion of the study required by section 5," and insert in lieu thereof, "after consultation with the Commission,".

On page 6, line 11, strike "develop and operate" and insert in lieu thereof, "develop, operate, and maintain".

On page 6, line 12, strike "programs" and insert in lieu thereof, "to develop and operate programs".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION BILL

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate receives a message from the House on S. 2834, the intelligence authorization bill, that the Senate disagree to the House amendment, agree to the request for a conference, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

When the conferees are received they will be presented to the Senate.

SENECA NATION SETTLEMENT ACT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 975, H.R. 5367, the Seneca Nation settlement bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5367) to provide for the renegotiation of certain leases of the Seneca Nation, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I introduced S. 2895 with Senator

D'AMATO on July 24 to provide compensation to the Seneca Nation of Indians for inequities resulting from past lease agreements with the city of Salamanca, NY.

The city of Salamanca is located almost entirely on land owned by the Seneca Nation of Indians. Some 3,000 property owners in Salamanca lease their land from the Senecas, under terms that will expire on February 19, 1991.

And as might come as no great surprise, the leases were authorized over the objections of the Senecas, by an act of the 51st Congress, on September 30, 1890. One hundred years and two weeks ago. As these leases contained no rent escalation provision, over their 99-year duration, some lessees have paid as little as $1 per year for the use of the land.

The Senecas and the city of Salamanca recently undertook negotiations to renew the leases, on somewhat more favorable terms for the Senecas. These negotiations have concluded, and the agreement reached also contemplates a one-time payment in restitution for the unjust terms of the last century. The sum agreed to by New York State and the Senecas is $60 million. A $35 million Federal and $25 million State contribution.

Governor Cuomo has pledged his best efforts to provide New York State's share. I hope we in Congress, who approved these leases 100 years ago, can also make this commitment.

We took advantage of the Seneca Nation, now we ought to correct this injustice. Mr. President, this bill would authorize just compensation for the Seneca Nation and clear the way for the extension of the land leases in Salamanca.

I urge its adoption.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the Seneca Nation Settlement Act of 1990 introduced by my friend and colleague, Congressman AMO HOUGHTON.

After years of negotiations by all parties, an agreeable settlement has been reached and now it is time for the Federal Government to do its part. The city of Salaomanca and the Seneca Indians have endured great economic hardships during this dispute. Businesses are closing and residents of the city are moving out because of the uncertainty of the status of their land. The Senecas are having difficulty finding jobs and the conditions on the reservation are crowded.

Congressman HOUGHTON and the Senecas are asking the Federal Government to contribute a portion to the settlement. Out of the agreed $60 million for the Senecas, the Government would contribute $35 million.

I believe that this is a fair compromise, given our current fiscal problems. I urge my colleagues to support this measure and help resolve this case.

Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, today the Senate is passing the Seneca Nation Settlement Act of 1990, S. 2895. I would like to take a few moments to commend the distinguished chairman of the Indian Affairs Committee, Senator INOUYE, for his expeditious treatment of this legislation. I introduced S. 2895 with Senator MOYNIHAN on July 24 of this year. Chairman INOUYE held a hearing on September 18, and here we are today on the verge of final passage. We would not be at this point today without the leadership of Senator INOUYE.

Roughly 90 percent of the city of Salamanca lies inside of the Allegany Reservation, home to the Seneca Indians. Back in 1892, the people of Salamanca entered into a 99-year lease with the Senecas. The terms of the lease required annual payments of $57,000 to the Senecas. The lease is set to expire in February 1991.

For nearly a decade, the Senecas and the city of Salamanca have been negotiating the terms for a new lease. The disagreements that have characterized the negotiations over the past 10 years have created an air of uncertainty about the city's future that has discouraged investment and depressed real estate prices. In July, the parties finally reached agreement on the terms of the new lease. S. 2895 embodies this agreement.

Under S. 2895, the Seneca Nation will offer new 40-year leases to the existing lessees with an option to renew for an additional 40 years. Unlike the existing fixed term leases, the annual rental of these leases is linked to the appraised value of the land—8 percent for residential property and 10 percent for commercial property. The annual rental income will jump from $57,000 now received by the Senecas to $800,000. S. 2895 also requires payment from the U.S. Government of $35 million as compensation to the Seneca Nation for past losses; and payment from the State of New York for similar purposes.

This legislation is important to the Seneca Nation as well as the city of Salamanca. I am pleased that the Senate is about to pass this legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 5367) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate companion bill, Calendar No. 948, S. 2895, be definitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NATIONAL SARCOIDOSIS AWARENESS DAY

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee be discharged from further consideration of House Joint Resolution 519, designating National Sarcoidosis Awareness Day and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H.J. Res. 519) designating August 29, 1990, as "National Sarcoidosis Awareness Day."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendments. If there is no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H.J. Res. 519) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

HYDROGEN RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar 708, S. 639, to establish a hydrogen research and development program.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its immediate consideration.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 639) to establish a hydrogen research and development program, which had been reported from the Commission on Energy and Natural Resources, with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be referred to as the "Spark M. Matsunaga Hydrogen Research, Development, and Demonstration Act of 1990".

SEC. 102. FINDINGS, PURPOSES, AND DEFINITION.

(a) FINDING.—Congress finds that it is in the national interest to accelerate efforts to develop a domestic capability to economically produce hydrogen in quantities that will make a significant contribution toward reducing the Nation's dependence on conventional fuels.

(b) PURPOSES.—The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to direct the Secretary to prepare a comprehensive 5-year comprehensive program management plan that will identify and resolve critical technical issues necessary for the realization of a domestic capability to produce, distribute, and use hydrogen economically within the shortest time practicable;

(2) to direct the Secretary to develop a technology assessment and information transfer program among the Federal agencies and aerospace, transportation, energy, and other entities; and

(3) to develop renewable energy resources as a primary source of energy for the production of hydrogen.

(c) DEFINITION.—As used in this Act, the term:

(1) "critical technology" (or "critical technical issue") means a technology (or issue) that, in the opinion of the Secretary, requires understanding and development in order to take the next needed step in the development of hydrogen as an economic fuel or storage medium; and

(2) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Energy.

SEC. 103. COMPREHENSIVE MANAGEMENT PLAN.

(a) PLAN.—The Secretary shall prepare a comprehensive 5-year program management plan for research and development activities, which shall be conducted over a period of no less than 5 years and shall be consistent with the provisions of sections 104 and 105. In the preparation of such plan, the Secretary shall consult with the Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the Secretary of Transportation, the Hydrogen Technical Advisory Panel established under section 108, and the heads of such other Federal agencies and such public and private organizations as he deems appropriate. The plan shall be structured to identify and address areas of research critical to the realization of a domestic hydrogen production capability within the shortest time practicable.

(b) CONTENTS OF PLAN.—Within 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall transmit the comprehensive program management plan to the Committee on Science, Space, and Technology of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate. Subsequent plans shall be incorporated in the management plan under this section. The plan shall include—

(1) a prioritization of research areas critical to the economic use of hydrogen as a fuel and energy storage medium;

(2) the program elements, management structure, and activities, including program responsibilities of individual agencies and individual institutional elements;

(3) the program strategies including technical milestones to be achieved toward specific goals during each fiscal year for all major activities and projects;

(4) the estimated costs of individual program items, including current as well as proposed funding levels for each of the 5 years of the plan for each of the participating agencies;

(5) a description of the methodology of coordination and technology transfer; and

(6) the proposed participation by industry and academia in the planning and implementation of the program.

(c) DEMONSTRATION PLAN.—The Secretary shall, in consultation with the Secretary of Transportation, the Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, and the Hydrogen Technical Advisory Panel established under section 108, also prepare a comprehensive large-scale hydrogen demonstration plan with respect to demonstrations carried out pursuant to section 105. Subsequent plans shall be incorporated in the management plan under this section. Such plan shall include—

(1) a description of the necessary research and development activities that must be completed before initiation of a large-scale hydrogen production and storage demonstration program;

(2) an assessment of the appropriateness of a large-scale demonstration immediately upon completion of the necessary research and development activities;

(3) an implementation schedule with associated budget and program management resource requirements; and

(4) a description of the role of the private sector in carrying out the demonstration program.

SEC. 104. RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT.

(a) PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall conduct a research and development program, consistent with the comprehensive 5-year program management plan under section 103, to ensure the development of a domestic hydrogen fuel production capability within the shortest time practicable consistent with market conditions.

(b) RESEARCH.—(1) Particular attention shall be given to developing an understanding and resolution of all critical technical issues preventing the introduction of hydrogen into the marketplace.

(2) The Secretary shall initiate research or accelerate existing research in critical technical issues that will contribute to the development of more economic hydrogen production and use, including, but not limited to, critical technical issues with respect to production, liquefaction, transmission, distribution, storage, and use (including use of hydrogen in surface transportation).

(c) RENEWABLE ENERGY PRIORITY.—The Secretary shall give priority to those production techniques that use renewable energy resources as their primary source of energy for hydrogen production.

(d) NEW TECHNOLOGIES.—The Secretary shall, for the purpose of performing his responsibilities pursuant to this Act, solicit proposals for and evaluate any reasonable new or improved technology that could lead or contribute to the development of economic hydrogen production storage and utilization.

(e) INFORMATION.—The Secretary shall conduct evaluations, arrange for tests and demonstrations, and disseminate to developers information, data, and materials necessary to support efforts undertaken pursuant to this section, consistent with section 106.

SEC. 105. DEMONSTRATONS.

(a) REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary shall conduct demonstrations of critical technologies, preferably in self-contained locations, so that technical and non-technical parameters can be evaluated to best determine commercial applicability of the technology.

(b) SMALL-SCALE DEMONSTRATIONS.—Concurrently with activities conducted pursuant to section 104, the Secretary shall conduct small-scale demonstrations of hydrogen technology at self-contained sites.

SEC. 106. TECHNOLOGY TRANSFER PROGRAM.

(a) PROGRAM.—The Secretary shall conduct a program designed to accelerate wider application of hydrogen production, storage, utilization, and other technologies available in near term as a result of aerospace experience as well as other research progress by transferring critical technologies to the private sector. The Secretary shall direct the program with the advice and assistance of the Hydrogen Technical Advisory Panel established under section 108. The objective in seeking this advice is to increase participation of private industry in the demonstration of near commercial applications through cooperative research and development arrangements, joint ventures or other appropriate arrangements involving the private sector.

(b) INFORMATION.—The Secretary, in carrying out the program authorized by subsection (a), shall—

(1) undertake an inventory and assessment of hydrogen technologies and their commercial capability to economically produce, store, or utilize hydrogen in aerospace, transportation, electric utilities, petrochemical, chemical, merchant hydrogen, and other industrial sectors; and

(2) develop a National Aeronautics Space Administration, Department of Energy, and industry information exchange program to improve technology transfer for—

(A) application of aerospace experience by industry;

(B) application of research progress by industry and aerospace;

(C) application of commercial capability of industry by aerospace; and

(D) expression of industrial needs to research organizations.

The information exchange program may consist of workshops, publications, conferences, and a data base for the use by the public and private sectors.

SEC. 107. COORDINATION AND CONSULTATION.

(a) SECRETARY'S RESPONSIBILITY.—The Secretary shall have overall management responsibility for carrying out programs under this Act. In carrying out such programs, the Secretary, consistent with such overall management responsibility—

(1) shall use the expertise of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the Department of Transportation; and

(2) may use the expertise of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration and the Department of Transportation; and

(2) may use the expertise of any other Federal agency in accordance with subsection (b) in carrying out any activities under this title, to the extent that the Secretary determines that any such agency has capabilities which would allow such agency to contribute to the purpose of this Act.

(b) ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary may, in accordance with subsection (a), obtain the assistance of any department, agency, or instrumentality of the Executive branch of the Federal Government upon written request, on a reimbursable basis or otherwise and with the consent of such department, agency, or instrumentality. Each such request shall identify the assistance the Secretary deems necessary to carry out any duty under this Act.

(c) CONSULTATION.—The Secretary shall consult with the Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency, the Secretary of Transportation, and the Hydrogen Technical Advisory Panel established under section 108 in carrying out his authorities pursuant to this Act.

SEC. 108. TECHNICAL PANEL.

(b) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is hereby established the Hydrogen Technical Advisory Panel (the "technical panel"), to advise the Secretary on the programs under this Act.

(b) MEMBERSHIP.—The technical panel shall be appointed by the Secretary and shall be comprised of such representatives from domestic industry, universities, professional societies, Government laboratories, financial, environmental, and other organizations as the Secretary deems appropriate based on his assessment of the technical and other qualifications of such representatives. Appointments to the technical panel shall be made within 90 days after the enactment of this Act. The technical panel shall have a chairman, who shall be elected by the members from among their number.

(c) COOPERATION.—The heads of the departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Executive branch of the Federal Government shall cooperate with the technical panel in carrying out the requirements of this section and shall furnish to the technical panel such information as the technical panel deems necessary to carry out this section.

(d) REVIEW.—The technical panel shall review and make any necessary recommendations to the Secretary of the following items—

(1) the implementation and conduct of programs under this Act;

(2) the economic, technological, and environmental consequences of the deployment of hydrogen production and use systems; and

(3) comments on and recommendations for improvements in the comprehensive 5-year program management plan required under section 103.

(e) SUPPORT.—The Secretary shall provide such staff, funds and other support as may be necessary to enable the technical panel to carry out the functions described in this section.

SEC. 109. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to carry out the purpose of this Act (in addition to any amounts made available for such purposes to other Acts)—

(1) $3,000,000 for the fiscal year 1992;

(2) $7,000,000 for the fiscal year 1993; and

(3) $10,000,000 for the fiscal year 1994.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to establish the Spark M. Matsunaga Hydrogen Research, Development, and Demonstration Program Act of 1990."

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, nearly 10 years ago, one of our most beloved and respected colleagues, the late Senator Spark Matsunaga, introduced the first hydrogen bill in the U.S. Senate.

There were many who doubted the feasibility of developing hydrogen as a clean and plentiful source of fuel. But Sparky believed in hydrogen's potential, he persisted, and a growing body of scientific studies supported his claims. Sparky pointed to hydrogen, the most abundant element in the universe, and its untapped potential as a clean, cheap, and plentiful source of fuel. And 2 years ago, what many people once thought was impossible—the flight of a hydrogen-powered aircraft whose only emissions would be a harmles wisp of water vapor—became a reality. The Soviet Union flew a Tupolev aircraft fueled solely by hydrogen, and once again, as Sparky pointed out on the Senate Floor, "the Soviets have stolen a technological march on us."

Mr. President, Sparky's vision of hydrogen as an alternative fuel is much closer to becoming a reality. The House recently passed its version of the Matsunaga hydrogen research and development bill. And now it is time for the Senate to adopt the measure.

This bill, which has already been approved by the House, will direct the Secretary of Energy to establish a research and development program for the development of a domestic hydrogen fuel production capability. It will require NASA to lead research and development of a domestic hydrogen-fueled aircraft capability. And it will set up advisory committees to see this project to fruition.

When I was first sworn in to the Senate this past May, I pledged that I would carry on Sparky's agenda. Near and dear to our late friend and colleague's heart was his vision and his determination to promote hydrogen as a universal power source. The current standoff in the Persian Gulf crisis demonstrates that we should have embraced his legislation long ago.

Mr. President, I strongly urged my colleagues to adopt the Spark M. Matsunaga Hydrogen Research, Development, and Demonstration Act. Sparky dedicated his life to serving humanity. The time was upon us to carry out his vision. Let us turn Sparky's hope into a reality.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ANTARCTIC PROTECTION ACT OF 1990

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 839, S. 2575, a bill to urge the Secretary of State to negotiate a ban on mineral resource activities in the Antarctic.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2575) to urge the Secretary of State to negotiate a ban on mineral resource activities in Antarctica, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 3009

(Purpose: To strengthen substantially overall environmental protection of Antarctica)

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], for Mr. KERRY, proposes an amendment numbered 3009.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

In amendment, delete all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Antarctica Protection Act of 1990".

For the purposes of this Act—

(1) the term "Antarctica" means the area of the Antarctic convergence as defined in section 303(1) of the Antarctic Marine Living Resources Act of 1984 (16 U.S.C. 2432);

(2) the term "mineral resources" means all nonliving natural nonrenewable resources, including fossil fuels, minerals, whether metallic or non-metallic, but does not include ice, snow or water;

(3) the term "person" means any individual, corporation, partnership, trust, association, or any other private entity existing or organized under the laws of the United States, or any officer, employee, agent, department, or other instrumentality of the Federal Government or of any State or political subdivision thereof; and

(4) the term "minerals resource activity" means prospecting, exploration, or development activities in

Antarctica of mineral resources, but does not include scientific research within the meaning of Article III of the Antarctic Treaty, done in Washington on December 1, 1959.

SEC. 3. FINDINGS AND PURPOSES.

(a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) the Antarctic continent and its associated and dependent ecosystems is a distinctive environment providing a habitat for many unique species and offering a natural laboratory from which to monitor critical aspects of stratospheric ozone depletion and global climate change;

(2) Antarctica is protected by a series of international agreements, including the Antarctic Treaty and associated recommendations, the Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Seals, and the Convention on the Conservation of Antarctic Marine Living Resources which are intended to conserve the renewable natural resources of Antarctica and to recognize the importance of Antarctica for the conduct of scientific research;

(3) recurring and recent developments in Antarctica, including increased siting of scientific stations, poor waste disposal practices, oil spills, increased tourism, and the over-exploitation of marine living resources have resulted in serious questions about the adequacy and implementation of existing agreements to protect the Antarctic environment and its living marine resources;

(4) the parties to the Antarctic Treaty have recently negotiated a Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities which the United States has signed but not yet ratified;

(5) the Convention on the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities does not guarantee the preservation of the fragile environment of Antarctica and could actually stimulate movement toward commercial exploitation;

(6) The Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties have agreed to a voluntary ban on Antarctic mineral resource activities which needs to be made legally binding;

(7) the level of scientific study, including necessary support facilities has increased, in part to justify achieving the status of a consultative party under the Antarctic Treaty, to the point that some scientific programs may be degrading the Antarctic environment; and

(8) the planned 1990 special consultative meeting to parties to the Antarctica Treaty and the imminence of the thirtieth anniversary of the Antarctica Treaty provide opportunities for the United States to exercise leadership toward protection and sound management of Antarctica.

(b) PURPOSE.—It is the purpose of the Act to—

(1) strengthen substantially overall environmental protection of Antarctica;

(2) prohibit prospecting, exploration and exploitation of Antarctic mineral resources by United States citizens and other persons or entities subject to the jurisdiction of the United States;

(3) urge other nations to join the United States in immediately negotiating one or more international agreements to provide an indefinite ban on all minerals activities in Antarctica and comprehensive protection for Antarctica and its associated and dependent ecosystems; and

(4) urge all nations to consider a permanent ban on Antarctic mineral resource activities.

SEC. 4. PROHIBITION ON ANTARCTIC MINERAL RESOURCE ACTIVITIES.

Pending an agreement among the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, in force for the United States, to which the Senate has given advice and consent or which is authorized by further legislation by the Congress, which includes an indefinite ban on Antarctic mineral resource activities, it is unlawful for any person to engage in, finance, directly or indirectly, or knowingly provide assistance to any Antarctic minerals resource activity.

SEC. 5. INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT.

(a) It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State should enter into negotiations with the consultative parties described in paragraphs (1) and (2) of Article IX of the Antarctica Treaty, done at Washington on December 1, 1959, for the purpose of concluding one or more international agreements—

(1) to seek a prohibition or indefinite ban on Antarctic mineral resource activities by all parties to the Antarctica Treaty;

(2) to grant Antarctica special protective status as land of science dedicated to wilderness protection, international cooperation and scientific research;

(3) to conserve and protect permanently the natural environment of Antarctica and its associated and dependent ecosystems;

(4) to ensure that the results of all scientific investigation relating to geological processes and structures be made openly available to the international scientific community, as required by the Antarctic Treaty; and

(5) to include other comprehensive measures for the protection of the Antarctic environment.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that any treaty or other international agreement submitted by the President to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification relating to mineral resources or activities in Antarctica should be consistent with the purpose and provisions of this Act.

SEC. 6. ENVIRONMENT.

A violation of this Act, any regulation promulgated under this Act, or a term or condition of a license issued under this Act shall be deemed a violation of the Antarctic Marine Living Resources Convention Act (16 U.S.C. 2431-2444) and shall be enforced under that Act by the Under Secretary or another Federal official to whom the Under Secretary has delegated this responsibility.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no further debate, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3009) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed, as follows:

S. 2575

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

SEC. 4. PROHIBITION ON ANTARCTIC MINERAL RESOURCE ACTIVITIES.

Pending an greement among the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties, in force for the United States, to which the Senate has given advice and consent or which is authorized by further legislation by the Congress, which includes an indefinite ban on Antarctic mineral resource activities, it is unlawful for any person to engage in, finance, directly or indirectly, or knowingly provide assistance to any Antarctic minerals resource activity.

SEC. 5. INTERNATIONAL AGREEMENT.

(a) It is the sense of the Congress that the Secretary of State should enter into negotiations with the consultative parties described in paragraphs (1) and (2) of Article IX of the Antarctica Treaty, done at Washington on December 1, 1959, for the purpose

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that any treaty or other international agreement submitted by the President to the Senate for its advice and consent to ratification relating to mineral resources or activities in Antarctica should be consistent with the purpose and provisions of this Act.

SEC. 6. ENFORCEMENT.

A violation of this Act, any regulation promulgated under this Act, or a term or condition of a license issued under this Act shall be deemed a violation of the Antarctic Marine Living Resources Convention Act (16 U.S.C. 2431-2444) and shall be enforced under that Act by the Under Secretary or another Federal official to whom the Under Secretary has delegated this responsibility.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the Senate has passed S. 2575 authored by Senator KERRY. This legislation is significant for several reasons. First, the bill recognizes that the Convention for the Regulation of Antarctic Mineral Resource Activities, commonly known as the Wellington Convention, is not adequate to guarantee the protection of the Antractic environment. This fact has been recognized by other nations—including France, Australia, and New Zealand—that have withdrawn their support for the Convention.

Second, the bill puts the Senate on record in favor of comprehensive environmental protection for Antarctica. This position should strengthen the hand of our negotiators at this fall's meeting of the Antarctic Treaty Consultative Parties in Santiago, Chile. It is clear that at that meeting we have the opportunity to move beyond the Wellington Convention toward a truly comprehensive regime to protect Antarctica's environment.

Third, the Kerry bill puts the Senate on record in favor of a prohibition or indefinite ban on mineral resource activities. Senator KERRY's legislation underscores the U.S. commitment to this position by establishing a prohibition on mineral resource activities by U.S. persons until an international agreement prohibiting such activities has entered into force.

Mr. President, on July 27, 1990 the Foreign Relations Committee held a hearing on S. 2575 as well as two additional measures on the Antarctic, Senate Resolution 186 and Senate Joint Resolution 206. The committee heard testimony from Senator GORE; Assistant Secretary of State Bohlen; the Director of the National Science Foundation's Division of Polar Programs, Dr. Peter Wilkniss; Mr. Bruce Manheim, an attorney with the Environmental Defense Fund; and Ms. Susan Sabella of Greenpeace.

The testimony presented to the committee made clear the urgency of protecting the Antarctic environment. I believe that this is one of the most urgent and pressing issues facing our nation in its environmental diplomacy. The Antarctic plays a critical role in the Earth's oceanic and atmospheric systems. Upsetting the Antarctic ecosystem could well have dire and unforeseen consequences for the rest of the planet.

The Antarctic is also an invaluable area for scientific research. The Antarctic ice is an index to changes in the Earth's atmospheric chemistry and climate over the past 160,000 years. This climatic history may yield information that will help us better understand the consequences of today's actions on tomorrow's climate.

In light of the Antarctic's importance, my view is that the nations of the world must work together and take extraordinary measures to preserve the continent in its current state. I have called for the Antarctic to be designated as world park, subject to the strictest possible environmental controls. I believe that this is the best way to ensure the sound management of the continent well into the future.

At this time, I would like to pay particular tribute to Senator KERRY, the author of this bill and one of the Senate's leaders on protection of the Antarctic environment. It is a tribute to his efforts in this area that the United States Government's policy on Antarctic environmental protection and the CRAMRA agreement has moved substantially toward that of the environmental community. I commend my colleague from Massachusetts for his efforts, and I look forward to working with him in the future on these and other issues.

NATIONAL HARDWOOD DAY

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent the Committee on the Judiciary be discharged from further consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 350, "National Hardwood Day," and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The joint resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 350) to designate October 19, 1990 as "National Hardwood Day."

The Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, Senate Joint Resolution 350, a joint resolution designating October 18, 1990, as "National Hardwood Day," honors one of the Nation's oldest, most productive, and responsible industries—hardwood lumber—and marks the tradition and achievements of the men and women in rural America who have built an industry from hard work and a renewable resource—our hardwood forests. The American hardwood industry can be proud of its contributions to this Nation and its record of responsible forest management, and I salute this industry as it celebrates "National Hardwood Day' on the 18th of October.

The joint resolution (S.J. Res. 350) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The preamble was agreed to.

The joint resolution, with its preamble, reads as follows:

S.J. RES. 350

Whereas the hardwood industry has played an enduring and vital role in the economic life of the United States, from the growing and harvesting of trees to the manufacture of wood and paper products;

Whereas the demand for hardwood products is projected to grow throughout this century and into the next century;

Whereas the hardwood industry will continue to employ numerous citizens of the United States in positions in forestry and manufacturing to meet the growing demand for hardwood products; and

Whereas hardwood is a renewable resource that will not be depleted if forests and natural resource professionals continue to find ways to manage our forests effectively: Now, therefore be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That—

(1) October 18, 1990, is designated as "National Hardwood Day"; and

(2) the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe the day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DRUG AND HOUSEHOLD SUBSTANCE MAILING

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of H.R. 5209, the Drug and Household Substance Mailing Act of 1990 which has just been received from the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5209) to amend title 39, United States Code, to make nonmailable any unsolicited sample of a drug or other hazardous household substance which does not meet child-resistant packaging requirements, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 5209) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

PONCA TRIBE OF NEBRASKA RECOGNITION ACT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 1747.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 1747) entitled "An Act to provide for the restoration of Federal recognition to the Ponca Tribe of Nebraska, and for other purposes", do pass the following amendments:

Page 3, lines 4 and 5, strike out "The Secretary shall accept any real property that is transferred to the Secretary for the benefit of the Tribe.", and insert "The Secretary shall accept not more than 1,500 acres of any real property located in Knox or Boyd Counties, Nebraska, that is transferred to the Secretary for the benefit of the Tribe.".

Page 3, line 11, after "transfer.", insert "The Secretary may accept any additional acreage in Knox or Boyd Counties pursuant to his authority under the Act of June 18, 1934 (25 U.S.C. 461 et seq.).".

(e) Reservation status shall not be granted any land acquired by or for the Tribe.

Page 5, line 4, after "(ii)", insert "notwithstanding the application or appeal deadline dates,".

Page 5, line 14, after "Tribe.", insert "Such determination by the Secretary shall be final.".

Page 8, line 1, after "Tribe", insert "located in Knox or Boyd Counties, Nebraska,".

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur on the House amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 5702, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to provide for an improvement in the health of members of minority groups, now at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5702) to amend the Public Health Service Act to improve the health of individuals who are members of minority groups and who are from disadvantaged backgrounds, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are there amendments? Hearing none, the bill is deemed to have been read the third time and passed.

So the bill (H.R. 5702) was passed.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA REVENUE BOND ACT OF 1990

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Government Affairs Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 5482, the District of Columbia Revenue Bond Act of 1990, and that the Senate then proceed to its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5482) to waive the period of congressional review for certain District of Columbia acts authorizing the issuance of District of Columbia revenue bonds.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

AMENDMENT NO. 3007

Mr. LEVIN. On behalf of Senator SASSER, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], for Mr. SASSER, proposes an amendment numbered 3007.

On page 4, line 19, after the words "except that", insert the following: "the proceeds of bonds issued under such Act shall be utilized solely for renovation and rehabilitation of a presently existing stadium and any related, necessary infrastructure improvements appurtenant to such stadium; and that".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3007) was agreed to.

Mr. LEVIN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Are their further amendments? If not, the bill is deemed to have been read a third time and passed.

So the bill (H.R. 5482), as amended, was passed.

Mr. LEVIN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

INSULAR AREAS RECOVERY ACT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar Order No. 684, S. 2362, a bill to enhance the survivability and recovery of the insular areas from severe storms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2362) to enhance the survivability and recovery of the insular areas from severe storms.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with amendments; as follows:

S. 2362

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Insular Areas Recovery Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act—

(1) the term "insular areas" means the United States Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Freely Associated States;

(2) the term "disaster" means that the President has declared a [disaster under section 301] major disaster pursuant to section 401 of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act [(42

U.S.C. 5121 et seq.)] (42 U.S.C. 5170 et seq.) on or after September 1, 1989; and

(3) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION.

There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to construct facilities to protect public health and safety[, and,] or to enhance the survivability of essential infrastructure in the event of disasters in the insular areas. Such sums shall remain available until [expended and shall be considered local funds for the purposes of Federal local matching requirements.] expended.

SEC. 4. USE OF CERTAIN FUNDS.

(a) For a period of two years from the date on which a disaster is declared by the President, the Governor of the affected insular area may transfer up to 100 percent of that insular area's respective allotment under section 2604(b) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8623(b)) for the fiscal year in which the disaster occurred, for use in disaster recovery or in enhancing the survivability of essential infrastructure in the event of future disasters. Such funds shall be transferred to a State Energy Conservation Program established pursuant to section 362 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6322), and such use of these transferred funds shall be deemed to be consistent with the purposes for which such program was established. The Governor of the insular area shall inform the Secretary of any such transfer of funds. Puerto Rico shall be considered to be an insular area for the purposes of this subsection.

(b) During the two-year period following a disaster in Puerto Rico, it shall be deemed to be an insular area for the purposes of section 501 of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize certain appropriations for the territories of the United States, to amend certain Acts relating thereto, and for other purposes", approved October 18, 1977 (48 U.S.C. 149a), when in the judgment of the appropriate agency head the consolidation of grants would facilitate recovery from disaster damage.

SEC. 5. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.

(a) Upon the declaration by the President of a disaster in an insular area, the President shall assess, in cooperation with the Secretary and the [Governor] Head of Government of such insular area, the capability of the insular area government to respond to the disaster, including the capability to: assess damage; coordinate activities with other agencies, particularly the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA); develop recovery plans, including recommendations for enhancing the survivability of essential infrastructure; negotiate and manage reconstruction contracts; and prevent the misuse of funds. If the President finds that the insular area government lacks these, or other capabilities essential to the recovery effort, then the President shall provide technical assistance to the insular area government which the President deems necessary for the recovery effort.

(b) One year following the declaration by the President of a disaster in an insular area, the Secretary shall report to Congress on the status of the recovery effort, including: an audit of Federal funds expended in the recovery effort; and recommendations on how to improve public health and safety, survivability of infrastructure, recovery efforts, and effective use of funds, in the event of future disasters.

SEC. 6. WAIVERS.

[(a) HAZARD MITIGATION.—The President may waive any cost contribution requirements or conditions under section 404 of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.) with respect to expenditures in an insular area if the President finds that such a waiver would promote reconstruction in the disaster area so as to enhance the survivability of essential infrastructure, or would enhance public health and safety, in the event of future disasters.

[(b) USE OF LOCAL FIRMS.—The President may waive the requirement of section 307 of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.) in an insular area if the President finds that the disaster has exceeded the capability of local firms to respond to the disaster.]

Hazard Mitigation.—Upon determination by the President, the total of contributions under section 404 of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 4121 et seq.) for insular areas shall not exceed 25 percent of the estimated aggregate amounts of grants to be made under sections: 403, 406, 407, 408, and 411 of such Act for any disaster.

SEC. 7. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.

Section 102(3) of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5121 et seq.) is amended by inserting after the words "American Samoa," wherever it appears, the following: "Commonwealth of the North Mariana [Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands and the Freely Associated States".] lands".

SEC. 8. ELECTRIFICATION LOANS.

(a) The Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration is authorized to make loans, or provide other financial and technical assistance under the Rural Electrification Act (7 U.S.C. 901 et seq.), including sections 4, 5, 305, and 306 of such Act (7 U.S.C. 904, 905, 935, and 936) in any insular areas in which the President declares a disaster, for the purposes set forth in such Rural Electrification Act, including the financing of the construction and operation of generating plants, electric transmission and distribution lines or systems to provide electricity to any persons who are resident in such territory. [Such authority shall expire five years after the date on which the President declared the disaster.] This authorization shall be effective only for applications submitted to the Administrator within five years after the date of the Presidential declaration.

(b) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to affect any program of Federal financial assistance that may otherwise be available under any provision of law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendments.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 3008

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, on behalf of Senators JOHNSTON and MCCLURE, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], for Mr. JOHNSTON (for himself and Mr. MCCLURE), proposes an amendment numbered 3008.

Mr. LEVIN. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The amendment is as follows:

In section 3, after the word "appropriated", insert "to the Secretary"; and after the words "public health and safety", strike "or" and insert "and" in lieu thereof.

In section 6, strike the words "25 percent" and insert "10 percent" in lieu thereof; and at the end of the section strike the period and insert the following: ": Provided, That the President may require a 50 percent local match for assistance in excess of 10 percent of the estimated aggregate amount of grants to be made under section 406 of such Act for any disaster.".

In section 7, strike the words "Mariana lands" and insert "Mariana Islands" in lieu thereof.

At the end of the bill strike section 8 and add the following new sections:

SEC. 8. GUAM HOSPITAL.

There is authorized to be appropriated $2,500,000 to complete the renovation of the Guam Memorial Hospital.

SEC. 9. DISPOSAL OF EXCESS FEDERAL LANDS ON GUAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION.—As a prerequisite for the transfer of excess lands under section 11, the Government of Guam must enact legislation which—

(1) establishes an excess lands commission the purpose of which shall be to dispose of lands received pursuant to this title to promote economic self-sufficiency and private sector development in Guam;

(2) provides that the Commission shall have the power—

(A) to hold all right, title, and interest in and to all real property transferred under section 11;

(B) to dispose of real properties or interests therein transferred under section 11 in accordance with the laws of Guam and the priorities set forth in the enabling legislation as required pursuant to paragraph 4 of this subsection;

(C) to resolve conclusively all issues related to lands transferred under section 11 and without appeal to any other agency or court of law except as otherwise expressly provided by the laws of Guam; and

(3) provides that the Commission shall make annual reports to the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives, on or before February 15 of each year, on the disposition of lands transferred pursuant to this title and on the activities and actions of the Commission during the reporting period; and

(4) establishes priorities for the distribution and disposal of the excess lands.

(b) UNITED STATES PERSON.—(1) As used in this title, the term "United States person" means—

(A) any citizen, national, or permanent resident alien of the United States,

(B) any partnership, corporation, or other entity organized under the laws of the United States, any of the several States, the District of Columbia, or any Commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States, in which citizens, nationals, or permanent resident aliens of the United States beneficially own or control (directly or indirectly) more than 50 per centum of the outstanding voting securities or other voting interest of the partnership, corporation, or other entity, or

(C) the government of any of the several States, the District of Columbia, or any Commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States.

(2) A partnership, corporation, or other entity described in paragraph (1)(B) shall be presumed to be controlled by individuals who are citizens, nationals, or permanent resident aliens of the United States if—

(A) such individuals are a majority of the partners of the partnership or a majority of the members of the board of directors of the corporation or other entity; or

(B) such individuals have the authority to appoint a majority of the members of the board of directors of the corporation or other entity.

(c) OWNERSHIP OF UNITED STATES PERSONS OF LAND HELD IN TRUST.—For the purposes of this section, the term "ownership of United States persons" means, in the case of a portion of land held in trust, the legal and the beneficial interests of such trust must be held by United States persons.

SEC. 10. TRANSFER OF EXCESS FEDERAL LAND LOCATED ON GUAM.

Except for lands within the boundaries of the War in the Pacific National Historic Park, the Administrator of General Services shall transfer, without consideration and without encumbrances, all right, title and interest of the United States (together with any improvements thereon) in and to any real property on Guam which is determined to be excess under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 471 et seq.) to the Commission to be established by the laws of Guam for disposition in accordance with section 10. Any property subject to this title shall not be subject to Public Law 100-77 (101 Stat. 482). Title to any real property conveyed pursuant to this title shall revert to the United States if the Commission attempts to convey or otherwise transfer ownership of such property other than to a United States person.

SEC. 11. REPEAL OF CERTAIN CONDITIONS ON LAND TRANSFERRED TO GUAM.

Section 818(b)(2) of Public Law 96-418 (94 Stat. 1782), as amended, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 12. TERRITORIAL ENERGY ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.

(a)(1) The Secretary of Energy, pursuant to the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Policy Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5901, et seq.), may grant financial assistance to Insular area governments to carry out projects to evaluate the feasibility of, develop options for, and encourage the adoption of energy efficiency and renewable energy measures which reduce the dependency of the Insular area on imported fuels and improve the quality of life in the insular area.

(2) Any applicant for financial assistance under this section must evidence coordination and cooperate with, and support from, the affected local energy entities in the area with necessary expertise to successfully effectuate the project, including, but not limited to, the local energy agencies, power authorities, and public works departments.

(3) In determining the amount of financial assistance to be provided for a proposed energy-efficiency or renewable energy measure, the Secretary shall consider—

(A) whether the measure will reduce the relative dependence of the Insular area on imported fuels;

(B) the ease and costs of operation and maintenance of any facilities contemplated as a part of the project;

(C) whether the project will rely on the use of conservation measures or indigenous, renewable energy resources that were identified in the 1982 Territorial Energy Assessment or are identified by the Secretary as consistent with the purpose of this section;

(D) whether the measure will contribute significantly to the quality of the environment in the Insular area; and

(E) any other factors which the Secretary may determine to be relevant to a particular project or measure.

(4) The Secretary shall require at least 20 per centum of the costs of any project under this section to be provided from non-Federal sources. Such cost sharing may be in the form of in-kind services, donated equipment, or any combination thereof.

(b) for the purposes of this section, the term—

(1) "Insular area government" means the government of American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Federated States of Micronesia, Guam, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Republic of Palau, or the United States Virgin Islands.

(2) "1982 Territorial Energy Assessment" means the assessment prepared by the Department of Energy pursuant to the Omnibus Territorial Act. (P.L. 96-597, 94 Stat. 3480; as amended by P.L. 99-213, 97 Stat. 1460)

(c) For each fiscal year, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this section, $500,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, I rise to support the passage of S. 2362, the Insular Areas Recovery Act, with amendments to the committee amendments by myself and my colleague from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, Senator MCCLURE. This legislation was initiated in response to storm damage repeatedly suffered by our island territories, including the recent devastation caused by hurricane Hugo in the Virgin Islands. Records of the Federal Emergency Management Agency show that there have been 39 disasters in the territories in the past 20 years.

These frequent severe storms have revealed a systemic problem in our national response to disasters in the islands. The islands repeatedly suffer severe damage from violent storms in large part because they are not rebuilt to withstand future storms. The Nation currently has a policy of rebuilding storm damaged areas to those conditions which existed prior to the storm. In areas of high storm frequency, such as the Caribbean and the Pacific, this has resulted in a very costly cycle of repeated destruction and reconstruction.

S. 2362 would help to break this cycle by providing the President, and the Governors of the Insular Areas, with additional options for financing hazard mitigation projects so as to harden these areas against future storms. For a complete explanation of the provisions of S. 2362, I refer my colleagues to Senate Report 101-363 which sets forth the background and recommendations of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources regarding this legislation.

The committee reported S. 2362 on July 12, 1990. However, floor action was not initiated, at the request of representatives in the Virgin Islands. Given the lateness of the session, however, further delay in Senate passage threatens enactment of the bill and the availability of funds to the islands. Of particular concern are the authorizations for three programs contained in S. 2362 and for which appropriations are expected. Unfortunately, these funds cannot be expended without the enactment of the authorizing provisions included in S. 2362.

The proposed Johnston-McClure amendments would make several modifications to the committee amendments as requested by the administration. These modifications include limiting the scope of the authorization under section 3; limiting the expansion of hazard mitigation assistance under section 6, and providing that the president may require a matching contribution for such expanded assistance; and striking section 8 regarding loans from the Rural Electrification Administration.

The Johnston-McClure amendments to the committee amendments would also add several Senate passed legislative provisions to S. 2362. These include the provisions of S. 2841, the Omnibus Territories Act, passed by the Senate on August 3, 1990; and section 12 of S. 247, authorizing the Territorial Energy Assistance Program, passed by the Senate on January 25, 1990. For further details regarding these measures, I refer my colleagues to the appropriate floor statements and committee reports.

Each of these additions was approved unanimously by the Committee on energy and Natural Resources and unanimously by the full Senate. Because they are noncontroversial, I expect prompt action by the House of Representatives. S. 2362 as amended would address a range of issues including hospital renovations; the disposition of excess Federal lands, an issue which has been before Congress since 1984; and the authorization of a Territorial Energy Assistance Program, as requested by the island Governors to help them respond to their growing petroleum dependence. Because of the more complex jurisdictional situation in the House, I understand that the Interior Committee has worked closely with other committees to reach agreement on the enactment of these provisions. I am certain that Committee Chairman UDALL, and the chairman of the Insular Affairs Subcommittee, Mr. DE LUGO, share my interest in meeting the diverse needs of the islands which this comprehensive bill would address. I am confident of their ability to persuade their colleagues of the need to move this bill forward.

Mr. DE LUGO, in particular, has worked tirelessly in response to the disaster in the Virgin Islands. I believe that the provisions of S. 2362 will, in time, enhance the ability of the islands to withstand future storms and will thereby save lives and reduce the costs of future recovery efforts.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to support passage of S. 2362 with the committee amendments and the amendments offered by myself and the ranking minority member of the committee, Mr. MCCLURE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3008) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill is deemed to have been read the third time and passed.

So the bill (S. 2362), as amended, was passed; as follows:

S. 2362

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Insular Areas Recovery Act of 1990".

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS.

As used in this Act—

(1) the term "insular areas" means the United States Virgin Islands, American Samoa, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, and the Freely Associated States;

(2) the term "disaster" means that the President has declared a major disaster pursuant to section 401 of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5170 et seq.) on or after September 1, 1989; and

(3) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. AUTHORIZATION.

There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary such sums as may be necessary to construct facilities to protect public health and safety and to enhance the survivability of essential infrastructure in the event of disasters in the insular areas. Such sums shall remain available until expended.

SEC. 4. USE OF CERTAIN FUNDS.

(a) For a period of two years from the date on which a disaster is declared by the President, the Governor of the affected insular area may transfer up to 100 percent of that insular area's respective allotment under section 2604(b) of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Act of 1981 (42 U.S.C. 8623(b)) for the fiscal year in which the disaster occurred, for use in disaster recovery or in enhancing the survivability of essential infrastructure in the event of future disasters. Such funds shall be transferred to a State Energy Conservation Program established pursuant to section 362 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act (42 U.S.C. 6322), and such use of these transferred funds shall be deemed to be consistent with the purposes for which such program was established. The Governor of the insular area shall inform the Secretary of any such transfer of funds. Puerto Rico shall be considered to be an insular area for the purposes of this subsection.

(b) During the two-year period following a disaster in Puerto Rico, it shall be deemed to be an insular area for the purposes of section 501 of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize certain appropriations for the territories of the United States, to amend certain Acts relating thereto, and for other purposes", approved October 18, 1977 (48 U.S.C. 149a), when in the judgment of the appropriate agency head the consolidation of grants would facilitate recovery from disaster damage.

SEC. 5. TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE.

(a) Upon the declaration by the President of a disaster in an insular area, the President shall assess, in cooperation with the Secretary and the Head of Government of such insular area, the capability of the insular area government to respond to the disaster, including the capability to: assess damage; coordinate activities with other agencies, particularly the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA); develop recovery plans, including recommendations for enhancing the survivability of essential infrastructure; negotiate and manage reconstruction contracts; and prevent the misuse of funds. If the President finds that the insular area government lacks these, or other capabilities essential to the recovery effort, then the President shall provide technical assistance to the insular area government which the President deems necessary for the recovery effort.

(b) One year following the declaration by the President of a disaster in an insular area, the Secretary shall report to Congress on the status of the recovery effort, including: an audit of Federal funds expended in the recovery effort; and recommendations on how to improve public health and safety, survivability of infrastructure, recovery efforts, and effective use of funds, in the event of future disasters.

SEC. 6. WAIVERS.

HAZARD MITIGATION.—Upon determination by the President, the total of contributions under section 404 of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 4121 et seq.) for insular areas shall not exceed 10 percent of the estimated aggregate amounts of grants to be made under sections: 403, 406, 407, 408, and 411 of such Act for any disaster: Provided, That the President may require a 50-percent local match for assistance in excess of 10 percent of the estimated aggregate amount of grants to be made under section 406 of such Act for any disaster.

SEC. 7. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.

Section 102(3) of the Robert T. Stafford Disaster Relief and Emergency Assistance Act (42 U.S.C. 5121, et seq.) is amended by inserting after the words "American Samoa," wherever it appears, the following: "Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands".

SEC. 8. GUAM HOSPITAL.

There is authorized to be appropriated $2,500,000 to complete the renovation of the Guam Memorial Hospital.

SEC. 9. DISPOSAL OF EXCESS FEDERAL LANDS ON GUAM.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION.—As a prerequisite for the transfer of excess lands under section 11, the Government of Guam must enact legislation which—

(1) establishes an excess lands commission the purpose of which shall be to dispose of lands received pursuant to this title to promote economic self-sufficiency and private sector development in Guam;

(2) provide that the Commission shall have the power

(A) to hold all right, title, and interest in and to all real property transferred under section 11;

(B) to dispose of real properties or interests therein transferred under section 11 in accordance with the laws of Guam and the priorties set forth in the enabling legislation as required pursuant to paragraph 4 of this subsection;

(C) to resolve conclusively all issues related to lands transferred under section 11 and without appeal to any other agency or court of law except as otherwise expressly provided by the laws of Guam, and

(3) provides that the Commission shall make annual reports to the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives, on or before February 15 of each year, on the disposition of lands transferred pursuant to this title and on the activities and actions of the Commission during the reporting period; and

(4) establishes priorities for the distribution and disposal of the excess lands.

(b) United States Person.—(1) As used in this title, the term "United States person" means—

(A) any citizen, national, or permanent resident alien of the United States,

(B) any partnership, corporation, or other entity organized under the laws of the United States, any of the several States, the District of Columbia, or any Commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States, in which citizens, nationals, or permanent resident aliens of the United States beneficially own or control (directly or indirectly) more than 50 per centum of the outstanding voting securities or other voting interest of the partnership, corporation, or other entity, or

(C) the government of any of the several States, the District of Columbia, or any Commonwealth, territory, or possession of the United States.

(2) A partnership, corporation, or other entity described in paragraph (1)(B) shall be presumed to be controlled by individuals who are citizens, nationals, or permanent resident aliens of the United States if

(A) such individuals are a majority of the partners of the partnership or a majority of the members of the board of directors of the corporation or other entity; or

(B) such individuals have the authority to appoint a majority of the members of the board of directors of the corporation of other entity.

(c) OWNERSHIP OF UNITED STATES PERSONS OF LAND HELD IN TRUST.—For the purposes of this section, the term "ownership of United States persons" means, in the case of a portion of land held in trust, the legal and the beneficial interests of such trust must be held by United States persons.

SEC. 10. TRANSFER OF EXCESS FEDERAL LAND LOCATED ON GUAM.

Except for lands within the boundaries of the War in the Pacific National Historic Park, the Administrator of General Services shall transfer, without consideration and without encumbrances, all right, title and interest of the United States (together with any improvements thereon) in and to any real property on Guam which is determined to be excess under the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 (40 U.S.C. 471 et seq.) to the Commission to be established by the laws of Guam for disposition in accordance with section 10. Any property subject to this title shall not be subject to Public Law 100-77 (101 Stat. 482). Title to any real property conveyed pursuant to this title shall revert to the United States if the Commission attempts to convey or otherwise transfer ownership of such property other than to a United States person.

SEC. 11. REPEAL OF CERTAIN CONDITIONS ON LAND TRANSFERRED TO GUAM.

Section 818(b)(2) of Public Law 96-418 (94 Stat. 1782), as amended, is hereby repealed.

SEC. 12. TERRITORIAL ENERGY ASSISTANCE PROGRAM.

(a)(1) The Secretary of Energy, pursuant to the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Policy Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5901 et seq.), may grant financial assistance to Insular area governments to carry out projects to evaluate the feasibility of, develop options for, and encourage the adoption of energy efficiency and renewable energy measures which reduce the dependency of the Insular area on imported fuels and improve the quality of life in the insular area.

(2) Any applicant for financial assistance under this section must evidence coordination and cooperation with, and support with, the affected local energy entities in the area with necessary expertise to successfully effectuate the project, including, but not limited to, the local energy agencies, power authorities, and public works departments.

(3) In determining the amount of financial assistance to be provided for a proposed energy-efficiency or renewable energy measure, the Secretary shall consider—

(A) whether the measure will reduce the relative dependence of the Insular area on imported fuels;

(B) the ease and costs of operation and maintenance of any facilities contemplated as a part of the project;

(C) whether the project will rely on the use of conservation measures or indigenous, renewable energy resources that were identified in the 1982 Territorial Energy Assessment or are identified by the Secretary as consistent with the purpose of this section;

(D) whether the measure will contribute significantly to the quality of the environment in the Insular area; and

(E) any other factors which the Secretary may determine to be relevant to a particular project or measure.

(4) The Secretary shall require at least 20 per centum of the costs of any project under this section to be provided from non-Federal sources. Such cost sharing may be in the form of in-kind services, donated equipment, or any combination thereof.

(b) For the purpose of this section, the term—

(1) "Insular area government" means the government of American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the Federated States of Micronesia, Guam, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Republic of Palau, or the United States Virgin Islands.

(2) "1982 Territorial Energy Assessment" means the assessment prepared by the Department of Energy pursuant to the Omnibus Territorial Act (P.L. 96-597, 94 Stat. 3480; as amended by P.L. 99-213, 97 Stat. 1460).

(c) For each fiscal year, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this section, $500,000.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill, as amended, was passed.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BILL PLACED ON CALENDAR—S. 3211

Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, on behalf of Senator PACKWOOD, I send a bill to the desk and ask unanimous consent that it be placed on the calender.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MINING AND MINERAL RESOURCES RESEARCH INSTITUTE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calender No. 919, H.R. 4111, a bill to amend the Mining and Mineral Resources Research Institute Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 4111) to amend the Mining and Mineral Resources Research Institute Act of 1984, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, on October 3, 1990, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources unanimously approved H.R. 4111, legislation to establish a Strategic Resources Mineral Technology Center for the purpose of improving and developing technologies to decrease U.S. dependence on strategic and critical minerals.

I would like to clarify the committee's intention with respect to the participation of universities in this new generic center. It is the committee's understanding that the Center will be a consortium, composed of a lead university and several cooperative affiliates.

Mr. McCLURE. I would like to concur with the statement of the subcommittee chairman. It is the view of the committee that more than one university is to participate in the Strategic Resources Mineral Technology Center. The Department of the Interior testified that the degree to which a proposal for the Center brought in other qualified universities would be a factor in deciding who received the final award.

Mr. DOMENICI. It is my understanding also that the Strategic Resources Mineral Technology Center will be established along the same lines as the other generic centers. The 6 existing generic mineral technology centers are comprised of a lead institution and from 4 to 10 affiliates, depending on the center.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 4111) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

CONSENT OF CONGRESS TO AMENDMENTS TO THE HAWAIIAN HOMES COMMISSION ACT

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 685, Senate Joint Resolution 154, regarding the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (S.J. Res. 154) to consent to certain amendments enacted by the legislature of the State of Hawaii to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act of 1920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the objection to the immediate consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, with amendments; as follows:

S.J. RES. 154

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, as required by section 4 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union," approved March 18, 1959 (73 Stat. 4), the United States hereby consents to the following amendments to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, as amended, adopted by the State of Hawaii in the manner required for State legislation: Act 16, [Act 75,] Act 84, Act 85, and Act 249 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1986 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1987.

AMENDMENT NO. 3010

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator AKAKA and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN], for Mr. AKAKA, proposes an amendment numbered 3010.

On page 2, line 4, strike "Act 84".

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. President, I rise in support of the joint resolution.

I introduced the companion bill to these amendments, House Joint Resolution 444, while a Member of the House. As a result of the unique relationship between native Hawaiian people and the United States, any amendments to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act enacted by the Hawaii Legislature must also be approved by Congress.

On June 20, I offered an amendment which deleted act 75 from Senate Joint Resolution 154. At the same time, one additional measure, act 85, was added. I could not support act 75 in its present form because of the potential it created for alienating, or detaching, lands from the homeland trust. After further review with legal counsel, it was found that act 84 also had the potential to cause the alienation of Hawaiian Home Lands. Therefore, the amendment I offer today also withholds congressional consent from act 84 until guarantees are received that no land will be alienated from the homeland trust.

I firmly believe that the Hawaii Legislature had the best of intentions in passing acts 75 and 84. However, as I have stated in the past, if there is reason to believe that alienation of the land could occur, then Congress should withhold consent from such acts. Consent to the remaining four amendments to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act will go forward through this resolution.

Act 16 assists the department by authorizing participation in Federal and State programs which permit the establishment of enterprise zones on Hawaiian Home Lands. Acts 85 and 24 assist DHHL administratively by allowing the department to use its loan accounts receivables as collateral for loans from financial institutions, and to reduce the number of fiscal accounts the department currently has from 15 to 7. In addition, act 36 would allow DHHL to return to an earlier method of calculating amounts due in the event of surrender or cancellation of a lease.

In conclusion, I am confident that these amendments will provide the necessary assistance DHHL and the Hawaii State Legislature need in meeting the concerns and the provisions specified in the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act. I again thank Chairman JOHNSTON and ranking Republican Senator MCCLURE, and the Energy and Natural Resources Committee for their assistance in the passage of this resolution.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to print a letter from Hawaii's attorney general regarding act 84 in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF HAWAII,
DEPARTMENT OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL,
Honolulu, HI, August 29, 1990.

Hon. DANIEL K. AKAKA,
U.S. Senator, Hart Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR AKAKA: This responds to your letter of June 25, 1990, to Mrs. Hoaliku Drake, Chairman of the Hawaiian Homes Commission, Department of Hawaiian Home Lands, requesting certain assurances from her. We understand from your letter that the Senate Committee on Energy and Natural Resources wants assurance that the phrase "proportionate value" contained in section 220.5(d), of the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, enacted by Act 84, Session Laws of Hawaii of 1986, would only include the "depreciated value" of the permanent improvements at the time the underlying land is withdrawn from a project developer agreement.

Section 220.5(d) provides as follows:

(d) Any project developer agreement entered into pursuant to this section may provide for options for renewal of the term of the project development agreement; provided that the term of any one project developer agreement shall not exceed sixty-five years; and provided further that any lands disposed of under a project developer agreement shall be subject to withdrawal at any time during the term of the agreement, with reasonable notice; and provided that the rental shall be reduced in proportion to the value of the portion withdrawn and the developer shall be entitled to receive from the department the proportionate value of the developer's permanent improvements so taken in the proportion that they bear to the unexpired term of the agreement, or the developer, in the alternative, may remove and relocate the developer's improvements to the remainder of the lands occupied by the developer.

As we understand your inquiry, it seeks a determination as to whether the valuation of the developer's permanent improvements built on lands withdrawn from a project developer agreement are limited to the depreciated value of the improvements.

Based on our review of section 220.5, its legislative history, and related statutory provisions, we are of the opinion that the term "value" refers to the appraised fair market value of the land, the improvements, or both land and improvements, as of the date of withdrawal. We think the word "proportionate" in the phrase "proportionate value" was to make clear the value of the improvements must be apportioned among the parties based on their respective interests in the unexpired term of the agreement and was not intended to modify "value" to mean its "depreciated value."

Further, we think that if the legislature intended to limit valuation of the improvements to its depreciated value, it would have said so.

Finally, though we have concluded that valuation of improvements under section 220.5(d) is not limited to its "depreciated value," an appraiser may conclude under the particular circumstances of an appraisal assignment that the depreciated value is its fair market value.

As requested, transmitted herewith is the legislative history material relating to Act 84.

If we may be of further assistance, please do not hestitate to let us know.

WARREN PRICE, III,
Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 3010) was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendments, as amended.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 154) was passed, as follows:

S.J. RES. 154

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, as required by section 4 of the Act entitled "An Act to provide for the admission of the State of Hawaii into the Union", approved March 18, 1959 (73 Stat. 4), the United States hereby consents to the following amendments to the Hawaiian Homes Commission Act, 1920, as amended, adopted by the State of Hawaii in the manner required for State legislation: Act 16, Act 85, and Act 249 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1986; and Act 36 of the Session Laws of Hawaii, 1987.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the joint resolution, as amended, was passed.

Mr. WILSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDERS FOR TOMORROW

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, on behalf of the majority leader, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate recesses today, it stand in recess until 9 a.m. Wednesday, October 17; that following the prayer, the Journal of proceedings be deemed approved to date; that following the time reserved for the two leaders, there be a period for morning business not to extend beyond 9:30 a.m. with Senators permitted to speak therein for up to 5 minutes each, and that Senator HOLLINGS be recognized in morning business for up to 10 minutes; that at 9:30 a.m. the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 3209, the reconciliation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 9:30 A.M. TOMORROW

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, if there is no further business to come before the Senate today, I now ask unanimous consent the Senate stand in recess under the previous order until 9 a.m. Wednesday, October 17.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 10:01 p.m., recessed until Wednesday, October 17, 1990, at 9 a.m.

NOMINATIONS

Executive nominations received by the Senate October 16, 1990:

SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM

ROBERT WILLIAM GAMBINO, OF VIRGINIA, TO BE DIRECTOR OF SELECTIVE SERVICE, VICE SAMUEL K. LESSEY, JR., RESIGNED.

IN THE AIR FORCE

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—October 16, 1990

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. MURTHA].

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
October 16, 1990.

I hereby designate the Honorable JOHN MURTHA to act as Speaker pro tempore today.

THOMAS S. FOLEY,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Gracious God, give us a sense of the meaning of time and our own personal responsibility to do the good work of justice on the day You have given to us. We know that for those who believe in Your Word that this day represents the time available to us to seek justice, to love mercy, and a time to walk humbly with You. We earnestly pray, O God, that we will receive strength of purpose to do those good deeds that honor You and serve people everywhere. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 1, rule I, I demand a vote on agreeing to the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the Chair's approval of the Journal.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 245, nays 110, answered "present" 3, not voting 75, as follows:

So the Journal was approved.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. McNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably detained and missed the vote on rollcall 468, to approve the Journal.

Had I been present, I would have voted in the affirmative.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY] will please come forward and lead the House in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. VISCLOSKY led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRIES

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to clause 6 of rule XXIV, today is the day for the call of the Private Calendar. Is the Private Calendar not going to be called today?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will notify the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. SENSENBRENNER] that the Chair has complete discretion on the third Tuesday whether to call the Private Calendar.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr. Speaker, I have a further parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SENSENBRENNER. Mr Speaker, is the Chair aware that, should we adjourn between now and November 6, this is the last day for the call of the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will take five 1-minute speeches on each side.

SOME THINGS NEVER CHANGE

(Mr. VISCLOSKY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. VISCLOSKY. Mr. Speaker, some things never change.

Here we are, with 4 days left. The President leaves town, and the Republican Party lets down the American people. In terms of the alternative that we are to consider today, they fall $100 billion short.

Assuming that we act responsibly today in the House, and pass the Democratic alternative, and reduce this year's deficit by $40 billion, this year's deficit will still be $254 billion.

Mr. Speaker, this is not the time to fall short. People's median incomes are falling. The income of those under the age of 35 is falling.

I am proud that the Democrats recognize that the first approach has to be to reduce spending, and more than 50 percent of the Democratic package is represented by reductions on the expenditure side. Second, the principle must be to tax fairly, and, finally, have real reductions in the deficit this year.

(Mr. BALLENGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

[Mr. BALLENGER addressed the House. His remarks will appear hereafter in the Extensions of Remarks.]

COME BACK TO TOWN, MR. PRESIDENT

(Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, today we will hear another verse of the same old song. Once again the country faces a budget crisis, and once again the President's jet leaves Andrews Air Force Base for yet another campaign swing across America.

Still the wealthy are not paying their fair share of the taxes, and still the President insists he wants to give the wealthy another tax cut.

Again the President says, "We need the cuts in Medicare spending," and again the President says, "Let's forgive the $7 billion debt Egypt owes America." The President says, "We can't afford a decent farm program," but he says, "Let's continue to pay the defense bill for Japan and Western Europe."

Is it surprising that the American people wonder whatever happened to common sense?

Mr. Speaker, I say to the President, "Come back to town, Mr. President. Let's put together some policies that work, some policies that are fair, some policies that put America first again—for a change."

SHUTTING DOWN THE GOVERNMENT TO GET A TAX CUT FOR THE RICH

(Mr. SMITH of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the President threatened to shut down the Federal Government this Friday. The President threatened to close the Washington Monument. The President threatened to deprive the American people of vital services they depend upon, vital services they paid for with their labor and with their taxes.

Mr. Speaker, today the American people want to know why the President wants to shut down the Government. Here are the answers:

If he cannot get a tax cut for the rich, or prevent the Congress from getting a fair share of taxes from the rich, he is going to shut the Government down. That is right, shut the Government down.

If he cannot get deep cuts in Medicare, or prevent us from softening the impact on the aged and infirm, he is going to shut the Government down.

Mr. Speaker, I say to the President, "Mr. President, you want taxation without representation. You want to give the wealthy a big tax cut. Mr. President, you want to balance the budget on the backs of the middle class and the elderly, and that's not fair."

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Members will be reminded that they should always address the Chair.

THIS IS NOT A DEMOCRACY

(Mr. DOUGLAS asked and was given permission to address the House and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. Speaker, I say to my colleagues, "If they want to raise your taxes, you can bet it's Democrats."

The Democratic package has a $148 billion tax increase. They are going to double the beer tax. They are going to double the gasoline tax. They are going to go up 2 cents on refined oil, and we have a no-tax alternative.

But because this is not a democracy, we will not be able to vote on our no-tax alternative. They want a tax train to leave the station today. They want that $148 billion tax increase. They do not want our zero-based budgeting. They do not want our package that calls for a balanced budget amendment because the Democrats are the party of taxes.

Mr. Speaker, the line is clearly drawn, and the American people should know. The Republican alternative has been denied to us, something that in democracies around the world would be unthinkable. One of the two major parties is unable to get a vote on its budget package, and that is because the Democrats do not want their tax train derailed, but the American people will derail it in November.

AN ODE TO THE DEMOCRATS

(Mrs. BOXER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, sometimes a sense of humor helps get us through difficult times. In that spirit, I offer the following:

The President called a summit
And sent in the fearsome three,
Richard Darman, Sununu, and Nicholas Brady.
They had a clear and constant goal.
They did it very well.
To protect the very wealthiest
And hope their plan would sell—
But, alas, alack
They faltered on their way to fat cat heaven.
When Democrats found the rich paid 1 percent
And the poor? A mighty seven!
So, America be glad today
The Democrats are here
We're fighting for the middle class
Though we might tax your beer.
But Democrats are working
For budgets that are fair
So the Hemsleys and the Donald Trumps
At last, will pay their share!

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The Chair would advise the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SMITH] that if he wants to utilize a display, he may, but the sticker should be removed from the podium. The gentleman did not put it up there. If he wishes to hold it, the House could permit that.

A BUDGET SOLUTION

(Mr. SMITH of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, there is a way to lighten the burden of the budget. We can cut Government overhead such as travel, supplies, and printing.

For good or bad, there is already wide agreement—Democrat, Republican, House, Senate—on these common elements: defense cuts, entitlement adjustments, user fees, and debt interest savings.

If we add a 1-year, 10-percent cut in Government overhead, which now accounts for one-fifth of the Federal budget, we can get to the goal of $500 billion in deficit reduction in 5 years.

And we can reach that goal with no new taxes and without other cuts in people, programs, or benefits.

Here is how it would work.

Expected Revenue

[In billions of dollars]

Defense cuts	140
Entitlement adjustments	100
User fees	50
Debt interest savings	70
Overhead cuts	140
Total	500

Let us cast aside narrow partisanship and embrace a new idea: Cut overhead to reduce the deficit.

AMERICA SHOULD GIVE "AMERICA" MOST-FAVORED-NATION STATUS

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, China is one of the most oppressive governments in the world, but today Congress wants to bestow the most-favored-nation trade status on China.

America is going bankrupt, but experts say that China is a big new market. Yeah, I have heard that song and dance. Big new market, my eye.

Mr. Speaker, here is what we've got, another revolving door. Chinese imports in, American jobs overseas.

America is going bankrupt, and Congress should be debating most-favored-nation status today for the United States of America. If we don't, remember this: if the Chinese will shoot down their own students, what do you think they will do to the American workers?

Mr. Speaker, I say no on most-favored-nation trade status to China.

SUCCESSFUL GATT TALKS WOULD BE BENEFICIAL TO AMERICA

(Mr. REGULA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, as we debate the budget today, one of the key elements we have to consider is growth in the economy to provide jobs for Americans in the future. With that in mind, I would like to quote from the Wall Street Journal:

World leaders have been wringing their hands lately over the U.S. fiscal chaos and soaring oil prices. But the leaders would do well to pay more attention to the troubled trade negotiation taking place in Switzerland. Those talks may hold the key to the future of the global economy.

The stakes are huge. Even a moderately successful conclusion to the talks, being held under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, would spark a $100 billion-a-year expansion in world trade, according to Gary Hufbauer of the Institute for International Economics, a Washington think-tank. And trade representative Carla Hills says the U.S. could enjoy a $200 billion increase in exports to developing countries over the next decade.

The GATT talks are going to conclude in the next several weeks. I think it is vitally important that Members of this body should be very much aware of what is happening, and be in contact with the U.S. negotiators at the GATT negotiations. Urging strong positions to protect U.S. dumping codes and countervailing duty authority. Failure to do so will threaten American jobs and economic growth.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, do I understand that the rules of the day and the ruling of the Chair is that I, a duly elected Congressman from the State of Alabama who has a message that I want to deliver to this House that will impact every businessman in America, giving indication——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry. Does the gentleman have a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary inquiry is, is it the ruling of the Chair that I am going to be denied the opportunity to even request——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The ruling of the Chair is that the Chair is trying to be fair and get to the business of the House. Both sides have been restricted to five 1-minute statements each.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Then it is a ruling of the Chair that I cannot tell the people about this horrible provision in there about OSHA?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is ample debate time on the rule and bill, and after the business of the day, the 1-minutes will be recognized as usual.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 647, DISAPPROVING EXTENSION OF MOST-FAVORED-NATION TREATMENT TO PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 485 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 485

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 647) disapproving the recommendation of the President to extend nondiscriminatory treatment (most-favored-nation) to the products of the People's Republic of China, and the first reading of the joint resolution shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the joint resolution are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the joint resolution and which shall not exceed one hour, with thirty minutes to be controlled by Representative Rostenkowski of Illinois and with thirty minutes to be controlled by Representative Solomon of New York, the joint resolution shall be considered as having been read for amendment under the five-minute rule. Pursuant to section 152(d) of the Trade Act of 1974, no amendment to the joint resolution shall be in order, and the Committee shall rise and report the joint resolution to the House and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the joint resolution to final passage without intervening motion.

SEC. 2. The provisions of sections 152 and 153 of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended, shall not apply to other joint resolutions disapproving the recommendation of the President to extend nondiscriminatory treatment to the products of the People's Republic of China for the duration of the One Hundred First Congress.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 485 is a closed rule providing for the consideration of House Joint Resolution 647, disapproving the recommendation of the President to extend nondiscriminatory treatment, most-favored-nation treatment, to the products of the People's Republic of China. The rule provides 1 hour of general debate to be controlled by Representative ROSTENKOWSKI of Illinois and Representative SOLOMON of New York.

All points of order against consideration of the resolution are waived. The rule provides that pursuant to the Trade Act of 1974, no amendment to the joint resolution shall be in order, nor shall it be in order to offer a motion to recommit.

The rule also provides that sections 152 and 153 of the Trade Act of 1974, as amended, shall not apply to other joint resolutions disapproving the recommendation of the President to extend nondiscriminatory treatment to the products of the People's Republic of China for the duration of the 101st Congress.

The Trade Act of 1974 included expedited procedures for resolutions of congressional disapproval. Those provisions were recently amended in the Customs and Trade Act of 1990, Public Law 101-382, enacted August 20, 1990. Because the Presidential waiver extending MFN status for China was made during the process of changing the method for disapproval, the act included a transition rule establishing special procedures that apply to disapproval of this one waiver.

Unless the House adopts the recommendation of the Rules Committee, the procedures in place could permit recognition of a member to offer a motion to proceed to consider House Joint Resolution 647 which would be highly privileged, unamendable, and not debatable. Upon agreement to such a motion to proceed to debate, we could be debating the resolution disapproving the President's recommendation for up to 20 hours.

Agreement on proceeding to consideration of a resolution of disapproval has not yet been reached, but the need to adopt this rule to preserve orderly consideration of this issue is clear.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order consideration of House Joint Resolution 647, which I introduced along with the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCHULZE], the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROSE], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY]. If enacted, House Joint Resolution 647 would serve to revoke the most-favored-nation trade status that is presently awarded to China, at least through next June.

□ 1050

Most-favored-nation status for China is the single most important factor that has contributed to a trade surplus in China's favor that is running at $6 billion a year; and the time has come, Mr. Speaker, to ask why. Why is China getting this kind of trade and tariff treatment? That, incidentally, threatens the entire domestic textile industry in America, and Members on both sides of the aisle should think about that.

The passage of the Jackson-Vanik amendment to the Trade Act of 1974 established a direct linkage between a country's human rights record and the normalization of trade relations between that country and the United States.

Mr. Speaker, during the actual debate on this joint resolution I will have much more to say about the human rights record of the so-called People's Republic of China, the Tiananmen Square incident, and about the terrible human rights treatment of a billion Chinese people, not to mention people in Tibet. Suffice it to say right now that I believe the human rights record in China justifies the immediate termination of most-favored-nation status for that country; and under the terms of existing law most-favored-nation status for China would, in fact, be terminated 60 days after enactment of this joint resolution.

But Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by returning to a brief discussion of the rule itself. This is a rule that provides for 1 hour of debate on the joint resolution. The Ways and Means Committee report reported this joint resolution without recommendation because the price of keeping it bottled up in committee would have been 20 hours of debate here on this floor, 20 hours. I or some other Member could have given 2 days' notice at any time after October 6 and the joint resolution would have been brought to the floor as a matter of high privilege.

Frankly, 20 hours of debate is not necessary. The most-favored-nation question is a straightforward issue that I believe all Members on both sides of the aisle understand. And so I urge support of the rule, even though it is not my standard practice to support closed rules.

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, one of the cosponsors of this resolution.

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I would just like to congratulate the gentleman from New York on his work on this issue. He has been tireless, and his dedication has been unmatched, unparalleled.

I would like to urge our colleagues to pay close attention to the debate. There will be a fair amount of obfuscation involved with this debate. But our law is relatively simple, and relatively clear on when we should extend most-favored-nation status.

I would hope that all Members will pay attention to the debate, understand where we are going, understand what Jackson-Vanik means in the law, and then make a decision based on the facts as to whether it should be extended.

I agree with the gentleman from New York that the only way we can send a clear, strong message to those in power in China is the complete elimination of most-favored-nation status, and the elimination right now. We will get into this in more detail in the debate, but I would urge my colleagues to pay very close attention to the discussions.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania for his remarks and for being so active on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I support the rule.

The President wants to give nondiscriminatory treatment of most-favored-nation trade status to China. He also wants to forgive a $7 billion loan to Egypt.

I want to remind Members of this House that the Chinese Government did not even provide nondiscriminatory status for their own students in their own country trying to seek some freedom and democracy. We are supposedly the bastion for rights and freedom and democracy, but then we come around and we show our policies exactly where our priorities are, right in the pocketbook. We are going to extend the pocketbook.

Again, some Member said obfuscation. I say, we are not sending a message today to China, we are starting a process that will send jobs and cash to China before it is all over. Let me remind these Members that American corporations some day will move to China, and they will be able to hire workers at 17 cents an hour, and their government will come in and put a gun right to their head and say, "You do that job, buster."

I am against this type of policy. This type of policy time and again has risen up to destroy the American workplace. We are in the midst of bankruptcy.

I believe we should vote for this rule. We should debate this issue. But if Congress passes this legislation today, then so help me God, we need a brain surgeon. There is something wrong.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, before yielding to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota, I would just like to call to the attention of the gentleman from Ohio, who just spoke, that if he wants to do what he said on the floor, we need a yes vote to disapprove, not a no vote against the legislation. I want Members to understand that, and I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he might consume to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I do not concur with the gentleman from New York as to the recommended vote on the resolution of approval. But I do agree with his description of the rule and the idea that at this time, we do not need to do a lot of debating this concept. I think everyone understands the proposition.

I hope that by the time we are done discussing it that at least some of the Members of the House will understand that there are a number of reasons to extend MFN to China. But, that will come in the debate on the resolution, not on this particular rule.

This rule should be adopted promptly.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to make it clear exactly what this rule does.

What it does, Mr. Speaker, is reduce the amount of time for consideration of most-favored-nation status for China from 20 hours to 1 hour. Whether Members are for or against the extension of the nondiscriminatory treatment, I think it is clear we can ill afford to spend 20 hours on this resolution in hopefully what are the last few days of this session.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 2961. an act for the relief of Sonanong Poonpipat (Latch);

H.R. 5144. An act to provide for the study of certain historical and cultural resources located in the city of Vancouver, Washington, and for other purposes; and H.R. 5579. An act to amend section 28(w) of the Mineral Leasing Act, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 3789. An act to amend the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act to extend programs providing urgently needed assistance for the homeless, and for other purposes;

H.R. 4638. An act to revise the orphan drug provisions of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and the Orphan Drug Act, and for other purposes; and

H.R. 5803. An act making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 3789) "An Act to amend the Stewart B. McKinney Homeless Assistance Act to extend programs providing urgently needed assistance for the homeless, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints from the Committee on Labor and Human Resources for matters within their jurisdiction: Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. DODD, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. HATCH, and Mr. DURENBERGER; from the Committee on Governmental Affairs for matters within their jurisdiction: Mr. GLENN, Mr. KOHL, Mr. LIEBERMAN, Mr. ROTH, and Mr. STEVENS; to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 5803) "An Act making appropriations for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. INOUYE, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. JOHNSTON, Mr. BYRD, Mr. LEAHY, Mr. SASSER, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. BUMPERS, Mr. LAUTENBERG, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. GARN, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. KASTEN, Mr. D'AMATO, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. SPECTER, and Mr. HATFIELD, to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 615. An act providing for a 14-year extension of the patent for the badge of the American Legion;

S. 616. An act providing for a 14-year extension of the patent for the badge of the American Legion Auxiliary;

S. 617. An act providing for a 14-year extension of the patent for the badge of the Sons of the American Legion;

S. 1831. An act to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to convey certain lands to the town of Taos, NM;

S. 2165. An act to expand the boundaries of the Pecos National Historical Park;

S. 2527. An act to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct a study to determine the need for a National Forest Information Center and an expanded environmental education program in New Mexico;

S. 2684. An act to authorize a study of methods to protect and interpret the nationally significant fossil trackways found in the Robledo Mountains near Las Cruses, NM;

S. 2756. An act to encourage national law enforcement cooperation; and

S. 2802. An act to authorize the establishment of the Fort Totten National Historic Site.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5422, INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1991

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 487 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 487

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5422) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1991 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Intelligence Community Staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and which shall not exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule, by titles instead of sections and each title shall be considered as having been read. The amendments recommended by the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and the Committee on Armed Services now printed in the bill shall be considered as having been adopted and shall become original text for the purpose of further amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

□ 1100

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WHEAT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. WHEAT. Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 487 is an open rule providing for 1 hour of general debate. It waives all points of order against consideration of the bill.

The rule provides that the bill will be considered for amendment by titles instead of by sections, with each title considered as read.

It also provides that the Intelligence Committee and Armed Services Committee amendments now printed in the bill will be considered as having been adopted and will become original text.

Finally, the rule provides one motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, although there may be controversial issues on the intelligence bill itself, I know of no controversy in regard to the rule. It is an open rule and Members will be able to offer whatever amendments they wish—so long as they are germane.

I urge my colleagues to support House Resolution 487.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule, and I ask the Members to support it. As the gentleman from Michigan has indicated, this is an open rule. All germane amendments are in order for consideration under the 5-minute rule, and the rights of the minority are protected.

Mr. Speaker, the intelligence authorization bill is concerned with the very security and survival of this country of ours. I always hope that Members will keep this in mind when a bill of this type is being debated; this is not a small academic exercise we are going through here today. The future of our country, and the lives of many Americans today are at stake, based on what happens with this reauthorization bill.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the future of our country's role in the world is at stake. An amendment will be offered later today which, if enacted, would reduce the United States to the moral and geopolitical equivalent of San Marino and Monaco. They may be nice places to visit, and they may print beautiful postage stamps, but they do not have global responsibilities like we as world leaders do. America does have such responsibility. And if the proposed Boxer amendment is ever enacted, we can forget about ever having to fulfill an international responsibility again.

The Boxer amendment would place three crippling restrictions on the President's authority to act as Commander in Chief. With 200,000 troops in Saudi Arabia, with a man called Saddam Hussein threatening terrorism throughout the entire world against American citizens and others, we need to have the ready capability for covert activities and intelligence operations. Mr. Speaker, the Boxer amendment that will come up later today when the debate starts, will require the President to obtain prior approval by the two Select Committees on Intelligence for any and all covert activities. It would further require the President to provide the committees with 24 hours' notice whenever he is contemplating a covert activity or military action which has not been subject to prior approval. It would require termination of any such activity or action within 48 hours if the committees have not given their written approval.

Mr. Speaker, that is ridiculous. In case Members have not read their "Dear Colleague" letters which are in their offices right now, we have statements from the American Legion in opposition to the Boxer amendment. We have similar statements from the Reserve Officers Association, the Fleet Reserve Association, the Association of Former Intelligence Officers, Non-Commissioned Officers Association, Amvets, Retired Officers Association, Veterans of Foreign Wars, and every other veterans organization in America. This would be a debilitating amendment if it were attached to this piece of legislation, and it should be defeated.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5422—the Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1991—authorizes funds for all intelligence programs authorized by the bill are contained in a classified annex of the report.

The Intelligence Committee has indicated, however, that the overall level of funding is lower than requested by the President.

Our Nation's intelligence capability must remain the best in the world.

However, given the changes witnessed by the world in the last year, the move toward democracy, and the end of the cold war—it is appropriate that we begin to reduce our intelligence budget in the same way that we have cut back our defense spending.

In the past, too much of our Nation's foreign policy has been conducted in secret. I welcome the full debate we will have today on this bill.

I particularly want to express my support for amendments that will be offered to end or restrict covert assistance to the rebels fighting the Angolan Government.

Press reports indicate that the United States has been providing up to $50 million per year to UNITA since 1986.

Yet our policy has failed—bringing neither an end to the war or democracy to Angola.

And, as always, it is the innocent civilians who are paying the price. The United Nations estimates that between 1980 and 1988, war deaths totaled a half million people in Angola—nearly 5 percent of the population. Beginning this month, up to 2 million more risk starvation unless a cease-fire can be negotiated.

Most of these deaths are children under the age of 5—who succumb to starvation, disease, and lack of health services. Because of the war, a child is dying every 5 minutes in Angola.

The time has come to stop funding for this war. Rebel leader Savimbi's revanchist policies must end.

Under the timetable agreed to in the 1988 Angola-Namibia accord, up to two-thirds of the Cuban troops stationed in Angola have left, with the remainder to be gone by July 1991.

The cold war has ended, and the Soviet Union is removing its support for regional conflicts throughout the world.

Meanwhile, the United States has urgent needs here at home that must be addressed.

Our policy in Angola is outdated, it is expensive, and it is costing lives. It is long past time for us to end the war and to achieve a cease-fire.

I want to acknowledge the leadership that Mr. DELLUMS and Mr. WOLPE have contributed to this effort, and signal my strong support.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume just to go back to the Boxer amendment for a few minutes.

If the Boxer amendment were in place right now, in law, as the sponsor would try to do here this afternoon, the Boxer amendment would effectively terminate all of our policies in the Persian Gulf. It would also place our President in the completely untenable position of having to broadcast U.S. strategies and plans to any and all adversaries, worldwide.

Right now, we all know that in Iraq, Saddam Hussein is a very unpopular individual in his own country.

There are movements over there calling for a revolution within his own country. If the United States were in any way to be a part of that revolution, which would remove that man from power who threatens the freedom of the entire world and certainly the lives of our 200,000 troops over there, and if our activity was to be exposed, that would be a disaster. I hope that we are going to defeat the amendment when it does come up.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I propound this parliamentary inquiry because there seems to be some confusion about the rest of the calendar here today. I do not want to ask for a vote on this, but I need to ask if we are going on to the authorization of the intelligence bill right away or whether we intend to take up the rule on reconciliation, because we need to gather some Members over here for that purpose.

Could the Chair enlighten us at all on what is going to happen if I yield back my time and there is no vote here?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is awaiting instructions from the Speaker on what will happen next.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I will try to answer. I do not know that I can answer my friend, the gentleman from New York. I do not think a decision has been made yet whether to continue with the bill or to go to the rule on reconciliation. I cannot give the gentleman assurances either way on that at this point.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, this is my third year on the Intelligence Committee, and one of the things you learn about being a member of this committee is that you cannot talk about it, so my remarks will be guarded. They will be brief.

Mr. Speaker, first I think the success of the committee this year is due to a very good chemistry between the chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE]. It is a good, positive working relationship that I think enhanced the ability of the committee to tackle some very difficult issues.

As the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] mentioned, it is not a rubberstamp budget. The Intelligence Committee has carefully scrutinized the program that our intelligence agencies have put forth.

First of all, most think that intelligence issues relate only to covert action and the CIA. There are many other ingredients that are part of this effort that, obviously, are national security oriented, cannot be openly discussed, but I think again the Intelligence Committee has done a good job of scrutinizing these programs.

I also agree that the intelligence budget should not be free of the Budget Act. Everybody should take hits. It has to be, however, dependent on our national security. As we move away from the cold war, we will also nonetheless be faced with new challenges that might not necessarily mean a less national security orientation for our intelligence community.

The decade of the nineties is going to be remembered as one of tumultuous change around the world, one which ushers in an era of new global relations, and the issues are not necessarily going to be the old cold war European issues, but they are going to be instability in the Third World, nuclear proliferation, international terrorism, illicit drug trafficking, economic competition, and environmental issues, all emerging threats to U.S. security that have exploded in importance overnight.

Indeed, the current crisis in the Persian Gulf demonstrates the impact of these nontraditional issues on American national security policy, and by extension, on the focus and direction for U.S. intelligence in the future.

Mr. Speaker, I will be offering an amendment on Cambodia that makes the program overt. I believe it has been worked out with cooperation on all sides. The amendment is intended to provide a clear expression of congressional approval for the adoption of a consistent approach by the United States in its support for the non-Communist resistance in Cambodia.

It has the further effect of establishing a mechanism within this bill by which the United States will be able to assist in the implementation of a negotiated settlement for Cambodia as soon as the four factions have concluded an agreement.

I believe U.S. policy should seek to advance the Cambodian peace process which is at a critical juncture and a negotiated solution to the civil war in Cambodia will best guarantee the ability of that country to freely determine its own destiny. That result which is the best insurance possible against the return to power of the Khmer Rouge appears to be closer at hand than at any time in memory.

I believe that this amendment creates a framework which encourages both the conclusion of a peace agreement and a smooth transition to the challenging day such an agreement will herald.

Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill. There are a lot of issues that are going to be discussed today. I will be supporting the Solarz amendment on UNITA and Angola. I have been out there. I think it is a moderate amendment that can make a big difference. It is an amendment that is basically an incentive to peace.

The decade of the 1990's will be remembered as one of tumultuous change throughout the world—one which ushered in a new era in global relations. Instability in the Third World, nuclear proliferation, international terrorism, illicit drug trafficking, economic competition, and environmental issues are all emerging threats to American security that have exploded in importance overnight. Indeed, the current crisis in the Persian Gulf demonstrates the impact of these nontraditional issues on U.S. national security policy, and, by extension, on the focus and direction of U.S. intelligence for the 1990's and beyond. A ruthless Saddam Hussein, capable of annexing oil-rich Kuwait and confiscating Saudi oil fields, deploying chemical weapons against United States forces, and launching weapons of mass destruction, poses as much, if not more, danger to United States national security and the American way of life than Nikita Khrushchev, Leonid Brezhnev, or Yuriy Andropov ever did.

Yet, there are those—including some in the Bush administration—who still cling to defending an intelligence infrastructure that supports warfighting in Europe and similar vestiges of the cold war. For the past 40 years, United States intelligence has focused primarily on countering the Soviet military threat. While we must continue to be vigilant in monitoring and verifying compliance with arms control treaties, we should spend less effort on counting tanks and observing field exercises and more on identifying and assessing changes in the Soviet economy—and, for that matter, all of our economic competitors. We need early warning on countries where debt is increasing significantly, and we need to understand the economic performance of our competitors equally as well as we understood how the Soviets would have executed their war plan against us in Central Europe. If one believes that the present Middle East crisis is a battle about oil, it is likely that future battles will be waged over critical economic resources rather than ideology.

Similarly, U.S. intelligence must place greater emphasis on understanding the societal factors—tribal, ethnic, and religious—that contribute to instability in the Third World. For example, I have been a supporter of the Mujahedin in their efforts to drive the Soviets out of Afghanistan, but I am concerned that we may not fully comprehend the cultural factors that both bind and divide them. Societal issues are often among the most difficult to understand, yet they are critical in assessing the implications of reform in the Soviet Union and the protracted war in Afghanistan. Much of this information need not be acquired clandestinely. It is outwardly visible.

Countering the scourge of illicit drugs and international terrorism have become increasingly high priorities, and rightfully so. Unfortunately, counternarcotics has also become a convenient buzz word for garnering scarce resources. Fighting the war on drugs successfully demands careful scrutiny of requests for expensive technical collection systems that may not be cost effective in the long run, and assurances that intelligence sources and methods are not jeopardized by those who are more interested in capturing headlines than drug dealers. While there can be no guarantee that we will not have another airliner hijacked or cruise ship seized by international terrorists, I can assure the American public that there are more terrorist plots foiled due to the diligent work of U.S. intelligence than they will ever read about in their morning newspaper.

In my view, U.S. intelligence must make some radical shifts in the way it has done business for over four decades. For example, the intelligence community has been criticized for its overreliance on overhead collection systems at the expense of other, more traditional sources. Now is the time to reevaluate our intelligence collection, analysis, and dissemination capabilities to be certain that we have the proper mix to meet future challenges. Some have argued naively that despite the Saddam Hussein's of the world, threats to American security have decreased to the point that the CIA should be dismantled, its resources severely reduced, and its concept of operations changed. They allege that CIA is immune to scrutiny of its operations or accountability of its funds. They paint a picture of an intelligence service that lacks focus for the future, and assail its failure to predict the end of the cold war and the quality of its analysis on a variety of policy issues.

While some of these criticisms are valid, we must ensure that U.S. intelligence remains strong and unfettered by political or analytic bias. And, that it has the resources to fulfill critical requirements so that policymakers have the kind of information needed to protect our vital national security. On the other hand, we can no longer tolerate a budget driven by cold war requirements. I, for one, believe that those of us in the Congress who oversee intelligence cannot simply acquiesce to requests for additional funds. Clearly, in the constrained resource environment that lies ahead, neither the CIA nor the other elements of the intelligence community can escape the budget ax. This does not necessarily mean, however, that reductions in intelligence can or should parallel those in the overall defense budget. Similarly, we should not assume that any so-called peace dividend that may accrue in response to recent events in Eastern Europe and the warming of United States-Soviet relations will translate automatically into a savings in investment in intelligence.

As we move through this period of transition, three key ingredients will be essential to ensuring a strong, independent intelligence service—new thinking by the intelligence community, clear policy direction from the President, and vigorous, yet judicious, oversight by the Congress. Now, as never before, CIA and other intelligence agencies must resist political pressure to tell policymakers what they want to hear. And, analysts throughout the intelligence community must be prepared to rehone their skills to address the far more global issues that will dominate U.S. foreign policy well into the 21st century.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HALL], a member of the committee.

Mr. HALL of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the time the gentleman has yielded to me.

I am not here really to speak on the rule itself, but on a specific part of the bill that probably will come up during debate, that part has to do with the country of Angola.

Mr. Speaker, U.S. aid to UNITA has been an issue in the Congress for more than a decade. It is an issue that many of my colleagues feel very strongly about. Members have a lot to say about it.

We talk about whether we ought to support Jonas Savimbi, how much aid we ought to give him, and for how long. We talk about how many Cuban troops are fighting for the Angolan Government, whether they are pulling out, how fast they are pulling out. Now everyone is starting to talk about the possibility of a cease-fire.

I want us to begin thinking about something else whenever this House's attention turns to Angola. As the chairman of the Hunger Committee, I want to remind my colleagues of something we haven't talked too much about yet—hunger. There is a terrible hunger problem in Angola. More than 1½ million people are suffering right now. I want my colleagues to know that.

Last month this House passed a resolution that I introduced with a bipartisan group of Members. The resolution called on both sides in Angola's civil war to put humanitarian concerns above military goals to end hunger among the Angolan people. The resolution passed unanimously with the support of Members who normally oppose each other on Angola.

The resolution we passed said, "famine conditions throughout Angola will become especially severe unless food and other famine relief assistance are delivered." The resolution called on both UNITA and the Angolan Government to "work toward an ending of hostilities and conclude the ongoing negotiations aimed at bringing to an end the civil war and establishing a lasting peace in Angola."

We are very proud of this resolution, Mr. Speaker, because it showed that people who disagree on different issues can come together to fight hunger. There's a constituency against hunger in this House.

I have met with both sides on this issue—not to talk about the war, but to talk about the famine. I have met with the Angolan Ambassador to the United Nations, Ambassador Pacavira, and I met the other day with Dr. Savimbi. I told both of them that the Hunger Committee doesn't take sides. If we take sides, we lose our credibility to talk about hunger. I told both of them that what we care about is getting food to the hungry people.

And this process is beginning to work. With a lot of good work by the Agency for International Development's Office of Foreign Disaster Assistance and its Director, Andrew Natsios, the United Nations, the International Red Cross, and others, food is already getting to people in need. That is an accomplishment we should all be proud of.

I am going to vote for the Solarz and Dellums-Dymally-Hamilton amendments. It is my personal view that it is time we change our policy in Angola to one focused on bringing about a just peace.

But I want all of my colleagues to remember when we vote on this issue that there is more in Angola than civil war. There are 1½ million people in need, many of them children. They do not have guns. They do not have bombs, but because the countryside is full of land mines, many of them do not have arms or legs. These children are hungry and they are facing famine.

Is what we are doing here today, and I say this to both sides of this debate, going to help feed those children?

What we do today will have a lot to do with the fate of people and children in Angola, and if we are going to choose sides, Mr. Speaker, let us choose the side of the innocent victims.

□ 1120

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCEWEN].

Mr. MCEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, during the consideration of the Intelligence Authorization Act this year there are going to be several amendments, one of which has been referred to as cutting off aid to the democratic forces in Angola. As you know, it is increasingly difficult for authoritarian regimes, particularly Communist regimes around the world, as democracy is being championed throughout Eastern Europe, Central America, and elsewhere, and one of the most effective vehicles used to attack support for democratic regimes and democratic forces has been the charge of violation of human rights.

Now that charge, as everyone knows, all of us are opposed to the violation of human rights. As a result, it strikes a chord with Americans and certainly with Members of the Congress.

You saw that in the waning days of the efforts to bring democracy to Central America, in the final days of the Communist rule there in Nicaragua, that those who championed the success of the left and of the Marxist regime as opposed to the democratic forces would constantly accuse the democratic forces of human rights violations. That is very effectively used against the freedom fighters in El Salvador.

In fact, an interesting aside, I had a luncheon with the former head of the Human Rights Commission in Nicaragua some years ago. He told about that under the previous regime, the non-Marxist regime under the director, that whenever there was a human rights violation they would hold a press conference and they would talk about it and all of the media would show up and all the international attention.

But then as the dictatorship fell and the Marxists came into power, the number of human rights violations just exploded. And instead of picking people off the street and interrogating them for 5 or 6 hours and then throwing them out at the edge of town, whole families would disappear and whole units and blocks would disappear, murdered and gone.

As they would attempt to hold a press conference to explain the human rights violations, there was no international attention. In fact, even the funding was cut off.

So this head of the Human Rights Commission in Nicaragua sent an emissary to the World Council of Churches, interestingly enough, one of the founders of this Human Rights Commission, during the 1970's and said, "Why have you cut off aid to the Human Rights Commission in Nicaragua?" And they said, interesting, they said, "Now that the Communists, now that the Sandinistas the Marxists have taken over in Nicaragua, Nicaragua is no longer our concern; El Salvador is our next target."

And so the World Council of Churches refused to fund human rights efforts in Nicaragua under the Marxists, but now they moved on to the next one.

As we said, it is a very effective tool. The Communists know that they can shoot someone, throw them in the street, put them in the town square, tag them with some name of some conservative or pro-democratic organization that the 1-minutes will fill up over here, and there will be a great deal of attack on the democratic forces.

Only in recent years, interestingly, only in the last 24 or 36 months has this charge come to the fore against the democratic forces in Angola, the democratic forces of UNITA.

UNITA have called for democratic elections, as you know, since 1975. In fact, ever since the agreement was made and the Communists under the leadership of the Soviet Union refused to hold the elections and UNITA has been demanding elections ever since, and as a result there has been a strong support in the countryside to have a democratically elected government.

Now, recognizing the public support, recognizing the rightness of their goals, recognizing that their principles are correct, the only thing left upon which they can hang their hat is to concoct some sort of charges of human rights violations.

Now, you are going to hear a great deal about that. It is not new. It is the standard charge of the left when their rhetoric and when their philosophy fails, then they attempt to use our own values against our own cause.

So they make these various charges.

What happened, very simply, is this, that there is a Marxist regime that violates all human rights in Angola. It cannot stand up to the light of day. It cannot stand an election. Even though they have repeatedly said they would, they have refused to go to the ballot box.

What we need to do is to stand for freedom, stand for democracy, stand for free elections, and not abandon those who are demanding free elections. And at the point that free elections come, then we can do as we have done elsewhere in the world, allow—whether it be in Poland—the withdrawal of our opposition forces against those who are now democratic compatriots. Whatever the outcome is, whatever the result is, it is not our concern. We want free and fair elections.

To abandon them to the Marxist funding, to abandon them to the 25 years of supply, they are now stationed there, to abandon them to the forces of hard currency which comes from American oil companies, to abandon those seeking democracy in Angola, to those powerful forces, and refusing to demand democracy would be a violation of what we stand for as a people and as a nation.

I repeat, around the globe the lights are going out to the left. So you will see there are just a few places in which they can continue to champion. So you will see those same compatriots, those same fellow travelers that once were advocates of Marxist revolution in Central America, those that were advocates against democracy elsewhere in the world, now holding on to one of the last dying breed of communism, certainly in Cuba and Angola.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MCCURDY].

Mr. MCCURDY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the rule. It is an open rule.

I appreciate it remaining so.

As a member of the Committee on Intelligence, I want to commend the chairman of the committee, Mr. BEILENSON, and the ranking member, Mr. HYDE, for their diligent efforts through this fiscal year.

There is going to be a lot of debate on the intelligence bill today. Much of it will be focused on the foreign policy components of the Intelligence Committee.

There is going to be much debate on areas that deal with support to causes in different parts of the world. However, I want to speak for just a few minutes about one of the most important parts of the intelligence budget which is not often thought about or even mentioned. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Oversight and Evaluation of the Committee on Intelligence, we have spent numerous hours, countless hours looking at a number of critical elements and components of this policy. We have held hearings looking at the inspector general functions at the respective agencies, whether it is the CIA, NSA, DIA.

I believe we have made tremendous progress toward improving the inspector general's office and encouraging the agencies to take a much more active role in management and controlling some of the functions within their agencies.

We have a statutory inspector general now at the CIA. I believe once that person is confirmed, that it will be a much stronger office and function.

Also, we have had numerous hearings, and there is language in the bill in reference to the intelligence community support for weapons acquisition. Many people do not realize that that too, is an important function.

The intelligence community is charged with the responsibility of validating the threat for which weapons systems are designed to defeat. I believe there has to be much more active participation and much greater cooperation between the intelligence community and the Department of Defense to ensure that that is done properly.

We have found problems, and we will continue to raise those questions not only in this bill but in future hearings as well.

Arms control monitoring and verification, with the CFE talks ongoing, with the START talks ongoing, the questions of how we monitor these treaties, how we verify compliance with these treaties is going to be very contentious and, I think, very important.

The intelligence community is charged with that responsibility and we have to have a robust capability to perform that.

Needless to say, there are other areas of importance in this bill; counternarcotics, counterespionage, counterterrorism, looking at the organization of the intelligence community in the postcold war environment, and of course the everdeclining percentage of the budget which deals with covert action.

I support covert action. I think it is a necessary capability in Government. It, however, is not a substitute for effective foreign policy, and it does not have to be at the levels that occurred during the decade of the 1980's under the Reagan administration. However, there still are important functions that should be provided for, and I believe that this bill has addressed those appropriately. I will support the committee bill as reported. I will resist and oppose most of the amendments that will be offered today, but we will have ample opportunity to debate those as they occur.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I would just inform the Members, those on the floor and those not on the floor, that we have been informed that when this rule is finished, we will go to general debate on the reauthorization of the intelligence bill, for those Members who are interested, and, therefore, I would not be asking for a vote on this.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN], a member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the rule of course. It is a rare beast. An open rule seldom makes it to this House floor these days.

The intelligence activities of the United States of America have been so maligned over the past generation that it staggers the mind of someone who works regularly with the Central Intelligence Agency and the Defense Intelligence Agency, as all of us on the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence do. To think that all of the decent American men and women in our intelligence agencies, and their families, have had to suffer so many insults over the years is infuriating. And yet the bottom line, as with the Bible in the last chapter, is, "The good guys win."

Here is Gorbachev winning the Nobel Prize yesterday, the day after the death of Le Duc Tho, one of the top Communist organizers of the Communist struggle in Vietnam, which spilled over into Cambodia and Laos. Le Duc Tho turned back the Nobel Peace Prize that he was awarded together with Henry Kissinger. Henry Kissinger took the money that comes with the prize, and gave it to families of the missing in action, for their children, to ease their suffering. This was certainly a noble act on Mr. Kissinger's part. But Le Duc Tho rejected the award, and continued the Communist domination. Now we have one of the leading Communists in this country, Nguyen Co Thach, saying that his country is an absolute basket case.

So much for communism in Southeast Asia and the way we continue to flagellate ourselves over the intelligence aspects of the Vietnam war.

Can anybody in this Chamber, particularly on the left, possibly make a case against anything that this country has tried to do throughout all the cold war years when we see the abject horror of communism?

It is almost like the flip quote of St. John in the New Testament, "The eye is not seen, nor the ear heard, what God has in store for those who love Him."

Mr. Speaker, just flip that around. The eye has not seen, nor the ear heard, what was really going on in all of those countries that embraced communism or had communism thrust upon them. Now we come to the fringes of the Soviet Empire. Yes, to quote Ronald Reagan from March of 1983, "the evil empire." The head of the octopus of the evil empire, in Moscow, is dying, shriveling up. Gorbachev plays it by ear from day to day. His own countrymen scoff at his getting the Nobel Peace Prize. They disdainfully dismiss it as honors coming from abroad, where he is a success. There is no denying that this man was driven by historical events, not driving them. As one of our colleagues, the gentleman from California [Mr. Cox] said, Gorbachev is "Like a skier skiing in front of a massive avalanche."

Being from southern California, I will use a different metaphor. Gorbachev is like somebody surfboarding in front of a tsunami. Any minute, this giant tidal wave could overwhelm him.

However, Mr. Speaker, I will not begrudge him his peace prize, although it rightly belongs to Ronald Reagan. But it must be forgotten this is the man who was in charge when the massive amount of killing took place in Afghanistan, and, while we were trying to help, through covert, and which eventually became overt, aid. We were trying to counter with intelligence activities Mr. Gorbachev's massive killing, which has caused over a million casualties in Afghanistan.

Now there are other tentacles of the Communist world revolution, one of which is in Nicaragua. We look at PBS, supported with public money, and see Bill Moyers' special on "America's Secret War," which was a documentary designed to make young people hate the United States of America. In Moyers' view, it is as though we have had nothing but a government run by secret operatives hidden away in the bowels of the bureaucracy.

In Nicaragua the issue is still in doubt. The Communists are still killing, murdering, striking, and trying to drive from office the first lady President of any country in this hemisphere in all the recorded history. They are driving her to distraction and still mean to pull her down. They probably would have assassinated her, if it were not for her Venezuelan-supplied security guards.

Now we came to Angola. Here is another tentacle of the Soviet empire. In the battle of Mavinga last year, every regimental unit and up was commanded by Russian officers. There were Spetsnaz fingerprints all over the whole war. And yet there are people in this House that at the eleventh hour in Angola, on the verge of seeing another country turned to elections in a freely elected system of government, people in this Chamber, unable to cut the cord with the past that has indentified them with their left-wing foreign policy leanings, want to stop short of seeing yet another Communist Government collapse before our eyes.

As my colleagues know, on Sunday morning most people in political life, anybody who wants to be aware anyway, watches all of the Sunday morning talk shows. And there is a commercial which I think is paid for by General Electric about Hungary. It starts off with lights going on around Budapest, and a lady's voice saying, "Freedom is wonderful. Freedom is everything."

I want my colleagues to think about that. In a country that has had freedom for over 215 years, to realize that it is everything is something we should have before us like a beacon light at all times. I wish people, in this Chamber especially my Democratic colleagues, would have the common decency to stand up occasionally and say, "I was wrong, about communism."

Throughout most of my adult life communism has been so inherently a corrupting and evil force that it has killed millions. And in my view Gorbachev earned that Nobel Prize for Peace on one line only, that Stalin killed more people than Adolf Hitler did. The only problem with Gorbachev is that he should include Lenin in on that statement, that the Lenin-Stalin cabal has killed far more millions of people than Adolf Hitler, and their successors are still killing.

As we move to consider this bill I urge my colleagues to stop the killing in Angola. Leave the committee language in place. And defeat the Boxer amendment.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this rule. It is very fair. It is an open rule. It gives us all a chance to participate in this bill.

I would like to say that for me it gives me an opportunity, and a number of Members of this body, to reflect on the lessons that were learned during the Iran-Contra scandal and to try and give the Congress, through its Intelligence Committees, a check and balance on unbridled Executive branch power.

I was not going to speak at this point, but the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] and the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] made reference to the Boxer amendment.

□ 1140

Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that the draft that the gentleman from Califorina [Mr. DORNAN] related to as far as the committee being notified when the President contemplated a covert action, has been changed. I agree with the gentleman that that was not a good way to put the amendment, and we have changed it.

The President now is required to notify the committees, and in an emergency does not even have to talk to them for 48 hours. So I think we have corrected that particular problem.

The Boxer amendment has nothing to do with communism. What the Boxer amendment has to do with is this body and the Senate having the ability to check and balance the kind of scandal that we saw in the Iran-Contra days. It hs nothing to do with Operation Desert Shield, which is far from a covert operation.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is, under the Boxer amendment we can have intelligence gathering. It does not require any notification of the committees for that. We could have a hostage rescue, and it would not require any notification of the committees. So I think it is a very modest amendment, and it really goes to the very important issue of checks and balances.

In conclusion, I am not going to go into the whole debate now, because I know we will have a very spirited one at the time that I offer this amendment. But I do want to thank the Committee on Rules for allowing us to come forward with it. I think it will probably be the first time we will have the opportunity to discuss what the proper role is for the Intelligence Committees in approving, not just being notified of, but approving covert actions.

Mr. Speaker, I stand very strongly for this Congress, through the Intelligence Committees, to have a say in those very important decisions.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would just point out to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER], whom I have great respect for, that I fought for her in the Committee on Rules so that she would have the right, representing her constituents in San Francisco, to offer her amendment on this floor, even though I am 100-percent opposed to her amendment.

Mr. Speaker, let me just point out to the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] and other Members of the House that we have just been notified again that the debate on the intelligence authorization bill has now been postponed. As soon as this debate is over on this rule, we will than take up the rule on the Reconciliation Act, and then go into the Reconciliation Act.

Mr. Speaker, that rule is one of the worst rules ever to come before this House. It waives all points of order, including, of all things, the Budget Act itself, the rule coming before us in a few mintues. It is just like 62 of the 129 rules that have come before this body in this 101st Congress. They have waived the Budget Act. That, Mr. Speaker, is the so-called enforcement mechanison in the Reconciliation Act coming before us in a few minutes.

Getting back, I just wanted the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] to know I will always fight for her right to speak her piece on the floor of this House. I hope she will do the same for me.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SOLOMON. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I just want to publicly thank the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] for his support for an open rule. I wanted to acknowledge the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] and the ranking members, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], because it is my understanding they always ask for an open rule. I think it is a very important point, because here the Intelligence Committee is dealing with so many secrets, and yet they are willing to hear from the Members on the floor. I am very appreciative of that.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I certainly concur in the statements of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER] about the chairman of the Committee on Intelligence, the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON], and certainly the ranking member, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE]. Both gentleman are Solomonesque in their wisdom.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to support this rule. It gives us an opportunity to debate this issue. But I find it amazing, and I think most Americans do, that we have satellites that can read the fine print on a pack of cigarettes from outer space. But, I don't know about you, but I heard about Iraq's invasion of Kuwait on CNN.

In fact, I will tell you how maybe we could spend some money, with all this budget problem. Maybe we should cut the CIA's budget and give it to CNN.

Really, think about it? Since they started beaming TV signals all over the world, the Berlin Wall fell over, Eastern Europeans, they revolted, the Soviet Union, they got perestroika. The Russians could not find food and canned stuffs on their storeroom shelves, so they said, enough is enough!

All of a sudden, Mr. Gorbachev got the political message, and, Mr. Speaker, he won the Nobel Peace Prize.

Now, MX missiles did not do that. Now, look, I am not here today talking about Angola, Afghanistan, or the CIA. I'm hearing all this covert talk, and I'll tell you what: I have the greatest respect for the chairmen of the respective sides of this particualr vote. But here is what I want to say:

I have a little buy-American amendment that did not get a whole lot of play. But what I am going to ask Congress to do is to approve it, and the CIA could covertly, if they want, I will not mind, covertly, not tell anybody, but buy American-made goods and products. They can keep it secret, I don't care. Just buy American.

I think the American people would like that. It was passed by this body last year. It went to conference. It was one of thsoe times when the conferees had thrown it out.

So I think if there is a problem with this covert language on the Traficant buy-American amendment, I do not care how the drafters and the heads of the conferees get together and change that language to make it acceptable, but I would encourage that they do that. I think it is good policy, and it's the type of things we should be doing.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TRAFICANT. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat intrigued by the supposition that the gentleman poses about providing CNN with the money instead of the CIA.

Is the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] suggesting to us that communism has been brought down around the world by Ted Turner and Jane Fonda?

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, reclaiming my time, I will say this to the gentleman: CNN and Ted Turners' TV network that carried America's way of life and living to people all over the world that have big stomachs and have nothing to eat, finally got fed up with their Government. And it was not an American missile nor all of our taxpayers' dollars that did it! It was just the reality that they were getting screwed. And they saw freedom every hour beamed through the skies by CNN.

What I am concerned about today is that we do not turn more screws on American workers, and that's why I have my buy-American amendment before the committee.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and no offense to anybody. Jane Fonda may have made a mistake in judgment, but she and Ted Turner didn't get us into this mess.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I will just say to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] who just spoke in the well, whom I have respect for, that it was not CNN that brought down the Berlin Wall, it was not Jane Fonda who brought it down. We all know who brought it down. Ronald Reagan brought it down with peace through strength. Yea.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Speaker, as we consider amendments restricting or terminating reported covert aid to the UNITA forces in Angola, I think it is important to reflect on what we, as Members of Congress and as Americans, agree on to help us reach a consensus on this subject. We agree that the current bloodshed should cease, that the Angolan people should be able to express their will through ballots not bullets, that free and verifiable elections should produce multiparty democracy, that the ongoing negotiations in Portugal between the Communist MPLA and UNITA should achieve success and that United States policy should promote the achievement of these objectives.

UNITA and its leader, Dr. Jonas Savimbi, share these objectives. UNITA has recognized the MPLA government as the legitimate state authority and is struggling for mutual MPLA recognition of UNITA as a legitimate and legal political force which can compete in free elections leading to the establishment of multiparty democracy. Significant elements in the MPLA share these objectives as well, providing a reasonable hope that the current negotiations will meet success and bring peace and democracy. However, major factions in the MPLA still cling to the illusion of military victory as wtinessed by the recent major offensive launched by the MPLA on Mavinga.

The question before us today is how do we encourage MPLA flexibility in negotiations—by continuing the reported current modest policy of support for UNITA, thereby demonstrating U.S. resolve and the hopelessness of any MPLA effort to achieve military victory or by abandonment of UNITA and placing our hopes in the MPLA's sense of fair play and commitment to democracy.

I believe the choice is clear. The negotiations can only succeed if the MPLA is convinced that there is no military option. Lessened U.S. support, or the possibility of lessened support, will only doom the negotiations and mean more bloodshed and less hope. Current policy works: Vote for peace, vote for democracy, vote against amendments to reverse U.S. support for UNITA.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were yeas 418, nays 0, not voting 15, as follows:

Mr. CARR changed his vote from "present" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 5835, OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1990

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 509 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 509

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5835) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 4 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1991, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against the bill and against its consideration are hereby waived, except that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, or his designee, is authorized to raise points of order under clause 5(b), rule XXI. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and the amendments made in order by this resolution and which shall not exceed three hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Budget, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment under the five-minute rule. The amendments printed in part one of the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution shall be considered as having been adopted in the House and in the Committee of the Whole. No other amendment to the bill shall be in order in the House or in the Committee of the Whole except those printed in part two of the report of the Committee on Rules or as specified herein. It shall be in order to consider en bloc the amendments printed in the report of the Committee on Rules, if offered by Representative Rostenkowski, or his designee, and said amendments en bloc shall be considered as having been read. Said amendments en bloc shall be debatable for the period specified in the report, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and a Member opposed thereto. Said amendments en bloc shall not be subject to amendment, or be subject to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. All points of order are hereby waived against the amendments printed in the report. It shall be in order to consider en bloc amendments offered by Representative Panetta of California, or his designee, and said amendments en bloc shall not be subject to amendment, or to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. Said amendments en bloc shall be considered as having been read, shall be debatable for not to exceed thirty minutes, equally divided and controlled by the proponent and a Member opposed thereto. All points of order against the amendments en bloc are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, which may not include instructions.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, because the House has been in somewhat disarray and going through some commotion, did I understand the Clerk to have just read House Resolution 509?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman is correct.

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. MICHEL. If so, Mr. Speaker, then I make a point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against House Resolution 509 on grounds that it violates clause 4(b) of House rule XI, and ask to be heard on my point of order.

Mr. Speaker, clause 4(b) of House rule XI provides that, and I quote:

The Committee on Rules shall not report any rule or order of business which * * * would prevent the motion to recommit from being made as provided in clause 4 of rule XVI.

And clause 4 of rule XVI provides, and again I quote:

After the previous question shall have been ordered on the passage of a bill or joint resolution one motion to recommit shall be in order, and the Speaker shall give preference in recognition for such purpose to a Member who is opposed to the bill or joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, those two clauses were adopted as amendments to House Rules on March 15, 1909, when the then minority party Democrats joined with a group of insurgent Republicans to guarantee greater minority rights. Prior to this rules revision, the motion to recommit was controlled by the majority party. This change was instituted for the specific purpose of giving the minority a final vote on its alternative legislative proposal through a motion to recommit with instructions. House Resolution 509, on the other hand, provides that the motion to recommit, and I quote, "may not contain instructions." It therefore is in direct violation of this rule which was purposely designed to guarantee the minority a vote on its alternative by way of instructions.

Mr. Speaker, in support of this argument I quote first from the author of clause 4(b) of rule XI on the day he offered the amendment—Representative John Fitzgerald, a Democrat from New York. In his words:

Under our present practice, if a Member desires to move to recommit with instructions, the Speaker instead of recognizing the Member desiring to submit a specific proposition by instructions, recognizes the gentleman in charge of the bill and he moves to recommit, and upon that motion demands the previous question. When the previous question is ordered, the motion to recommit is voted down. Under our practice, the motion to recommit might better be eliminated from the rules altogether.

The subsequent rulings of Speakers confirm that the whole purpose of the new rule was to permit the minority a chance to offer a final amendment in a motion to recommit with instructions.

Speaker Champ Clark ruled on May 14, 1912, and I quote:

It is not necessary to go into the history of how this particular rule came to be adopted but that it was intended that the right to make the motion to recommit should be preserved inviolate.

That is from a precedent found in volume 8 of Cannon's Precedents in section 2757. From that same volume in section 2757 is found a precedent from October 7, 1919. Former Speaker Crisp is quoted as follows:

The object of the motion to recommit is clearly to give the minority of the House * * * a chance affirmatvely to go on record as to what they think this legislation should be, and if a motion to recommit does not permit that, then the motion is futile.

And Speaker Gillett, in deciding the point of order on that occasion, said, and I quote:

* * * The fact is that a motion to recommit is intended to give the minority one chance to fully express their views so long as they are germane. * * * The whole purpose of this motion to recommit is to have a record vote on the program of the minority. That is the main purpose of the motion to recommit.

Speaker Bankhead, in a 1939 ruling found in volume 7 of Deschler's Precedents, chapter 23, section 26.1 said of this rule, and I quote:

The purpose of the motion to recommit * * * is to give Members opposed to the bill an opportunity to have an expression of opinion by the House upon their proposition.

Mr. Speaker, the whole key to this point of order and the underlying rule at issue is what is meant in clause 4(b) of rule XI when it says the Rules Committee "shall not report any rule or order of business which * * * would prevent the motion to recommit from being made as provided in clause 4 of rule XVI." It is not sufficient for the Rules Committee to simply permit a straight motion to recommit and prohibit instructions, since it may not prevent a motion "as provided" by clause 4 of rule XVI. And the legislative history of that rule and the early rulings make clear that what was being provided was an opportunity for the minority to offer a motion to recommit of its choosing, with or without instructions.

Indeed Deschler's Precedents, in volume 7, chapter 23, section 25 makes this abundantly clear, and I quote:

There are in the rules of the House four motions to refer the ordinary motion provided for in the first sentence of clause 4, Rule XVI when a question is "under debate;" the motion to recommit with or without instructions after the previous question has been ordered on a bill or joint resolution to final passage provided in the second sentence of clause 4, Rule XVI * * *.

Mr. Speaker, that second sentence of clause 4 of rule XVI is the 1909 rule that is at issue in this point of order. And while it does not specifically mention instructions, it is clear from the legislative history behind the rule as well as this recent interpretation from Deschler's that the right of the minority to offer instructions in a motion to recommit is not only implied by the rule, but is the whole reason for the adoption of the rule in the first place.

It therefore should be obvious that if the Rules Committee is prohibited from denying the minority the right to offer a motion to recommit "as provided" by that second sentence in that 1909 rule, it may not bring in a rule such as this which denies instructions. To do so is to render rule, which protects our minority right, null and void. It is not only a violation of the spirit of the rule but of the literal content of the rule.

I therefore urge the Chair to sustain this point of order for the sake of upholding the tradition, the spirit and the letter of the rule in question.

□ 1220

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield on his point of order?

Mr. MICHEL. I would be happy to yield to the gentleman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The gentleman may not yield on this point of order.

Does anyone wish to be heard against the point of order?

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest that the point of order as made by the minority leader is not correct, is not valid. Simply, as the minority leader has pointed out, there is a motion to recommit, but the motion does not have instructions. There is ample precedent in the House over a long period of time that says that a motion to recommit is in order, it is necessary that it also include the instructions.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I ask to be heard on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON] is recognized.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker and my colleagues, I would point out that at midnight last night, when the Rules Committee was reconvened to meet on this outrageous rule, I brought up the very point that the Republican leader is making, that this was a violation of 81 years of precedent of this House and it was countered at that time with the argument, "Well, you know, in years past we have given you Republicans a substitute to give you a bite of the apple." But I want to point out that in this rule, Mr. Speaker, and everybody here should pay attention, this rule does not even allow a Republican substitute. We made that request by letter of the Republican leader, which is in the record of the Rules Committee proceedings last night.

Never before has a Republican leader been denied his right and at the same time been denied a right of recommittal with instructions. That, Mr. Speaker, is outrageous. You should not stand for it. You have the power to prevent these things from happening and let the American people be heard from all sides of this aisle. And I hope that you sustain his point of order.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, may I further be heard very briefly on the point of order?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] is recognized.

Mr. MICHEL. In response to the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina who makes the point that it is not unique to have straight motions to recommit around here, I would admit to that. But what I am arguing here is the fact that having been denied any kind of an amendment to express our minority point of view in the normal proceeding of things, certainly then we ought to be granted, as I have outlined before, that motion to recommit with instructions, to really be meaningful. Otherwise, there is no vehicle, no opportunity for members of any minority for that matter, to express their feelings, their views on a given piece of legislation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does anyone else wish to be heard on the point of order?

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER].

Mr. HEFNER. May I be heard, Mr. Speaker?

I do not know if it exactly applies to a point of order, but I think it fits in with a statement the gentleman from New York made.

Now, the President of the United States stood in the well of this House—stood here and addressed a joint session of the Congress and stipulated that we wanted $500 billion of budget reductions in the next 5 years. People have labored long hours, weeks and months, to try to get to a $50 billion reduction package the first year and $500 million over 5 years. And it is my understanding——

Mr. WALKER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman must confine himself to the point of order.

Mr. HEFNER. I am getting to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed.

Mr. SOLOMON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, we extended the courtesy to the gentleman from New York. He was not addressing the point of order. And I suggest that we ought to extend the same courtesy here.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Regular order has been demanded.

The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] must adhere to the regular order and will address the point of order.

Mr. HEFNER. The point that I make is that the minority has not been denied in this rule process. If my information is correct, and someone can correct me if I am wrong, the minority was offered the opportunity to offer a substitute just as they have the past 10 years in this body. The minority opted not to offer a substitute that got to the $500 billion over 5 years. It did not meet the criteria that every other group has been asked to meet before they offered——

Mr. WALKER. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. HEFNER. I think I have made my point. Mr. Speaker, I yield the time.

□ 1230

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I reiterate my original statement on the point of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). Does anyone else wish to be heard on the point of order? If not, the Chair will refer to a ruling by Speaker Rainey, January 11, 1934 cited on page 471 of the Manual and in Deschler's volume 6, chapter 21, section 26.11, and in volume 7, chapter 23, section 25:

The Chair will state that the Committee on Rules may, without violating this clause, recommend a special order which limits, but does not totally prohibit, a motion to recommit pending passage of a bill or joint resolution, such as precluding the motion from containing instructions relative to certain amendments.

In the only precedent directly relating to the question at issue, Speaker Rainey on January 11, 1934, ruled and was sustained on appeal. The Committee on Rules is not precluded under clause 4b, rule XI, from specifically limiting motions to recommit bills or joint resolutions pending the question of final passage to specific type of instructions.

Speaker Rainey stated on that occasion:

The Chair, therefore, holds the motion to recommit, as provided in clause 4, rule XVI, has been reserved to the minority and that, insofar as such a rule is concerned, the special rule,—

And the Chair emphasizes to the House, does not deprive the minority of the right to make a simple motion to recommit.

This is Speaker Rainey speaking:

The Chair thinks, however, that a motion to recommit with instructions to incorporate a provision, which would be in violation of the special rule, and would not be in order.

Thus, the Committee on Rules has the authority to recommend special rules to the House which may limit, but not totally prohibit, the type of motion to recommit which may be offered, not merely with respect to the general rules of the House, but with respect to germane amendments which might otherwise be in order. Clause of Rule XVI does not guarantee that a motion to recommit a bill may always include instructions.

The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the House?

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. DERRICK

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I move to lay the appeal of the ruling of the Chair on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] to lay the appeal of the ruling of the Chair on the table.

The question was taken and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 251, nays 171, not voting 11, as follows:

Mr. STANGELAND changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. FORD of Michigan changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the motion to lay the appeal from the ruling of the Chair on the table was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore [Mr. MURTHA]. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], and pending that, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 509 is a modified closed rule providing for 3 hours of general debate, with the time to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Budget. All points of order against the bill and against its consideration are waived except that the Ways and Means Committee chairman or his designee may raise points of order under clause 5(b) of rule XXI. Clause

5(b) of rule XXI provides that no bill or joint resolution carrying a tax or tariff measure shall be reported by any committee not having jurisdiction to report tax and tariff measures.

The rule provides that the amendment printed in part 1 of the House Report 101-882 to accompany the rule will be considered as having been adopted in the House and in the Committee of the Whole. The rule makes in order no other amendments in the House or in the Committee of the Whole except the amendments en bloc printed in part 2 of the report or specified in the rule. In addition, the rule makes in order consideration of the amendments in part 2 en bloc, not subject to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. The 1 hour of debate time is to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent and a Member opposed. The rule also waives all points of order against the amendment in the report.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule makes in order amendments to be offered by Representative PANETTA en bloc. The amendments en bloc, debatable for 30 minutes, are not subject to a demand for a division of the question in the House or in the Committee of the Whole. The rule also provides for one motion to recommit which may not include instructions.

Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues are well aware, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990 is the legislation implementing the deficit reduction plan agreed to at the budget summit as reflected in House Concurrent Resolution 310, the concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal years 1991 through 1995. This bill contains submissions from 12 House committees achieving deficit reduction totaling $40 billion in fiscal 1991 and $500 billion over 5 years.

Mr. Speaker, equally vital to this deficit reduction effort are the improvements to the congressional budget process incorporated into the bill by the rule as title XIV.

Title XIV represents the culmination of countless hours of work by the members and staffs of key committees of jurisdiction, the administration, and others in interpreting the enforcement provisions of the summit agreement and drafting a comprehensible, workable package to implement that agreement. As chairman of the Subcommittee on the Legislative Process of the Committee on Rules, which shares jurisdiction over the budget process with the Committee on Government Operations, I can assure the House these reforms constitute major improvements which will impose strict budgetary discipline during the 5 years covered by the bi-partisan summit agreement.

These improvements would be accomplished in two principal ways. First, title XIV improves and tightens the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, commonly known as Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, by creating three kinds of sequestrations. One sequestration enforces caps on discretionary spending; another enforces limits on entitlements and revenue floors, and another provides for an across-the-board deficit sequestration similar to the current Gramm-Rudman.

Second, the provisions make temporary revisions to the Congressional Budget Act. These revisions include requiring 5-year budget resolutions, 5-year spending allocations, and by enhancing the section 302 and 311 points of order to apply them to measures which would breach the budget-year totals and the totals for all 5 years covered by a budget resolution. In addition, if any bill loses revenue and is not fully offset by entitlement cuts in the same bill, the budget committees may report a special reconciliation concurrent resolution directing the committees to raise revenues by an amount equal to the deficit increase.

Finally, the title provides important reforms in the area of credit accounting, beginning in fiscal year 1992, which will help us budget for our contingent liabilities. The package also removes the Social Security trust funds from the budget and the deficit calculations under Gramm-Rudman, and creates a point of order prohibiting consideration of a measure which increases Social Security benefits without increasing payroll taxes, or which cuts benefits without also cutting taxes.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all Members to support these needed reforms by supporting the rule and the bill.

□ 1300

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the able gentleman from South Carolina has explained the provisions of the rule and it would be redundant for me to repeat those.

Mr. Speaker, I want the Members of this House to listen to what I have to say. This is not a fair rule. The Democrats are trying to muzzle the Republicans by disallowing them the opportunity to offer a substitute.

I think it is time that we spoke out to present a budget alternative that makes sense.

Reduction in spending without new taxes, that is the philosophy embodied in the Republican substitute. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL] labored hard and long with their task force to produce this substitute, but the Committee on Rules has denied the opportunity to debate it on the floor of the House.

I think there should be a vote up or down on the Republican substitute.

I have been here 28 years, and very, very seldom, indeed, have I seen anything like this before. The Nation is at the crossroads. We are facing crisis and chaos unless something is done.

There is assurance, if the Democrat proposal is passed, that it will clear the Senate, or that it will be signed by the President of the United States. If he vetoes it, then there is no assurance that the veto will be overridden; quite the contrary, I think it will be sustained.

So here we are, just a few days before October 19 when this Government of ours will come to a screeching halt. The Federal employees will be out of work again, our parks will be closed, the Interior Department facilities downtown will be closed, and visitors will be denied the right to use facilities that they should have.

So what do we do here today? The Democrats being a proposal including higher taxes to the floor that is absolutely unacceptable to the Republican Party. I think that the Democrats made a serious mistake when they refused my amendment in the Committee on Rules very early this morning about 12:30 a.m. to provide that the Republican substitute be made in order.

I urge the Members of this body to vote down the previous question, to defeat the rule, so that the Committee on Rules can act again and bring a rule to the floor allowing the Republican substitute.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues, I am submitting for the RECORD the Republican leader's letter to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY] asking that his substitute be made in order. That request was arrogantly denied.

Mr. Speaker, the excuse was given at the Rules Committee that a Republican substitute was not made in order because our package, our tax-free package, only added up to $410 billion in deficit reductions and spending cuts, but that is a poor excuse.

Mr. Speaker, I offered some motions to make two amendments in order. Each amendment would have been added on top of the Republican package. One amendment would have imposed a 10-percent surtax on personal income exceeding $300,000. Those people could afford to pay.

The other amendment would have imposed a 1-percent tax on the volume of business conducted in our country by foreign-owned corporations and subsidiaries of foreign-owned corporations. You know what, that amendment was defeated by all nine Democrats voting no.

Both of those amendments were shot down. Mr. Speaker, those two amendments en bloc with the Republican substitute, if made in order, would have cut spending by $400 billion, which the American people want. It would have raised nobody's taxes except those making an income over $300,000 and those foreign corporations that presently pay no taxes at all.

Is that what you want? You denied it. I offered those same amendments to the Rostenkowski proposal, and all nine Democrats voted no upstairs last night at midnight. No press was there.

In other words, the Democratic leadership in this House refused to let you Democrats vote to impose a 10-percent surtax on incomes over $300,000. Your Democrat leadership refused to let you Democrats vote to impose a 1-percent tax on tax-free foreign corporations.

Vote no on this rule, Mr. Speaker, and you may get that chance.

The letter referred to follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, October 15, 1990.

Hon. JOHN JOSEPH MOAKLEY,
Chairman, Committee on Rules, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I respectfully request that you make in order an amendment to the 1990 Reconciliation bill to be offered by either Rep. Pursell or Rep. Kasich.

The amendment reduces the deficit by approximately $400 billion over five years. It includes a multi-year freeze on domestic discretionary spending enforced by spending caps. An additional $6 billion is cut below the freeze for international affairs over the five years. Entitlement savings and fee increases are equal to the amounts submitted by the various Committees. The amendment contains minimal revenue increases primarily in the form of current law extensions.

It is in my view a tragedy, for this institution and for the country, that we were not able to agree on a compromise solution to our budget problems. Both parties share responsibility for this failure, which has shaken the faith of the people of the House.

But since such compromise is not possible in the current frenzied atmosphere, the American people should at least be given the opportunity to see the true nature of the opposing political philosophies of our parties.

It has been wisely said that taxes are what we pay for civilized society. But excessive taxes are what society pays for irresponsible government spending—and they are too high a price. No matter what differences we have on specific tactical issues, House Republicans believe that the problem with the federal budget is not that the American people are taxed too little, but that their elected leaders have been spending too much.

In the war against the deficit, the first strike, swift and hard, must be made against spending. This is where House Republicans stand and this is the message our amendment contains. It is a message that the American people deserve to hear, loud and clear, on the floor of the House tomorrow.

Sincerely,

ROBERT H. MICHEL,
Republican Leader.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and in support of the previous question.

Obviously the main issue here is the issue of whether or not an alternative amendment ought to be provided here, and the reasons it should not be provided are basically three.

No. 1, we have been struggling for the last 6 months to try to reach targets of $40 billion the first year, $500 billion over 5 years. That was agreed to by the President. It was agreed to by the leadership on the minority side. It was agreed to in the summit. It was agreed to in a budget resolution that we passed last week reaching $500 billion in deficit reduction over 5 years.

We have just had in reconciliation 12 House committees and chairmen bleeding, bleeding to meet with their directive on reconciliation.

What does the Republican proposal do? It would cut the reconciliation number over 5 years in half, in half. Instead of $250 billion over 5 years, which is part of this reconciliation bill that we debate, all they would come up with is $125 billion.

So suddenly those who argue and have argued the strongest for deficit reduction, when it is time to put up, they come up with a mouse.

The fact is we have been working to try to reach the targets established by the President. As a matter of fact, the President himself, the President has stated in the summit agreement it is his intention that no bill suspending sequester beyond October 19 shall be signed until the following has occurred, a reconciliation conference report on a bill fully reflecting the budget summit agreement, fully reflecting the budget summit agreement.

The Republican plan is a recipe for disaster, because the President himself, under his own commitment, would have to reject this and continue sequester.

Second, it is fundamentally unfair, fundamentally unfair. What they have done is they have accepted the cuts in reconciliation that go after the elderly and after farmers and after veterans and after Government employees.

□ 1310

Then on top of that, they now add a freeze across-the-board. A freeze. A hard freeze, that goes after what? The most vulnerable in our society. The elderly, students, Head Start, WIC, nutrition, so they do a double hit on the people in the middle, and the lower income brackets. For what? to protect the most wealthy in this country because they are the ones that are not even touched by this substitute.

In the other body, the minority is working with the Democrats to come up with a credible deficit plan. Someday my hope is that the minority here will work with this side to help govern this Nation, not bring it down.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN].

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that the Constitution gives Congress the authority to declare war. But I did not think, until I saw this rule, that the authority extended to declaring war on the minority party in the House.

This rule shuts the minority party out of the process not because of some arbitrary standard for amendments laid down by the Budget Committee chairman at the 11th hour last night. That was all pretense and we know it. The real reason we were shutout of the process is because we had a substitute in the Kasich-Pursell approach that made real savings and came darn close to the summit targets without raising taxes. I repeat: with no new taxes.

The Democrats could not stand the thought of permitting a vote on a no tax alternative—one that clearly draws the line between the parties. Well, let it be noted that you have issued your declaration of war with this rule and you have fired the first shot.

If you want to bring down the Government with your game of chicken, let there be no mistake that the responsibility rests fully on your shoulders.

Do not lecture us about the fairness of your reconciliation package while at the same time trying to stick the minority with this outrageously unfair rule. You have destroyed the credibility of your package by the incredibility of your tactics.

And what kind of standard has the Budget Committee been held to in this process? This rule waives all points of order against the bill—all points of order. That means that every House rule and every provision of the Budget Act and Gramm-Rudman-Hollings could be violated with impunity by this bill—safe from points of order. And given the rushed consideration of this bill without proper printing and scrutiny, for all we know they are violated. One thing is for sure: This violates the 3-day layover for committee reports. Members will not have the benefit of even a day to review the report.

So let us not talk about holding the minority party to one standard when the reconciliation bill itself, by the very terms of this rule, is in violation of every standard we have ever conceived.

Mr. Speaker, I think the way in which this measure has been rushed to the floor without proper printing or opportunity for scrutiny or analysis further bespeaks the confidence the majority party has in its package. This process has the fingerprints of Winkum, Blinkum and Nod all over it. This reconciliation bill was reported from committee on a wink; it was rushed to the floor in a blink; and it will be passed by the Democrats on the nod. And while that is all fine and dandy in nursery rhyme land, it is not going to cut it in the real world of deficit reduction land. You are back to your old tricks over there of promises, promises, smoke and mirrors. And it is all being played out in the dead of night. You know darn well this package will not withstand the light of day. You are not just dancing in the dark with this rule—you are dirty dancing.

And how do you justify this rush job? "We have to expedite it," you say; "We're under the gun." Well I would suggest you check just which end of the barrel you are on before you proceed with this dangerously suicidal rule and bill.

And what about the so-called budget enforcement provisions of this bill. Well, if you like Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, you will love Panetta-Moakley-Conyers. They give us not just one sequester but three—an appropriations sequester, an entitlement sequester and a deficit sequester. And then it turns around and exempts half the Government. This new process is so complex it makes Rube Goldberg look like a tinker toy.

And yes, we have even got more budget points of order. Is that not enough to make you quiver? What we need, Mr. Speaker, is fewer points of order—we routinely waive them anyway. What we need instead is more points of light, of common sense, and of real deficit reduction. This package fails on all counts. Vote down the rule so we can have a fair rule and a good bill.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes and 15 seconds to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, the Nation is in crisis, and the Speaker must get the phone and call our President. Here is what the Speaker must say to him. The Speaker must say, "Mr. President, phone home while you are out campaigning. Your troops are in disarray. They are trying to pass a budget that you said you must veto. Mr. President, phone home. Your House Republicans want to pass a budget that would force you, by your own words, to close the Government down."

Yes, it is true. The President, when he addressed the Congress, and that includes all Members and House Republicans, he stated on September 11,

> The Congress should, this month, enact a 5-year program to reduce the projected debt and deficits by 500 billion—that is by half a trillion dollars.

He said it twice, in case Members had not gotten it down. Then he asked Members to do one thing. He said:

> I ask both Houses of Congress to allow a straight up or down vote on a complete $500 billion deficit reduction package.

The President's own words. And we are giving Members that up or down vote.

Now, it is not just the President who called for this. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] on September 26, "It must be $500 billion." The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], in budget negotiations, "It must be $500 billion." The gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER], let me quote him, "$500 billion, 5-year deficit reduction program that is real," and "without smoke and mirrors—is an absolute essential, a minimum essential for the future of this country."

Well, what did our House Republicans do? They submitted a budget that did not come close to that. In fact, it contained smoke and mirrors. Four percent growth, each year for the next 5 years, in an economy plunging to recession. I say, "No way."

Finally, what are the House Republicans unable to meet their own President's target after all this pious language about its importance? Let Members face it, House Republicans, they were unable to meet the President's targets because they are unwilling to tax their rich friends.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL].

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Speaker, over the years as an athlete and coach, I had always thought that when we go into a game, that we had the same number of players as our opponent, and we played by the same rules. Not in the House of Representatives.

We have waived the budget rules in the 101st Congress 62 times. We violated the rules that we voted for in the Budget Act. Now, we end up with four tiers of government: The authorization tier, the appropriation tier, the budget tier, and now the summit tier.

We were brought down because of the process here, not by personalities of the President or Republican or the Democratic Party. The process is what caused this disaster in this country. All I am suggesting here is that we develop a game plan and present it to the public. In the Committee on Rules last night, all we asked was to let our game plan be presented so the public can see it; not just the Committee on Rules. Let the American public see it. Let the Members vote on it.

The Democrats have a plan that calls for $148 billion in new taxes for the next 5 years. I would rather see that money stay in the private sector than bringing it to Washington. However, that is not for me to decide.

If a person is a coach, they put that game plan on the table, and they put the opponent's game plan on the table, and they run with it. Let Members give the American public a chance to look at two game plans for this Nation. We are starting today a World Series, and yes, we may lose the first game, but the final game, from the Founding Fathers' point of view, will be the elections, to elect people that can govern, that can offer a better vision of America.

□ 1320

So I say, let this fight start. Let us fight it out, but let us play by the same rules. That is all I am asking for. The Democrats have stacked the deck. The pure arrogance of one political party that has dominated the House of Representatives for 34 years is astounding.

I think the American public should be outraged, and if we cannot offer an alternative, then I think that is very unsportsmanlike. No good athlete would do that.

As I am suggesting today, we have a good alternative. Give us a chance to vote on it and let the American public decide.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PURSELL. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, let me just make a point. Let us not be confused about this debate today.

I want to comment to the chairman of the Budget Committee, this debate is about whether we should be able to offer an alternative that does not have $150 billion in taxes, a large degree of which are levied on the American people. If you want to talk about hurting senior citizens, and Rostenkowski won, you hurt the senior citizens. You are the ones who wanted to cut the premiums and the deductible more. We are the ones who came up with a better package.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The time of the gentlemen from Michigan has expired.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman.

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. PURSELL. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KASICH. You are the ones who cut the premiums on senior citizens, and we came with a package that did not, and you fixed yours. You are the ones who levied the gasoline tax on the average American. We went without a gasoline tax, and then you fixed yours.

I mean, this is a game of tit and tat. It is like ping pong. We set the policy and you respond.

The bottom line here today is, we want to offer a plan that cuts $400 billion without taxes and you want to raise taxes to the tune of $150 billion on the American people, without any spending controls.

Your entitlement cuts, our entitlement cuts are the same. What you refuse to do is to control spending. What you want to do is have more spending and $150 billion in additional taxes on the American people. They are fed up and we are, too, and you have denied us a chance to offer our proposal, and it is not democratic. It is a tyranny of the majority, and I resent the fact that you say we are making these cuts that we do not make. We have been the salvation for the people who you are trying to cut.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield another 15 seconds to the gentleman.

Mr. PURSELL. It is interesting that today the Democrats are backing George Bush, but they did not back his budget back in January when he offered it. Now all of a sudden it is a new day. He introduced the budget here and the Democrats lined up to denounce it.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, the Republicans never even offered the President's budget.

Mr. PURSELL. The President offered a budget. The Democrats did not. We have an alternative. What are you afraid of, to give us a chance to offer an alternative?

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DOWNEY].

Mr. DOWNEY. Mr. Speaker, the Chamber is awash in the crocodile tears from the Republicans whining and crying that their too late budget will not be offered here on the floor.

Remember, the President wanted $500 billion in deficit reduction and you want to rewrite the rules.

Why, if the Republican budget entered the Indy 500, it would go 400 miles and they would want the checkered flag.

If the Republican budget was returning an opening kickoff, it would go 80 yards and you would want a touchdown.

Under the Republican rules, if you hit a triple it could be counted as a home run.

The way you want to do things in today's World Series under the Republicans, you win three games and the series is yours.

Face it, guys, you cannot cut it and you cannot cut it enough.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. Cox].

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, last night around midnight I appeared before the Rules Committee, and posited that we might consider part of the Republican package that was offered, the part of the Republican package which contains reform of the budget process.

Specifically, we asked that it should be in order to consider an amendment printed in the report of the Committee on Rules accompanying this resolution, that we amend the budget process that currently governs this House.

Right now the Congress is in violation of the law. The Congress has violated the law annually since the 1974 Budget Act was put in place.

We need a requirement that there be a budget first, before appropriations and before authorizations are considered in this Congress. We need an end to the waiver of the Budget Act; 62 times in the current Congress the Rules Committee has waived the Budget Act.

We need to enforce the deadlines in the law. The budget for this year, for fiscal year 1991, was due on April 15. April 15 is the same day that everyone's tax return is due. Everyone in America seems to manage to meet that deadline, but in the Congress we broke the law.

Reconciliation was to be completed by June 30. We are at that process now, well into fiscal year 1991.

The resolution being offered by the majority contains no real reform of the budget process. The Republicans offered real reform.

We are being told by this rule that we cannot amend the faulty offering of the Democratic Party, that we cannot participate in this debate, that we may represent half the American people, but as far as the majority party is concerned it is going to be business as usual. We are going to continue breaking the law.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, we have listened to the Republicans all year tell us about how they were prepared to make the tough choices to reduce the deficit. Now when the hour of truth has approached, they have failed to come forward. They have failed to come forward with a plan to reduce the deficit that meets the measure that their President has asked and that the Democrats have met, and that is $50 billion in reductions this year and $500 billion over the next 5 years.

This is the party whose policy has led us to a decade of deficits. Over the last 8 years they have doubled the national debt. They have increased us now to a point where we are the largest debtor nation in the world and our own national deficit starts to suffocate us as a nation, and yet when they were asked to come forward to meet the standards, to meet the test, they failed. Now they cry that it is unfair that they cannot change the rules. They want to change the rules so they will not have to cut the program.

They told us that they could eradicate the deficit. They told this Nation that they could go down to a balanced budget if only they were allowed to make the cuts. On their first attempt, they failed and they failed miserably. We ought to understand that. We ought to understand that under their proposal the deficit continues to increase over the next 5 years. We do not get to where this Nation wants to go in terms of deficit reduction under the proposal they sought.

Why not? Because they did not have the courage to pick and choose and make the difficult decisions that were necessary. The only thing they equate with courage is pain. They started out these deficit negotiations by putting on the table a $90 billion cut in Medicare. They thought it was courage to punish old people, to take away their health care, to deny them access to health care, to deny them access to hospitals. They finished up that budget summit by trying to take away social security from crippled children. They believe that is courage. That is a failure.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS].

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I will not respond to the previous comments, which were nonsense.

Mr. Speaker, what is going on in a Congress when a Member and Members who represent 87 million Americans are gagged in the most important debate of the year? House Republicans have offered a plan to cut the deficit by more than $400 billion without raising taxes, by freezing spending, by not raising taxes, and we are denied the right to debate or vote on that proposal.

Why? Does it make it too difficult for you to try to convince the American people that you are being forced to raise taxes, forced to raise cigarette taxes, forced to raise beer and wine taxes, forced to raise taxes on all Americans by not letting them hear about another plan that cuts over $400 billion without raising any taxes at all?

You are not being forced to raise taxes. It just so happens that the Democrats, who control this House, prefer to raise taxes rather than cut the bureaucracy or Federal programs or foreign aid, programs that are draining Americans dry. That is why a Republican alternative that cuts the deficit without raising taxes is embarrassing to Democrats and that is why you will not let it be debated.

It shatters the illusion that your hands are tied and that you have no choice but to make the American people sacrifice more because you will not agree to cut spending. The Republican plan stands for $400 billion of lasting deficit reduction.

You know, the history of tax increases in the 1980's, thanks to this Congress, proves that higher taxes do not lead to lower deficits but to more spending by Congress.

The Republican budget recognizes what the American people know only too well, the deficit is not a result of low taxes but of high spending. This whole process is a sham.

There is no legitimate reason why the Republican plan is being prohibited. Let us let the American people see where their representatives stand on taxes and deficits; let us defeat this rule and bring up a rule that allows us to vote on a plan that reduces the deficit instead of raising taxes.

Give the American people a choice between a $500 billion reduction with $160 billion in taxes, and a $410 billion reduction without new taxes, and we all know which one they would choose, and so do you and that is why you will not let this plan come to the floor.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Does the gentleman have 1 additional minute?

Mr. QUILLEN. I will be glad to yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT] is recognized for 2½ minutes.

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I oppose the rule for the following reasons: Republicans should have been allowed to bring an alternative. As a Democrat, I am saying that. No. 1, the process today is so important that the rule should be fully open, not closed.

America is a Government that includes, not excludes.

No. 2, Congress should literally roll up its sleeves, stay overnight if necessary, battle it out here and come out with a budget that is good for the American people.

No. 3, in my opinion, this budget is like putting a band-aid on an open wound of a fellow who just had open heart surgery. We are going to be back here again next year, we are not going to slow any of this red ink. Let us cut that rhetoric. And when the Senate is through with this bill—your spouse will desert you? They have a computer spitting out taxes by the minute.

But more importantly, I cannot and I will not support any new taxes. No. 1, I will not support any plan that increases premiums on Medicare. Our economy should be left alone.

No. 2, I will not support any plan that fails to take 1 red cent from foreign aid but picks on mom and dad.

No. 3, I will not support any plan that continues to defend Japan and Germany and the world while we're going bankrupt.

And I say today about all these so-called taxes on the rich, for every $1 in new taxes on the rich, the rich will pass $2 down to every poor person in America; every poor person in America will eat those taxes, the rich will pass them down. You can bet on it!

I had two amendments, and they were damned good. They would have put the bankers on the foreign subsidiaries, close loopholes, raise $1 billion, save American jobs, by repealing Section 903, and changing subpart F on foreign base income, without raising taxes.

But, no, no one wants to listen. But I will tell you something, the American people are not only listening, they are watching today, and they don't like what they see! I am a Democrat and I voted for that procedural vote to uphold our party.

I am saying to you today on the House floor: If this White House Chief Executive has any anatomy left, old swivel-hips will veto any tax measure. He promised it to the American people. He should keep his promise. If he vetoes this tax bill, this Democrat is going to vote to sustain that veto of a Republican President.

I will not vote for any new tax increases.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GEKAS].

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, Member of the House, in a few short days we again face the dramatic shutdown of Government. This will be the third time in the last month that we are facing that possibility. Yet, when I went before the Rules Committee in the company of others and proposed a budget process amendment that would end that Government shutdown for all time, a commonsense amendment, the Rules Committee flattened me down and shut the door.

My amendment would simply say that when we reach the end of the fiscal year on September 30, that automatically the next day that the Congress has not passed the budget, that automatically last year's budget goes into effect for such period of time as the Congress requires to pass a new budget. That would end forever the shutdown of Government, would allow Federal employees to know that they can go to their offices without the fear of being sent home without pay, with their offices shut down. And the American public will know that their Government is in session no matter what idiotic things that the Congress does in its failure to adopt a proper budget.

You are talking about amending the budget process. Why don't we start with one that will end the shutdown of Government? Can you think of a better way to say we are going to reform the budget process, we are going to prevent the Government from ending business arbitrarily?

And if you are after the President of the United States, as every speaker on this floor seems to indicate, you will adopt this amendment and forever end what you say is his tool for forcing action, namely causing a shutdown of Government.

Take it away from him. Make it automatic that the budget will be reenacted automatically the next day, on October 1, until we reach an agreement.

I am really disappointed in the Rules Committee for giving short shrift to this amendment.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD].

Mrs. UNSOELD. Mr. Speaker, I am excited about what we are going to do today in this House. I am excited about the Democratic budget proposal. It is a good deal for working America, and for our Nation's elderly. The Democratic proposal is going to make the rich pay their fair share and provides long-term investment in working America's future—in small business, in timber, and in homeownership.

Over the past decade the rich have gotten richer and working America has paid for it. Under the Republican agenda of the past decade, 9 out of 10 Americans pay more taxes. At the same time, the wealthiest Americans are paying $82,000 less in income taxes. Well, it is time to tell the richest 1 percent in this country that their party is over.

The American people have sent a clear message to the Bush administration and to Republicans—working families are not going to take it in the gut while, once again, the rich get away with sticking it to middle-class America.

Under the cry of "real reform" the Republicans want to continue to protect the wealthy.

The Democrats are not going to put up with this blatant favoritism for the rich. Our tax policy should no longer be a bail-out for the rich.

I am excited, this House of Representatives is going to stand up for working America today.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL].

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, there is intense disappointment on this side of the aisle that the Democrats are afraid to let us offer a substitute. We thought they were serious when they expected us to be competitive. Now we find that cowardice prevents them from allowing us to be competitive.

I recall early in the year when the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina, who is managing this rule, chided me for not offering the President's budget. I had, of course, offered it in the committee, and the chairman of the Rules Committtee voted against it, as did every Democrat on that committee.

But now, of course, when we want to offer something, when we have a proposition, he is not so generous. He is not chiding me now. I am chiding him. Thanks for the gracious opportunity for us to be able to present a Republican alternative.

The reason that we cannot present it, Mr. Speaker, is that it does not make the $500 billion mark that the summit agreed on. So that everybody in the world knows this, it must be said that neither does the Democrat alternative. If we take the CBO scoring on the IRS collections, and if we take the $1 billion point of order that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is going to make this afternoon, and if we reduce the $500 million of the Committee on Agriculture, we find the Democrat substitute and the committee bills both scoring below $500 billion.

Yet Republicans score under $500 billion, and they are not allowed to present their alternative.

We also find that the Rostenkowski substitute does not meet the dictates of the budget resolution. It overdoes taxes and underdoes entitlements. But it gets a free ride, too. The answer is that the only second-class citizens around here are Republicans. Republican are always suppressed.

Mr. Speaker, our friends on the Democrat side say that we have controlled tax policy over the last 20 years. We, the oppressed minority, the second class citizens, the despised Congressional underclass, have somehow created an unfair tax environment. When Democrats will not even let us make amendments on the floor of the House, how is the public going to believe that we have made any policy at all.

Mr. Speaker, the public does not believe that. It thinks that the Democrat majority are incompetent to manage fiscal policy. And yet Democrats will not give anybody else a chance even to introduce an amendment today.

Mr. Speaker, in addition the enforcement agreement of the summit has been seriously eroded in this particular package. As a matter of fact, we did not even see the enforcement section until last night. It may be worse than we suspect.

The extraneous provisions amendment, which has been made in order, has not appeared yet. By my own count I can find 116 extraneous provisions that our friends on the Committee on Rules, so far, have allowed to stay in this bill. They have let the special interests go into a feeding frenzy, and they will not let the taxpayers be heard on the Republican side.

All I have to say, Mr. Speaker, is that this is a shameful day in the history of the House, and I am embarrassed to be a witness in this process today.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER].

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, this is a very interesting debate, and, if we go back through the past 10 years, there have been two Republican budgets offered. One of them got one vote; our former colleague, Jack Kemp, voted for it. The other got some 30 votes. And on May 6, we considered a budget here, and our good friend, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] who just spoke, who is embarrassed to be here, refused to offer the President's budget. The day that the budgets were being offered, he refused to offer it. We asked unanimous consent that it was in order by the Committee on Rules to offer this budget when we adopted our Democratic budget.

Mr. Speaker, on September 11, the President stood in this House and said, "We've got to have $500 billion budget reduction in 5 years," and let me go back some 10 years ago. All of a sudden they are the protectors of the weak, and the old, and the sick and the Medicare. Had we accepted the cuts that had been proposed from the Commission in the last 10 years, we would have had $55 billion cuts in Medicare. And one of the first proposals that was sent to this House from David Stockman was to cut the $122 minimum Social Security to the oldest and sickest people in our society.

Mr. Speaker, I am ashamed of some of the shenanigans that took place in this House in the past 10 years. How dare they say that they do not get a fair shake when they get a chance to offer a budget which has been 10 years? They were afforded the responsibility, and they did not take it.

Now, Mr. Speaker, they say, "We want to special order. We want the wimp position. We don't want to get to the big numbers. We want to get to $400 billion," and, every time anybody else suggests that we move these numbers down, the President says, "I'll veto it, and I'll close the Government down."

I ask, "Will the President support your position?" I did not hear from the White House saying that the President will support a $400 billion over 5 year reduction plan.

"Shame on you. Shame on you."

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER].

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Speaker, I do not know where democracy is today on the floor of this House when we, the Republican side, cannot offer our budget package. We are told that it is because our numbers do not get up to $500 billion. Well, their numbers do not get up to $500 billion either.

However, Mr. Speaker, let us just take one part of their numbers. They have in there $50 billion raised by increasing the upper rate to 33 percent. That flies in the face of all of the data that the IRS has for the top 1 percent, 5 percent, 10 percent, 20 percent of taxpayers in the 1980's.

Yes, when rates were reduced, the take went up. Yes, we doubled our tax take during the 1980's, and those high brackets paid, not only substantially more taxes, but substantially higher share of the total.

I say, "You're going to get less $50 billion, not more $50 billion, and you'll have a $400 billion package as well."

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I will tell my colleagues where democracy is. It is right here on this House floor, and I am very proud of the Committee on Rules. They have stood firm. They have said, "If you guys over there want in the game, you're going to play by the rules."

Mr. Speaker, do my colleagues know anyone else that will let people into a game if they do not pledge to play by the rules?

But let me mention the next part. Get this:

The rules were written by their President. So, we have got a Democratic Committee on Rules enforcing the Republican President's rules, and they are yelling, "Unfair". We are saying the same group scored both proposals, and guess what? Theirs did not make it.

Not only that, thank goodness for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, because I say to anybody here, "I hope you look it up." We made a proposal to allow that side to bring forward the President's budget. They never did. Many Members on this side asked for unanimous consent to bring the President's budget to the floor so this side could debate it because they realized no one on that side was going to, and guess what? It was objected to.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think we can continue on saying that the rules are unfair when it is their side that wrote them and when the President has said this Government is suffering from a cancer, and it is called debt. We are trying today to do something about that cancer.

Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that we have not seen the same concern over there, and I would hope that many of the rich people would phone the White House and say, "Look, we're willing to pay our fair share."

I have the White House number right here in case they do not have it. It is 202-456-1414.

Mr. Speaker, a lot of the rich people, I know, are embarrassed that people are saying they cannot possibly do anything about this budget because the rich would have to pay more, and it would be awful.

Look. Trickle down did not work, and this is going to work, and we must move on this debt today, and I thank the Committee on Rules for making the rules stick.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARCHER].

Mr. ARCHER. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] has just spoken in great support of the President of the United States, and I am pleased to see the outpouring on the Democrat side in support of our President. What she and the other have not alluded to is the fact that the President also said that he would never accept the Democrat package that is before the House today.

□ 1350

Will they support the President on that position, when the President says that by increasing rates at the top, you necessarily must pull up rates on the lower and and middle income class people? I wonder whether or not their support of the President will extend to that part of his comments.

I would also say to the chairman of the Committee on the Budget that I made a very strong effort to work out an agreement with the chairman of our committee. The Senators, yes, have worked out a bipartisan package, but my chairman refused to negotiate with me on any compromise.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, today must be a rather humiliating day for my friends on the Republican side of the aisle. All credibility in deficit reduction is gone. They confess that their package is $100 billion short, 20 percent short. But it is really much more than that, because today we are dealing with reconciliation, which has to do with taxes and entitlements—the very structural changes that the Republican side of the aisle says it wants to reform. Most of their savings overall are in the discretionary spending area—in a future black box not in the structural area of entitlements and taxes.

Mr. Speaker, the reason the Republican package is really much more than 20 percent short is because their structural changes are only about half of reconciliation's assignment under the budget bill passed last week. You are only halfway there my friends on the Republican side, not 80 percent there. It is like claiming a touchdown in football after only 50 yards, not 80 yards. It's like claiming a home run on a 150-foot pop up. It's like claiming victory at the Indy after only 250 miles.

You walked away from your President and you walked away from the country. I do not see how you can come to this floor and talk about deficit reduction in the future.

The President was the umpire in this game, your President, the GOP President. He came here and said the rules are this: $500 billion, and not a penny less. And you brought a package here that is only half that in the entitlement area. Half, not 80 percent.

Mr. Speaker, I am ashamed of my friends on that side. You have let your President and the country down. You have not cut it. Not cut it enough.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SUNDQUIST].

Mr. SUNDQUIST. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I say to Members on this side of the aisle, shame on you. Shame on you. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] said your budget does not match $500 billion. Ours may not either, but ours is in real cuts.

Mr. Speaker, who defines the rules? The Committee on Rules by a vote of 9 to 4, 9 Democrats and 4 Republicans. Is that fair? You are afraid to let this House vote on a package that would cut spending without raising taxes. You are afraid of that. Shame on you.

Mr. Speaker, let us have the American people tell the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] at (202) 225-4431, let them respond to Mrs. SCHROEDER and say, "We want to cut spending and not raise taxes." 225-4431, the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER].

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHEUER].

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this rule. I rise to support the Democratic budget. It is a vast improvement over what we were looking at a week or two ago. It is fair. It increases taxes on the wealthiest among us by 1.7 percent.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that constitutes telling them the party is over. They are going to continue to do well. They are going to continue to contribute to the American economy, and I hope they will. It is best for all of us if they continue to prosper.

Mr. Speaker, I think we will have fulfilled a great obligation to the American people and to ourselves if we pass this budget. But that is only half the job. A major job of Members of the 102d Congress, starting next January, will be to squeeze out the waste and the foolishness and the silliness that is already in this budget that can be converted part to deficit reduction, further deficit reduction, and part to increasing domestic services that are desperately inadequate to the needs of our country in the last 10 years of this decade and going into the next millennium.

It is absolutely preposterous for us at a time when the Russians are cooperating with us in the Middle East, when the Warsaw Pact has disappeared, when there is no great Russian menace out there, it is preposterous for us to be spending money, billions and billions of dollars on star wars, on the B-2 bombers, on expensive missile systems. It is just silly, and it is dumb, and we should not be that dumb.

Mr. Speaker, there is $100 billion of waste to be squeezed out of the most incredibly inefficient, chaotic, disorganized health care system in the world. We ought to squeeze it out and apply that $100 billion of savings to providing long-term care for seniors, catastrophic for seniors, and education for our kids, who are vastly neglected.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the Democrats will not allow our plan to come to the floor. The Democrats will not allow a bill to come to the floor that will not raise taxes.

We have a bill that will meet the targets, as we should, without raising taxes. It will reduce spending by $400 billion over the next 5 years. But they will not let it come to the floor.

Their plan will raise the top tax rate to 33 percent. It will cost Americans more across the board. It is not a tax on the rich.

Let me give you an example. A married couple with two children who make $34,000 a year will pay $313.50 more in taxes under their plan. A single person making $21,000 a year will pay 5 percent more in taxes.

They are going to tax and tax and tax us all to death. The fact of the matter is, we have a plan that will work, that will not raise taxes, and they, under the rule, will not allow the American people even to hear it. I think it is a shame.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ALEXANDER].

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I do not know that Members can see this, but I have here a cartoon that was recently published in the Arkansas Gazette which shows the windows in the Oval Office open and chickens coming in to roost on the shoulders of the President, Mr. Bush.

On all of these chickens there are names, like S&L crisis, HUD, borrowing, national debt, deficits, energy policy, and so on. On each one of the little chickens there is a caricature of Mr. Reagan's face.

Mr. Speaker, we are here today because the chickens have come home to roost. The chickens of Reaganomics have brought us here today.

Mr. Bush is not the only head of state that has faced a crisis of confidence. Paradoxically, Mikhail Gorbachev faced a similar crisis when he came to power in the Soviet Union a few years ago. He told the Soviet people that his predecessors had lied to them about the glories of communism, that the policies of the past had failed, and that they had brought the Soviet Union to the brink of bankruptcy.

Mr. Bush has a similar opportunity, to tell the American people the truth about our fiscal crisis. I would hope that Mr. Bush would just flip back to a few years ago and pull out his speech on voodoo economics, so he could change the fiscal direction of this country.

Meanwhile, Congress must take an initiative, and the Democrats have an alternative that deals with the failures of the Reagan deficit. We need an economic policy based on truth and a tax policy based on fairness.

Mr. Speaker, I support the rule. I support the alternative that will be presented here today by the Democratic Party.

I am encouraged that more and more of the American people are coming to realize that Reaganomics was built on the quicksand of creative bookkeeping, rosy scenarios and the false promise that we could somehow have more for less.

We are left to pick through the economic wreckage wrought during the self-indulgent decade of the 1980's and the first order of business is dealing with the massive Reagan deficit.

It must be done. We all know it.

The current budget debate is not about whether to take action, but about the issue of fairness.

My litmus test for any plan to pay back the debt incurred during the 1980's is fairness—will all Americans participate or will we shove this burden on the backs of middle class working families, the elderly, farmers and students?

To be fair, the wealthiest among us must participate. We should also not restrict the pay back to our own people. We should insist that our allies do more to share the burden for their own defense and do a better job of collecting foreign debt.

And, we must pay closer attention to the job of managing the Government.

The President and Congress must follow the example of Mikhail Gorbachev. We must be willing to admit that the policies of the past have failed. And, in setting priorities for this new decade we should craft an economic policy based on truth; a tax policy based on fairness; a trade policy based on productivity; an energy policy based on self-reliance, and a national direction based on accepting the reality of a changing world in changing times.

It is vital to remember how we got to this point—so we will not repeat the mistakes of the past.

And, that must lead to a discussion of the history of Reaganomics. These policies were, frankly, irresistible to the American people because the theology of supply-side economics contained the impossible to deliver, but appealing, promise of somehow having it all, but not paying for it—a promise which could only be kept by massive borrowing.

In adopting this program, Congress reflected the strong support which Mr. Reagan and his feel good economic policies had among the people. As one who opposed that program—warning that a day of reckoning was coming—I confess that it was not the politically popular thing to do.

So, Congress must certainly accept the blame for enacting the Reagan program into law.

A decade of Reaganomics saw the national debt grow more than in all other Presidencies combined, but as this happened we did not heed the warnings.

In fact, there is a faction in both the Republican and Democratic Parties which even today ignores the lesson embodied in the failure of supply-side economics.

The gridlock we see in government today is symptomatic of a nation foundering because its policies are not working, and many of its leaders are stubbornly refusing to alter a dangerous course.

Reagan administration policies—deep slashes in revenues and huge increase in defense spending—could only be financed by using the national credit card—and use it we did, until the numbers were worn off.

Today, we face the mountain of debt created by that credit card philosophy. In fact, one of the largest increases in Government spending is interest on the debt that piled up as the result of the flawed economic policies of the past decade.

Congress has decreaed services and domestic programs in order to help meet interest payments on the debt, meaning less money to repair and maintain our infrastructure, educate and train our people and promote job growth.

There has been no other choice.

An energy policy was followed in the 1983's which saw us become more and more dependent on both foreign oil and foreign credit to buy that oil. This insane practice must stop. We must rely more on our own natural resources to, first, keep more money at home, and second, to insure that our economy is not held hostage by the likes of Saddam Hussein.

We also followed trade policies which opened this Nation to a flood of job-costing imports.

And, the free market agricultural policies of the 1980's sent both commodities and land prices skidding—leaving farmers unable to service their debt and driving many of them off the land.

Our tax policy was tilted toward the rich, but the money was horded. It did not, as supply-side proponents claimed, trickle down. It gushed up.

The atmosphere these policies created made millionaries of Wall Street speculators, but left businessmen on Main Street in pain. The buy-out mania fueled by junk bonds left many corporations so burdened with debt they could not continue to operate and we lost jobs.

Tax policies left us with an overheated real estate market and helped bring the savings and loan industry to its knees.

In Government, the policies resulted in debt and more debt. In failing to adopt a pay-as-you-go policy, our only choice in sustaining the Reagan policies was on credit. And, now the bill is due. The party's over.

Congress can adopt a fair pay back plan for the Reagan deficits. It should also spend more time on what are viewed as mundane tasks, including sound management of the bureaucracy.

The scandals in the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the savings and loan frauds are intolerable—and must serve as a clear call to restore good management to government.

And, we must tighten foreign debt collection procedures.

Frankly, both the Reagan and Bush administrations have done a lousy job of seeing to it that countries which own the U.S. money pay it back.

My feeling is those debts should be paid. Under an amendment which I sponsored in the House, known as the Alexander-Brooke amendment, foreign aid is cutoff if a country is 12 months in arrears in payment of its debt to this country.

The past two administrations, however, have been able to circumvent this requirement by rescheduling the debt which starts the clocks running again.

We can also see to it that our allies accept more of the burden for their own defense. The United States can't guard the world alone, nor can Uncle Sam be a global Sugar Daddy any longer.

Our first priority must be to craft a deficit pay back plan which will be fair, not falling more heavily on the middle class, working families of the Nation.

I hope we would take the other actions I have outlined to ensure that the decade of the 1990's sees a government on a sounder, fairer footing.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. SLATTERY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is today the Republicans have not been shut out, as they would like to make the American people believe. The fact is the President and the bipartisan congressional leadership have set the ground rules, and the ground rules are simple. We are going to achieve $40 billion in deficit reduction the first year and we are going to achieve $500 billion in deficit reduction over 5 years. Those were the ground rules, set by the President of the United States and the bipartisan congressional leadership.

□ 1400

The fact is today the other side does not have a plan available to submit to this body for a vote that achieves either of those basic objectives.

If the President of the United States wants to change the rules, and if we are going to talk about a $400 billion plan, then the Democrats can go back and come up with a whole lot less painful plan than what we are going to be talking about here today. All I am saying to my friends is let us live by the rules that were set by the summit agreement, $40 billion the first year, $500 billion over 5 years, and let us get on to the conference, and hopefully we can agree to a package that will be acceptable to the President. Only by so doing will we avoid shutting the Government down later this week.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, this is a debate on the rule, and I understood and expected this debate to be confined to a discussion of the rule by which we would consider legislation that would follow. I wonder, Mr. Speaker, is it in order for Members to continue to talk about everything but the rule and the basic fairness of the rule, or the points of order that are waived by this rule? I understand that virtually every point of order that we have in our rule book is waived on behalf of this rule.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, a point of order. This is not a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that there is much latitude in discussing a rule, because obviously if the House is going to discuss whether a rule should be defeated, the merits of the bill being made in order are relevant. So the Chair recognizes on both sides that there is latitude to discuss issues inside the bill itself.

Mr. ARMEY. May I make a further point for my personal clarification.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman have a further parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. ARMEY. I have a further parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ARMEY. Please forgive me, Mr. Speaker, but I have been confused. Does the President of the United States write any of the rules by which we conduct debate here, because I have heard repeatedly references to the rules written by the President?

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I object. The minority is using a point of order for an entirely different purpose.

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Speaker, I have heard several Members of this debate refer to the rules written by the President.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina is right in objecting to this as a parliamentary inquiry.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the Rules Committee for having done what it did in insisting that both sides play by exactly the same ground rules. For years the Republicans have wanted to compare apples to oranges, never wanting to meet the target.

And I would say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], who stood there and wept these crocodile tears about being shut out of the process, let me just say to him and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL], the minority leader, where were you when the House, the Democratic leadership, the Senate Democratic and Republican leadership were meeting just last week on the eventual budget plan that was adopted by this House and Senate? You were nowhere. You both refused to go. You do not get barred; you refuse to participate. Now when you will not participate on the rules, you want to have it your way. You cannot have it your way anymore. The United States cannot stand any more of your way after 10 years.

If rhetoric, Mr. Speaker, was fertilizer, this place would be growing 10-foot mushrooms.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. GLICKMAN].

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my serious concern about the rule as it affects the taxation of general aviation aircraft and the opportunity to offer an amendment to that particular provision.

Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my serious concern about this rule on H.R. 5835, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act. While I commend Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI for putting together a fair and responsible package, I am troubled that such a comprehensive package with thousands of provisions can only be supported or opposed in total with no opportunity for amendment. I was not eligible to offer an amendment which would have modified the general aviation "luxury" tax included in the Rostenkowski amendment.

In particular, I am concerned about the imposition of "luxury" taxes on general aviation aircraft. It would be more accurate to refer to this tax, inappropriately called a luxury tax, as a nuisance tax because it will contribute little to total deficit reduction. In the first year of the House package, the amount raised from airplane luxury taxes would be very small, yet the damage done to the aviation industry would be enormous. Further, small airplanes are not a luxury. They are not like expensive jewelry and furs, which are items of pure choice for purchase by the wealthy.

Airplanes are bona fide depreciable business assets purchased by individuals and companies to meet their transportation needs. In this era of airline deregulation when many communities, particularly small ones, have lost significant levels of scheduled airline service, many businesses and individuals have determined it makes economic sense to purchase a small plane.

Imposing a tax on these aircraft only deters their purchase. In turn, declining sales will contribute to further job cuts in an industry already beset by product liability costs and other unfavorable changes in tax laws. Unemployed American aviation workers, including those working for component suppliers, will have lower taxable incomes and may be forced to secure unemployment benefits, causing two additional drains on our revenue system. This spiral is unnecessary. And it will particularly be a problem for my district which is the headquarters of Beech, Cessna, and Learjet.

The best option is to not impose any luxury tax on airplanes. The future of the general aviation industry may be at stake. If this tax becomes law, the winners will be foreign manufacturers and foreign workers. The losers will be the thousands of American working men and women. Hopefully this obnoxious provision can be modified or repealed in a conference with the other body.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Democrats that for the last 36 years they have controlled this House. They control it now. Why blame the Republicans?

The President has sent word that he would veto the Ways and Means Democratic alternative if it is presented in the form that it is now.

Try to muzzle us. Do what you can to shut us up, but you cannot. Our beliefs are the beliefs of the American people, and we will win in the end.

Mr. Speaker, I urge a no vote on the previous question, and I urge that we defeat this rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BUNNING. Mr. Speaker, when you took the dies for the first time after you were elected Speaker of the House last year, you promised the Republicans—and I quote—"A spirit of cooperation and increased consultation."

Where is that spirit of cooperation and consultation now, Mr. Speaker?

The Members of the Republican Party here in the House of Representatives have unified behind an alternate budget proposal; a budget proposal which can meet the target of reducing the deficit by $500 billion over 5 years, without raising taxes.

And you will not allow the Republican Party to even bring this bill to the floor of the House for consideration.

That is not cooperation. That is not consultation.

That is not fair to the American taxpayer.

Mr. COLEMAN of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the reconciliation package put together by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. I voted for the budet resolution that failed on October 5. In voting for that resolution, I said that I did not like the budget summit package and that I would seek to change some aspects of it. As one Member who was not present at the summit negotiations, I felt that we could put together a package that was cleaner and fairer.

Eighty percent of the revenues in this package are identical to the provisions of the summit package the President urged all Americans to support. The remainder of the package simply asks those Americans who have profited so handsomely from the policies of the past 10 years to do their share to help us avoid another shutdown of the Government, another fall in the stock market, and a further erosion of confidence of the American people in their Government. Ten days after the defeat of the resolution which would have given us the summit package, we do have a better version.

It is a shame that the vote to pass this bill be a vote along party lines. I understand the frustration of many members of the Republican party because of their indecision over how to continue to shelter the incomes of the wealthiest Americans from the Tax Code. There is also uncertainty on the minority side as to which faction is running the White House on a day-to-day basis. But I cannot accept the criticism of this package when there is nothing to compare it to. Just as no one offered President George Bush's budget on the floor of the House in June, no one from the Republican Party has managed to put on the table any plan which achieves $500 billion in deficit reduction over 5 years.

This bill, like its predecessors, is far from perfect. For instance, I am not convinced that we need any capital gains exclusion, but if that is the price of compromise, fine. More importantly, this bill saves Medicare beneficiaries $20 billion over the cuts proposed by the summit agreement. That is a plain fact.

Of all the versions of the budget enforcement legislation circulating around Washington these days, this one does the most to help those who are most vulnerable in our society. It increases earned income tax credits for the working poor. This bill will protect rural hospitals as the summit plan did not. It will increase payments to rural hospitals by $240 million for each of the next 5 years. Under this plan, institutions like the hospitals in Van Horn, Kermit, Monahans, and Pecos, TX, will see the differential in their annual reimbursement rates lowered, so that they will no longer have to face the prospect of cutting back on their services to at-risk populations, or closing down altogether. If the cost of doing that is the elimination of the bubble whereby those with hundreds of thousands of dollars in income paid lower rates than the middle class, I will take that trade. If we can avoid driving a wedge between the young and the elderly, or between urban and rural Americans by imposing a surcharge on taxable income above $1 million, then I think that my constituents will accept that.

The passage of this bill does not conclude the budget process, it simply moves it forward. This allows us to move to a conference with the Senate and to make further refinements. What is the alternative—to vote "no" on everything that anyone proposes and then to try to con voters into thinking that the financial catastrophe which follows is someone else's fault? That sort of logic is what exasperates the American people—they are sick and tired of bickering and they are insulted by politicians telling them they can have it all for free.

I urge support for this package in the name of bringing back some progressivity and fairness to our tax system.

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I sat on the Budget Committee in this body for 10 years. I must say that I have heard nothing this morning that I have not heard before from the minority.

I sat there for 10 years, year in and year out, and heard our party criticized, heard when we had a President, him criticized about balancing the budget, we need to cut this, we need to cut that. Yet, invariably they would never, or most of the time would never have an alternative. This is just more of the same.

The rules, as has been pointed out here this morning, were that we were going to try. The President said, the leadership in the Senate, both minority and majority, the leadership in the House, both the majority and the minority said that we were going to cut by either cutting programs or raising revenue, we were going to try to balance this budget. All Members know, Democrats and Republicans, that if this country is going to continue to survive, economically, if we are going to continue to be able to provide the standard of living that we have become accustomed to for the citizens of our country, if we are going to continue to remain the leaders of the free world, and to continue to do things like we are doing in Saudi Arabia and stand up for freedom, we are going to have to balance this budget.

The minority has been given that opportunity. Unfortunately, and I regret very much they have simply failed. They are not willing to get out front. They are not willing to exert any pain. They are not willing to say no.

We all know that there are two ways to balance a budget. We can either take in more revenue or spend less. They are not willing to make these decisions.

This is a fair rule. It is a rule that is not only you might say a rule of the Rules Committee, but it is a rule of the administration.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the question be put on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on ordering the previous question.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 241, nays 184, not voting 8, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Morrison of Connecticut for, with Mr. Thomas of California against.

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I was unavoidably absent for rollcall No. 469, consideration of the rule for H.R. 5422, Intelligence Authorization Act and rollcall No. 470, table motion to appeal the ruling of the chair. Had I been here, I would have cast the following votes: "aye" and "aye."

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 5229, DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORTATION AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS ACT, 1991

Mr. LEHMAN of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tonight to file a conference report on the bill (H.R. 5229) making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1991, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MURTHA). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 580, STUDENT RIGHT-TO-KNOW AND CAMPUS SECURITY ACT

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following conference report and statement on the Senate bill (S. 580) to require institutions of higher education receiving financial assistance to provide certain information with respect to the graduation rates of student-athletes at such institutions:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 101-883)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 580), to require institutions of higher education receiving Federal financial assistance to provide certain information with respect to the graduation rates of student-athletes at such institutions, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of Senate to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment, insert the following:

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Student Right-To-Know and Campus Security Act".

TITLE I—STUDENT RIGHT-TO-KNOW

SEC. 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Student Right-To-Know Act".

SEC. 102. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) education is fundamental to the development of individual citizens and the progress of the Nation as a whole;

(2) there is increasing concern among citizens, educators, and public officials regarding the academic performance of students at institutions of higher education;

(3) a recent study by the National Institute of Independent Colleges and Universities found that just 43 percent of students attending 4-year public colleges and universities and 54 percent of students entering private institutions graduated within 6 years of enrolling;

(4) the academic performance of student athletes, especially student athletes receiving football and basketball scholarships, has been a source of great concern in recent years;

(5) more than 10,000 athletic scholarships are provided annually by institutions of higher education;

(6) prospective students and prospective student athletes should be aware of the educational commitments of an institution of higher education; and

(7) knowledge of graduation rates would help prospective students and prospective student athletes make an informed judgment about the educational benefits available at a given institution of higher education.

SEC. 103. ADDITIONAL GENERAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO COMPLETION OR GRADUATION.

(a) DISCLOSURE OF COMPLETION OR GRADUATION RATES.—Section 485(a)(1) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1092(a)(1)) (in this Act referred to as the "Act") is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (J);

(2) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (K) and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraph:

"(L) the completion or graduation rate of certificate- or degree-seeking, full-time students entering such institutions.".

(b) CONSTRUCTION OF DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.—Section 485(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1092(a)) is further amended by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) In calculating the completion or graduation rate under subparagraph (L) of paragraph (1) of this subsection or under subsection (e), a student shall be counted as a completion or graduation if, within 150 percent of the normal time for completion of or graduation from the program, the student has completed or graduated from the program, or enrolled in any program of an eligible institution for which the prior program provides substantial preparation. The information required to be disclosed under such subparagraph—

"(A) shall be available beginning on July 1, 1993, and each year thereafter to current and prospective students prior to enrolling or entering into any financial obligation;

"(B) shall cover the one-year period ending on June 30 of the preceding year; and

"(C) shall be updated not less than biennially.

"(4) For purposes of this section, institutions may exclude from the information disclosed in accordance with subparagraph (L) of paragraph (1) the completion or graduation rates of students who leave school to serve in the armed services, on official church missions, or with a recognized foreign aid service of the Federal Government.".

(c) ANALYSIS OF POTENTIAL INSTITUTIONAL OUTCOMES.—(1) In conjunction with representatives of institutions of higher education, the Secretary shall analyze the feasibility and desirability of making available to students and potential students—

(A) the completion or graduation rate of individuals at an institution broken down by program or field of study;

(B) the completion or graduation rate of an institution reported by individual schools or academic divisions within the institution;

(C) the rate at which individuals who complete or graduate from the program of an institution pass applicable licensure or certification examinations required for employment in a particular vocation, trade, or professional field;

(D) the rate at which individuals who complete or graduate from an occupationally specific program and who enter the labor market following completion of or graduation from such a program obtain employment in the occupation for which they are trained; and

(E) other institutional outcomes that may be appropriate.

(2) In calculating the completion or graduation rate under paragraph (1), a student shall be counted as a completion or graduation if, within 150 percent of the normal time for completion of or graduation from the program, the student has completed or graduated from the program, or enrolled in any program of an eligible institution for which the prior program provides substantial preparation.

(d) REPORT.—The Secretary shall submit a report to the appropriate committees of Congress before August 1, 1991 on the analysis conducted pursuant to subsection (c).

SEC. 104. REPORTING REQUIREMENTS FOR INSTITUTIONS OF HIGHER EDUCATION.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Section 485 of the Act (20 U.S.C. 1092) (as amended by section 103) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(e) DISCLOSURES REQUIRED WITH RESPECT TO ATHLETICALLY RELATED STUDENT AID.—(1) Each institution of higher education which participates in any program under this title and is attended by students receiving athletically related student aid shall annually submit a report to the Secretary which contains—

"(A) the number of students at the institution of higher education who received athletically related student aid broken down by race and sex in the following sports: basketball, football, baseball, cross country/track, and all other sports combined;

"(B) the number of students at the institution of higher education, broken down by race and sex;

"(C) the completion or graduation rate for students at the institution of higher education who received athletically related student aid broken down by race and sex in the following sports: basketball, football, baseball, cross country/track and all other sports combined;

"(D) the completion or graduation rate for students at the institution of higher education, broken down by race and sex;

"(E) the average completion or graduation rate for the 4 most recent completing or graduating classes of students at the institution of higher education who received athletically related student aid broken down by race and sex in the following categories: basketball, football, baseball, cross country/track, and all other sports combined; and

"(F) the average completion or graduation rate for the 4 most recent completing or graduating classes of students at the institution of higher education broken down by race and sex.

"(2) When an institution described in paragraph (1) of this subsection offers a potential student athlete athletically related student aid, such institution shall provide to the student and his parents, his guidance counselor, and coach the information contained in the report submitted by such institution pursuant to paragraph (1).

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, institutions may exclude from the reporting requirements under paragraphs (1) and (2) the completion or graduation rates of students and student athletes who leave school to serve in the armed services, on official church missions, or with a recognized foreign aid service of the Federal Government.

"(4) Each institution of higher education described in paragraph (1) may provide supplemental information to students and the Secretary showing the completion or graduation rate when such completion or graduation rate includes students transferring into and out of such institution.

"(5) The Secretary, using the reports submitted under this subsection, shall compile and publish a report containing the information required under paragraph (1) broken down by—

"(A) individual institutions of higher education; and

"(B) athletic conferences recognized by the National Collegiate Athletic Association and the National Association of Intercollegiate Athletics.

"(6) The Secretary shall waive the requirements of this subsection for any institution of higher education that is a member of an athletic association or athletic conference that has voluntarily published completion or graduation rate data or has agreed to publish data that, in the opinion of the Secretary, is substantially comparable to the information required under this subsection.

"(7) The Secretary, in conjunction with the National Junior College Athletic Association, shall develop and obtain data on completion or graduation rates from two-year colleges that award athletically related student aid. Such data shall, to the extent practicable, be consistent with the reporting requirements set forth in this section.

"(8) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'athletically related student aid' means any scholarship, grant, or other form of financial assistance the terms of which require the recipient to participate in a program of intercollegiate athletics at an institution of higher education in order to be eligible to receive such assistance.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect July 1, 1992, except that the first report to the Secretary of Education shall be due on July 1, 1993.

SEC. 105. ANALYSIS OF ATHLETIC ACTIVITY REVENUES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary, in conjunction with institutions of higher education and collegiate athletic associations, shall analyze the feasibility of and make recommendations regarding a requirement that institutions of higher education compile and report on the revenues derived and expenditures made (per sport) by such institutions' athletic department and intercollegiate athletic activities.

(b) REPORTS.—The Secretary shall prepare a report on the activities described in subsection (a) and transmit such report to the appropriate committees of Congress before April 1, 1991.

TITLE II—CRIME AWARENESS AND CAMPUS SECURITY

SEC. 201. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Crime Awareness and Campus Security Act of 1990".

SEC. 202. FINDINGS.

The Congress finds that—

(1) the reported incidence of crime, particularly violent crime, on some college campuses has steadily risen in recent years;

(2) although annual "National Campus Violence Surveys" indicate that roughly 80 percent of campus crimes are committed by a student upon another student and that approximately 95 percent of the campus crimes that are violent are alcohol- or drug-related, there are currently no comprehensive data on campus crimes;

(3) out of 8,000 postsecondary institutions participating in Federal student aid programs, only 352 colleges and universities voluntarily provide crime statistics directly through the Uniform Crime Report of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, and other institutions report data indirectly, through local police agencies or States, in a manner that does not permit campus statistics to be separated;

(4) several State legislatures have adopted or are considering legislation to require reporting of campus crime statistics and dissemination of security practices and procedures, but the bills are not uniform in their requirements and standards;

(5) students and employees of institutions of higher education should be aware of the incidence of crime on campus and policies and procedures to prevent crime or to report occurrences of crime;

(6) applicants for enrollment at a college or university, and their parents, should have access to information about the crime statistics of that institution and its security policies and procedures; and

(7) while many institutions have established crime preventive measures to increase the safety of campuses, there is a clear need—

(A) to encourage the development on all campuses of security policies and procedures;

(B) for uniformity and consistency in the reporting of crimes on campus; and

(C) to encourage the development of policies and procedures to address sexual assaults and racial violence on college campuses.

SEC. 203. DISCLOSURE OF DISCIPLINARY PROCEEDING OUTCOMES TO CRIME VICTIMS.

Section 438(b) of the General Education Provisions Act (20 U.S.C. 1232g(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6) Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit an institution of postsecondary education from disclosing, to an alleged victim of any crime of violence (as that term is defined in section 16 of title 18, United States Code), the results of any disciplinary proceeding conducted by such institution against the alleged perpetrator of such crime with respect to such crime.".

SEC. 204. DISCLOSURE OF CAMPUS SECURITY POLICY AND CAMPUS CRIME STATISTICS.

(a) DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS.—Section 485 of the Act (20 U.S.C. 1092) (as amended by sections 103 and 104) is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f) DISCLOSURE OF CAMPUS SECURITY POLICY AND CAMPUS CRIME STATISTICS.—(1) Each eligible institution participating in any program under this title shall on September 1, 1991, begin to collect the following information with respect to campus crime statistics and campus security policies of that institution, and beginning September 1, 1992, and each year thereafter, prepare, publish, and distribute, through appropriate publications or mailings, to all current students and employees, and to any applicant for enrollment or employment upon request, an annual security report containing at least the following information with respect to the campus security policies and campus crime statistics of that institution:

"(A) A statement of current campus policies regarding procedures and facilities for students and others to report criminal actions or other emergencies occurring on campus and policies concerning the institution's response to such reports.

"(B) A statement of current policies concerning security and access to campus facilities, including campus residences, and security considerations used in the maintenance of campus facilities.

"(C) A statement of current policies concerning campus law enforcement, including—

"(i) the enforcement authority of security personnel, including their working relationship with State and local police agencies; and

"(ii) policies which encourage accurate and prompt reporting of all crimes to the campus police and the appropriate police agencies.

"(D) A description of the type and frequency of programs designed to inform students and employees about campus security procedures and practices and to encourage students and employees to be responsible for their own security and the security of others.

"(E) A description of programs designed to inform students and employees about the prevention of crimes.

"(F) Statistics concerning the occurrence on campus, during the most recent school year, and during the 2 preceding school years for which data are available, of the following criminal offenses reported to campus security authorities or local police agencies—

"(i) murder;

"(ii) rape;

"(iii) robbery;

"(iv) aggravated assault;

"(v) burglary; and

"(vi) motor vehicle theft.

"(G) A statement of policy concerning the monitoring and recording through local police agencies of criminal activity at off-campus student organizations which are recognized by the institution and that are engaged in by students attending the institution, including those student organizations with off-campus housing facilities.

"(H) Statistics concerning the number of arrests for the following crimes occurring on campus:

"(i) liquor law violations;

"(ii) drug abuse violations; and

"(iii) weapons possessions.

"(I) A statement of policy regarding the possession, use, and sale of alcoholic beverages and enforcement of State underage drinking laws and a statement of policy regarding the possession, use, and sale of illegal drugs and enforcement of Federal and State drug laws and a description of any drug or alcohol abuse education programs as required under section 1213 of this Act.

"(2) Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to authorize the Secretary to require particular policies, procedures, or practices by institutions of higher education with respect to campus crimes or campus security.

"(3) Each institution participating in any program under this title shall make timely reports to the campus community on crimes considered to be a threat to other students and employees described in paragraph (1)(F) that are reported to campus security or local law police agencies. Such reports shall be provided to students and employees in a manner that is timely and that will aid in the prevention of similar occurrences.

"(4) Upon the request of the Secretary, each institution participating in any program under this title shall submit to the Secretary a copy of the statistics required to be made available under paragraphs (1)(F) and (1)(H). The Secretary shall—

"(A) review such statistics and report to the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate on campus crime statistics by September 1, 1995; and

"(B) in coordination with representatives of institutions of higher education, identify exemplary campus security policies, procedures, and practices and disseminate information concerning those policies, procedures, and practices that have proven effective in the reduction of campus crime.

"(5)(A) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'campus' includes—

"(i) any building or property owned or controlled by the institution of higher education within the same reasonably contiguous geographic area and used by the institution in direct support of, or related to its educational purposes; or

"(ii) any building or property owned or controlled by student organizations recognized by the institution.

"(B) In cases where branch campuses of an institution of higher education, schools within an institution of higher education, or administrative divisions within an institution are not within a reasonably contiguous geographic area, such entities shall be considered separate campuses for purposes of the reporting requirements of this section.

"(6) The statistics described in paragraphs (1)(F) and (1)(H) shall be compiled in accordance with the definitions used in the uniform crime reporting system of the Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, and the modifications in such definitions as implemented pursuant to the Hate Crime Statistics Act.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect on September 1, 1991, except that the requirement of section 485(f)(1) (F) and (H) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (as added by this section) shall be applied to require statistics with respect to school years preceding the date of enactment of this Act only to the extent that data concerning such years is reasonably available.

SEC. 205. PROGRAM PARTICIPATION AGREEMENT REQUIREMENTS.

Section 487(a) of the Act (20 U.S.C. 1094(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(12) The institution certifies that—

"(A) the institution has established a campus security policy; and

"(B) the institution has complied with the disclosure requirements of section 485(f).".

TITLE III—CALCULATION OF DEFAULT RATES

SEC. 301. CALCULATION OF DEFAULT RATES.

Section 435 of the Act (20 U.S.C. 1085) is amended—

(1) in subsection (l), by striking out "The term" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in subsection (m), the term"; and

(2) in subsection (m), by inserting immediately after the first sentence the following: "In determining the number of students who default before the end of such fiscal year, the Secretary shall include only loans for which the Secretary or a guaranty agency has paid claims for insurance, and, in calculating the cohort default rate, exclude any loans which, due to improper servicing or collection, would result in an inaccurate or incomplete calculation of the cohort default rate.".

TITLE IV—CONFORMING REGULATIONS

SEC. 401. CONFORMING REGULATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary is authorized to issue regulations to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(b) SUSPENSION.—Subparagraphs (c) through (f) of section 668.44 of title 34, Code of Federal Regulations, are suspended.

And the Senate agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 580) to require institutions of higher education receiving Federal financial assistance to provide certain information with respect to graduation rates of student-athletes at such institutions, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate amendment struck out all of the House amendment after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate with an amendment which is a substitute for the Senate amendment and the House amendment. The differences between the House amendment, the Senate amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

TITLE

The Senate bill provides that this act requires institutions of higher education receiving federal financial assistance provide certain information on graduation rates of student athletes.

The House amendment provides the same description.

House recedes with amendment modifying language that institutions of higher education to disclose graduation rates and inform students and employees of campus crime statistics and for other educational purposes.

1. Short title of title I: The Senate bill Title I is entitled "Student and Student Athlete Right-To-Know."

The House amendment is entitled "Student Athlete Right-To-Know Act."

The House recedes with an amendment entitling Title I "Student Right-To-Know."

2. Findings: The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, contains findings about the graduations rates of students and student athletes receiving football and basketball scholarships at institutions of higher education.

The amendment, but not the Senate bill, includes families among those who would be assisted by knowledge of graduation rates.

The Senate and House agreed to blend these provisions.

3. Additional general disclosure requirements: The Senate bill uses the term "graduation rate."

The House amendment uses the term "completion or graduation rate."

The Senate recedes.

(A) Graduation rates: The Senate bill requires information on graduation rates be made available starting Oct. 1, 1993.

The House amendment requires the same information be made available starting July 1, 1992.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to make the information available beginning on July 1, 1993.

(B) The Senate bill requires disclosure of graduation rates for a one-year period ending on Sept. 30 of preceding year.

The House bill also requires the disclosure of graduation rates for a one-year period ending on June 30 of the preceding year.

The Senate recedes.

4. Permissible exclusions: The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, includes a provision that the graduation or completion rate information may exclude completion rates of students who leave to serve in the military, church missions, or foreign service.

The House recedes.

5. Analysis of potential institutional outcomes: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires the Secretary to establish standard definitions and methodologies for measuring institutional outcomes.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that the Secretary analyze the desirability and feasibility of making available to students this information and other institutional outcomes that may be appropriate. The Senate also includes an amendment to suspend and revise current Department of Education regulations, 34 CFR 668.44(c) through (f), and in Appendix A, as published in the Federal Register June 5, 1989. This amendment is found as Title IV in the Conference bill.

In suspending the disclosure regulations issued in June 1989, the conferees do not in any ways disagree with the intent of the regulations. In fact, the conferees applaud the Department of Education's attempt to address this important issue and agree that students who enroll in education programs whose primary mission is career training should be provided with such program's placement and graduation rates.

However, the conferees see particular problems with 34 CFR 668.44(c) through (f) and in Appendix A. This regulation, which did not go through the normal rulemaking process, has several flaws. In particular, the conferees are concerned that students who enter a career training program, successfully complete the program, and then choose to continue their education rather than seek employment would appear an a nonplacement on the disclosure form. Such students should be viewed as success stories, not failures. The conferees are aware that there are several other problems with the current disclosure forms, including the question of separating program completion rates and job placement rates, and which academic programs should or should not be covered.

The proposed study would enable the gathering of the necessary information upon which to base a more appropriate disclosure system. By exploring a variety of graduation rate disclosures, placement rates, and the rates of passage of applicable licensure or certification examinations, the conferees found merit in setting aside the regulation. The successful and timely completion of the study will allow the full consideration of these issues during the reauthorization of the Higher Education Admendments. The conferees look forward to the Department's report.

6. Report to Congress: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires the Secretary to submit a report to the appropriate committees of Congress on the implementation of the standard definitions and methodologies by October 1, 1991.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that the report shall be submitted by August 1, 1991.

7. Reporting requirements: The Senate bill establishes reporting requirements for institutions of higher education to disclose the number of students receiving athletic-related student financial aid in football, basketball and all other sports combined.

The House amendment adds to the list of sports baseball, ice hockey, and cross country/track.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to delete ice hockey from the list of sports.

8. All other sports combined: The provisions are identical.

9. Graduation rates of student athletes receiving aid: The Senate bill requires the report to contain the average graduation rate, by sex and by race, of students receiving athletic-related financial aid in the four most recent graduating classes who participated in basketball and football.

The House amendment also requires the report to contain this information and adds baseball, cross/country track, ice hockey and all other sports to the list.

The Senate recedes with an amendment striking ice hockey from the list.

10. Notification: The provisions are identical.

11. Permissible exclusions: The Senate bill allows institutions of higher education to exclude graduation information from the report in special circumstances seincluding the armed services, church missions, and foreign service.

The House amendment permits exclusion of graduation information from the report in special circumstances.

The House recedes.

12. Inclusion of transfers—the graduation rate: The provisions are identical.

13. Compilation of data: Both bills require the Secretary to compile and publish a report by institutions of higher education and athletic conferences.

14. Availability of report: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires the Secretary to make his report available upon request to any person or secondary school.

The House recedes. The managers intend that the Secretary shall distribute the report to the public upon request.

15. Graduation rates for two-year colleges: The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, requires the Secretary, along with the Junior College Athletic Association, to develop and obtain graduation rates from 2-year colleges and that such data shall, to the extent practicable, be consistent with reporting requirements in this section.

The House recedes with a technical amendment.

16. Definition: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, defines the term "graduation rate".

The House recedes.

17. Effective date: The Senate bill has an effective date of October 1, 1993.

The House amendment has an effective date of July 1, 1991.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to make the effective date July 1, 1992 and that the first report to the Secretary shall be due on July 1, 1993.

18. Analysis of athletic activity revenues: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, contains a section on Disclosure of Athletic Activity Revenues and Expenditures requiring institutions of higher education that offer athletically-related student aid to disclose its revenues derived from athletic activities and from activities as a whole. The House amendment but not the Senate bill also requires the Secretary to annually collect and compile these disclosures and make them available for public inspection.

The House recedes with an amendment that the section be called Analysis of Athletic Activity Revenues, that the Secretary shall, in conjunction with institutes of higher education, analyze the feasibility and desirability of compiling and reporting this information, and that the report shall be delivered to the appropriate committees of Congress by April 1, 1991.

In making the report, the Senate conferees are interested in receiving recommendations as to the desirability of requiring institutions of higher education to report their athletic revenues and expenditures. While neither the House of Representatives nor the Senate has held hearings on this issue. The House feels that this legislation would greatly increase public overshight of athletic programs at institutions of higher education. The Senate has not previously considered this issue and is undecided as to whether this is an appropriate federal role.

TITLE II: CRIME AWARENESS AND CAMPUS SECURITY

19. Findings: Both the House amendment and Senate bill include findings.

20. Sexual assualt and racial violence: The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, includes among its finding a need to encourage schools to develop policies and procedures addressing sexual assault and racial violence on college campuses.

The House recedes.

21. Eligibility: The Senate bill and the House amendment both require institutions receiving student aid to certify that it has a security policy and has complied with the disclosure requirements of this title.

22. Date for distribution: The Senate bill requires institutions of higher education to prepare, publish and distribute campus security policy and campus crime statistics beginning on October 1, 1993.

The House amendment requires the preparation, publication and distribution of the same information begin on July 1, 1992.

The House recedes with an amendment that the collection of data by institutions of higher education shall begin on September 1, 1991 and the publication and distribution to students and employees of this information shall begin on September 1, 1992 and each year thereafter.

23. Disclosure of campus security policy: The Senate bill requires disclosure of current campus policies for reporting crimes with a "detailed description of campus security policy and procedures." The House amendment requires the same disclosure in a "statement of policy."

The Senate recedes. The managers recognize that many institutions currently incorporate statements of policies as part of other campus publications, such as a student handbook or institution's catalogue. The managers do not intend to require institutions to develop separate documents if the required information is provided in a publication that is made available as required by this legislation. However, the required reported information must be presented to the student collectively in a single section of such publication.

24. Security of campus facilities: The Senate bill requires a statement of current policies about security and access to campus facilities and considerations used in maintenance of the facilities and clarifies that campus residences area considered campus facilities for purposes of this section.

The House amendment also requires disclosure of this information but does not make the same clarification for campus residences.

The Senate recedes with an amendment specifying that campus facilities include campus residences.

25. Campus law enforcement: The Senate bill and the House amendment require that the security report include current policies on campus law enforcement, the working relationship between campus and local police and prompt reporting.

The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires a statement of policy concerning the enforcement authority of campus security personnel.

The Senate recedes. The managers intend that the statement of policy with respect to enforcement authority specifically indicate whether or not campus security personnel have the designated police authority to arrest individuals.

26. Student security responsibility: The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, requires a description of the type and frequency of programs that informs students and employees of campus security procedures and encourages them to be responsible for their own security.

The House recedes.

27. Crime prevention: The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, requires a description of programs that inform students and employees about crime prevention.

The House recedes.

28. Statistics on violent crimes: The Senate bill and the House amendment require that the report include statistics on the occurrence of violent crimes.

(a) The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, list examples of crimes to be statistically reported. The House amendment lists eight types of crimes and requires institutions of higher education to disclose statistics on off-campus crimes against students.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to delete larceny and arson from the categories of crimes.

(b) The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, requires disclosure of statistics on off-campus crimes against students.

The Senate recedes.

(c) The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires disclosure of crime statistics for the preceding two years.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that clarifies that statistics for the preceding two years be reported if the data is available.

29. Off-campus facilities: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, clarifies that fraternities are among the off-campus student organizations for which a crime-prevention policy must be provided.

The Senate bill contains a general provision of off-campus housing of student organizations as recognized by the institution.

The House recedes with an amendment clarifying the language.

30. Limitation of Secretary: The provisions are identical.

31. Arrest statistics: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires schools to report statistics on the number of arrests for five specified categories of crimes on campus.

The Senate recedes with an amendment striking vandalism and disorderly conduct from the categories of crimes.

32. Alcoholic beverages: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires a statement of policy on the possession, use and sale of alcoholic beverages, enforcement of underage drinking laws, and a description of alcoholic beverages, enforcement of underage drinking laws, and a description of alcohol abuse education programs provided by the institution.

33. Illegal drugs: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires schools to make a statement of policy on the possession, use and sale of illegal drugs, enforcement of federal and state drug laws, and a description of drug abuse education programs provided by the institution.

The Senate recedes on both 32 and 33 with an amendment combining the provisions and requiring that the information provided to students be identical to that required under 20 U.S.C. section 1145g of the Higher Education Act.

34(a). Timely reports: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires institutions of higher education to make timely crime reports of certain crimes to the campus community.

The Senate recedes.

34(b). The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, specifies that such reports shall be distributed in a timely manner through publication and media to students and employees.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that the information be provided to students in a way that will protect the privacy of the individuals involved in the incident. The managers note that certain crime victims, especially victims of sexual assault, may be unwilling to report crimes if they feel their identity will be made public. The managers expect institutions of higher education to make every effort to protect the privacy rights of students who are victims of crime.

35(a). Secretary's responsibilities: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires each institution submit annually to the Secretary a copy of their crime statistics.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that the institution will make the submission upon the request of the Secretary.

35(b). The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires the Secretary to regularly review the statistics and report to the appropriate committees of Congress by September 1, 1995.

The Senate recedes with an amendment striking the requirement that the review occur regularly but requiring the Secretary to report to the Congress. The managers intend this report include annual data on campus crime, trends reflected by changes in this data, specifically regarding patterns of crime, and patterns of reduced campus crime due to specific campus security policies.

35(c). The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires the Secretary to, in coordination with representatives of institutions of higher education, survey campus security policies, procedures and practices on security and distribute information on those that effectively reduce campus crime.

The Senate recedes with an amendment requiring the Secretary to identify exemplary security policies, procedures and practices.

36. Definition—Campus: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, defines the term "campus".

The Senate recedes with an amendment clarifying that facilities or campuses at some distance from the main campus are also covered by this Act.

37. Definitions of crimes: The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, requires that the crime statistics be compiled in accordance with definitions used in the uniform crime reporting system of the Department of Justice and the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that the Secretary develop, with the assistance of the Attorney General, information regarding the definitions written in clear and comprehensible language and to distribute this information to institutions of higher education. The managers note that the information will be essential to institutions as they implement these requirements and expect the Secretary and the Attorney General to make this information available promptly.

38. Effective date: The Senate bill has an effective date of October 1, 1992 for Title II.

The House amendment has an effective date of July 1, 1992 for Title II. The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, waives the requirements of the Act for the years preceding the Act to the extent that the data is unavailable.

The House recedes with an amendment making the effective date September 1, 1991.

TITLE III—CALCULATION OF DEFAULT RATES

39. The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, includes Title III Calculation of Default Rates. The provision changes the definition of "default" to the number of students who default before the end of the fiscal year and that the Secretary shall, in calculating the cohort default rate, exclude those loans that have undergone improper servicing or collection.

The House recedes with a technical amendment clarifying the language.

TITLE IV—CONFORMING REGULATIONS

40. The conferees agreed to add Title IV conforming regulations. This provision authorizes the Secretary to issue regulations to carry out this legislation and suspends 34 CFR 668.44 (c) through (f).

CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 1939, TAFT INSTITUTE REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. WILLIAMS submitted the following conference report and statement on the Senate bill (S. 1939) to extend the authorization of appropriations for the Taft Institute:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. 101-884)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1939) to extend the authorization of appropriations for the Taft Institute, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from the disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF AUTHORIZATION.

Section 1373 of the Education Amendments of 1980 is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 1373. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subpart:

"(1) $700,000 for fiscal year 1991;

"(2) $550,000 for fiscal year 1992;

"(1) $325,000 for fiscal year 1993; and

"(1) $150,000 for fiscal year 1994.

No funds are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subpart for fiscal year 1995 or any succeeding fiscal year.".

SEC. 2. TREATMENT OF FISCAL YEAR 1990 CONTRIBUTIONS.

For purposes of complying with the matching requirements of section 1372(b) of the Education Amendments of 1980, private contributions received by the Taft Institute for fiscal year 1990 may be treated as private contributions received by the Institute for fiscal year 1991.

And the House agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 1939) to extend the authorization of appropriations for the Taft Institute, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The House amendment struck out all of the Senate bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment which is a substitute for the Senate bill and the House amendment. The difference between the Senate bill, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

1. The Senate bill extended the authorization for the Taft Institute for four fiscal years. The House amendment extended the Taft authorization for three fiscal years. Both the Senate bill and the House amendment have specific prohibitions against future authorizations for the Taft Institute after the end of the extended authorization period.

The House recedes with an amendment providing for Taft authorizations as follows:

Fiscal year 1991, $700,000;
Fiscal year 1992, $550,000;
Fiscal year 1993, $325,000;
Fiscal year 1994, $150,000.

The amendment prohibits authorizations for the Taft Institute beyond fiscal year 1994. The amendment also permits private contributions received by the Taft Institute in fiscal year 1990 to be treated as private contributions received in fiscal year 1991 for purposes of Taft matching requirements.

2. The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, makes several changes to the School Dropout Demonstration program. The Senate recedes.

3. The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, make several changes to the Higher Education Act concerning eligibility for assistance under that Act. The Senate recedes.

4. The Senate bill, but not the House amendment, makes several changes concerning eligibility for assistance under several additional education programs. The Senate recedes.

5. The House amendment, but not the Senate bill, includes a sense of the House resolution concerning extraneous amendments. The House recedes.

H.R. 5835, OMNIBUS BUDGET RECONCILIATION ACT OF 1990

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 509 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 5835.

□ 1446

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 5835) to provide for reconciliation pursuant to section 4 of the concurrent resolution on the budget for the fiscal year 1991, with Mr. MAVROULES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as read the first time.

Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] will be recognized for 1 hour and 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] will be recognized for 1 hour and 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA].

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5835, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990. It is the principal implementing tool of the budget resolution that was adopted last week. It represents the work of 12 House authorizing committees pursuant to the instructions that were contained in the budget resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 310, which was adopted by both the House and the Senate.

The committees were instructed by the budget resolution to report legislation producing a total of $24.3 billion in deficit reduction for fiscal year 1991 and $246.2 billion over the 5-year period from 1991 to 1995.

In fact, the committees, in the bill that is before us, have exceeded those instructions. The committees have produced $30.4 billion for fiscal year 1991, almost $6 billion in excess of the instructions in terms of deficit reduction, and $251.6 billion over 5 years, almost $5 billion in excess of the target.

That represents a significant increase in the level of deficit reduction over that provided in the instructions. The committees have not only met the targets, they have exceeded them.

Mr. Chairman, this is by far the largest deficit reduction package ever to be considered by the Congress. I hope we can adopt it in the House today, move quickly to a conference with the Senate, and have a reconciliation bill on the President's desk by Friday.

The reason that we must move this legislation is obvious to all of us. We are at the present time in crisis, a crisis in government, a crisis in the economy, and a crisis in confidence in the institution of government itself. Once again, the President is threatening to shut down the Government of the United States, and it is clear that he is looking for, perhaps, any excuse to do so. If we do not act now, he shall have that excuse.

Clearly, Mr. Chairman, this is only one of many reasons to try to enact the legislation before us, but it is certainly the reason that we have to act today, not tomorrow, not the next day, not next week, but today to complete the work that is before us.

Members are aware of why we are confronting the situation with the deficit. We are facing $300 billion annual deficits next year. They are sapping our economic strength, robbing our resources for the future, hurting us in terms of our ability to compete in the world of the next century. They continue to push up interest rates, adding to the difficult task of the Federal Reserve as it tries to face what is a likely recession in our economy, and growing inflation at the same time. What we are confronting is stagflation, the worst of all worlds, and in that atmosphere it is absolutely essential that we adopt strong deficit reduction.

Mr. Chairman, the authorizing committees are to be commended for the expeditious handling of this legislation. They received their instructions last Tuesday. By Friday of last week, 11 of the 12 committees had completed their work, and the final committee completed its work yesterday. So, we have been acting on a fast time frame, moving this legislation ahead, making very tough choices.

Mr. Chairman, these are not easy choices. Look at the elements of reconciliation. Every committee has had to make tough choices impacting on people, on farmers, on veterans, on the elderly, on students, on Government employees. We are asking Americans to help share the sacrifice of deficit reduction, and, when the Committee on Ways and Means amendment comes in, we are also going to be asking the wealthy to participate in that same sacrifice to try to reduce the deficit.

Let us be clear about what we are doing today. This is not a package of smoke and mirrors. Every element in this reconciliation package is real. Many Members like to talk about deficit reduction. But today we will find out what it really means to cast a vote for real deficit reduction, for real spending cuts and real tax increases.

Mr. Chairman, that is how to cut the deficit, whether we like it or not. The President has recognized that reality; the leadership in both the House and the Senate have recognized that reality. That is the only way we are going to get the job done.

Let me point out that this is a comprehensive package that contains $500 billion in deficit reduction from both spending and revenues over 5 years. As my colleagues will notice from this chart, entitlement programs and other spending reductions make up two-thirds, of the deficit reduction over 5 years. Revenues constitute about 30 percent of the package, and indeed over the 5 years spending reductions increase and revenue increases level off. The blue is the debt service which my colleagues see here.

So, Mr. Chairman, it is a balanced package. Some will argue that this is a tax package. Not true. This is a balanced package that involves spending reductions along with revenues.

Mr. Chairman, the targets achieved by the committees were largely the result of the budget summit agreement. Obviously, a majority, a bipartisan majority of the House, had some real concerns about the specifics of that agreement, and the House refused to adopt the agreement. And yet what we have now done is we have come back again. Based on the budget resolution we have provided flexibility to the committees, and I think it was the wisdom of the House that we have asserted priorities that we believe in the package that is before the House.

One of the most critical elements of this package, in addition to the spending restraints and revenues, is the enforcement package. Budget process reforms are now contained as the last title. These reforms grow also out of the budget summit. But they have been modified by a bipartisan leadership task force to address legitimate concerns that have been raised about future reliance on budget summits and about unfair and constitutionally doubtful infringements on the authority of the Congress.

Mr. Chairman, this package contains real, tough enforcement for all of the caps in the overall summit agreement. It is not easy, and yet it is our responsibility, not only to assert that we are going to achieve 5-year deficit reduction, but to mean it through meaningful enforcement changes.

The bottom line is: These provisions mean that the deficit reduction that the Congress and the President agree to this year is real. It is not here today and gone tomorrow, like so many deficit reduction efforts of the past. It is one more reason that those who truly believe in deficit reduction should vote for this legislation.

Mr. Chairman, the American people are watching us today. This is not an easy vote for anyone. It is a tough vote. It may be the most difficult vote that we cast in the 101st Congress.

However, Mr. Chairman, every Member should keep in mind, the impact on this institution and on our country if we fail to act today.

Most of us had the opportunity to go home this past weekend and listen to our constituents. I say to my colleagues, if yours are anything like mine, they were saying one thing:

Do what is right. Do what is fair. But above all, get it done.

We have the opportunity, as this debate goes on, to do what is right, and we will have the opportunity to decide what is fair. But above all, when the time comes for final passage, we had better get it done.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PANETTA. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise simply to commend the gentleman for his leadership as chairman of the Committee on the Budget through all these long, torturous months and for providing the leadership that is essential to get something done here in this body, and to do it with good humor and clarity. As just one Member of Congress, I would like to express my personal appreciation to the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] for being a distinguished legislator.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the comments of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FASCELL].

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL].

Mr. PURSELL. Mr. Chairman, members of the Democratic Party, members of the Republican Party, and taxpayers of America, in 1985 House Republicans wrote a budget called Group 92 which was debated on the floor. Our budget called for a freeze across the board. Democrats had a plan. Republicans had a plan. I learned my lesson then, and I learn my lesson today, that the American public are looking for two ideas to govern. This year, the Democrats have presented a plan which raises taxes by $150 billion over the next 5 years. Let them take that plan to the country, put it on the table, and let us take a good look at it.

Now we the Grand Old Party, have created a plan that reduces spending with no new taxes. Frankly, I think the people of America are entitled to see that plan, too.

Not today. The rules around here say, "Sorry, folks. In this democracy, we're only giving you one plan, the Democratic plan. We're not going to give you fair rules and allow you to see the Republican plan with no taxes and a reduction of spending."

□ 1500

That is the crisis in America. Eighty-three percent of the people of the United States want a reduction in spending, not new taxes. I do not know why we cannot get that through our heads here. That is why we are here in Washington with this long debate. The process has fallen apart.

We have been believers over the years, and frustrated here, because we have had an authorization tier, an appropriation tier, a budget tier, and now a summit tier. That is why this process has broken down.

It is not the President. It is not the Democrat or the Republican Party. We have built an empire in Washington that is self-destructing, and the people of America have said no more. What is happening in this country?

I suggest that we get back to the basics. As the coach says, you have got to learn to field and you have got to learn to hit and you have got to learn to bunt, to play the game with rules, even rules, straight up, straight down. No more, no less. That is all we ask.

But the athlete here says that we have rules for only one party. The Democrats are in charge. Tough luck, Repubicans, no deal. No rule and no chance to offer a plan.

Mr. Chairman, all we ask here in this body, representing the people of this country, is to present a plan for the people to see. Let them take their choice which one will govern America: The Republican plan or the Democratic plan.

In my polls, 83 percent of the people in my district in Michigan want reduction in spending. I do not get many letters that say increase taxes.

I will be the first to admit, as a member of the Appropriations Committee it is very easy to spend dollars when it is someone else's money. Without looking on the revenue side of budget reconciliation, it was real easy for me to do what the appropriators are supposed to do. More projects and more spending, for every group.

People come to Washington and say give us a balanced budget, but we want our subsidy. Every group in America is saying that. But 83 percent want a reduction in spending.

In my Energy and Water Subcommittee, I walked into the conference committee in the Senate last Friday and said, "Look, I am making some new choices around here. Would you take out the River Rouge project," which is a $3 million project that I had requested. I will admit to the public and to the taxpayers that when I saw that River Rouge project, 7 miles long, I saw another river alongside that was full of red ink.

Mr. Speaker, I have three grandchildren. I have had to make some tough choices for them and I am willing to take $3 million out. It is only a little bit of money, but it tells me that CARL PURSELL is ready to make tough choices.

The gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, said this is the day to make tough choices. I agree with him. That is what the citizens are saying. Stand up and make those tough choices. Give us a chance to offer our budget. It is better for America.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER].

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the gentleman for yielding to me. It is such an honor to work with the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA]. He is showing his leadership once again today. I also want to associate myself with his remarks, which I thought really put this whole issue on the line.

Mr. Chairman, I have to say to my Republican friends, they talk about tough choices. I have their proposal. This is another black box approach—a secret spending cut plan. They take nondefense discretionary spending and they say they cut $66 billion out. They do not say where. Is it drug enforcement? Is it air traffic control? They duck the hard issues. Not to over-emphasize their plan—let it be clear that they just do not meet the deficit reduction targets that President Bush said he required. So their plan is a nonstarter.

Mr. Chairman, it is true as the country watches us debate this budget that we do not always look pretty. We do not always look composed. Our feelings show on both sides. We get angry. But I think that is OK. This is a debate about the direction of our country, and it is not just about this year, it is about the next 5 years. It is about what gets cut and by how much. It is about who pays and how much. It is a debate about the needs of our country, and it is a debate about who needs to do the most to solve the deficit crisis.

Mr. Chairman, should it be the poor? I think not. Yet in the President's summit the poor would have paid 7 percent more in taxes.

Should it be the middle class that pays? I think not. Yet in the President's summit, the middle class would pay less than the poor, but more than the super wealthy.

Imagine, the middle class and the poor would pay more than the wealthy in the President's summit plan. That is Robin Hood in reverse. It is fairness on its head. It is regressivity, not progressivity.

Mr. Chairman, I want to tell Members one story from the summit which shows the mean spiritedness and the utter bankruptcy of the President's Republican representatives there at that summit.

While they kept protecting the very rich, while President Bush was collecting millions from millionaires to help his pet House and Senate Republican candidates, while George Bush was threatening to shut down this Government if we dared to touch the super wealthy, while all that was going on, the Republicans at the summit wanted to go overturn the Zebley case in order to raise another billion dollars of deficit reduction.

Fortunately, the Democrats knew what the Zebley case was. The Zebley case protects the most vulnerable among us, the most needy among us, children with crippling diseases, crippling disabilities. That is Republicanism, protecting the wealthiest, hurting the weakest, throw the middle class a crumb, while those over $400,000 a year and up get a souffle.

Mr. Chairman, thanks to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] we are going to have a proposal with Democratic principles, and I hope every Member in this Chamber who believes in attacking this deficit in a fair way supports this. I am very proud to be a Democrat today, because I think the people are learning the difference between the parties. It is not lost on them. The President is still campaigning. He is still getting millions from the millionaires. We are here working for the people.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds to remind Members that Republicans are not allowed to make amendments. We are not allowed to play under any but the Democrat rules. We are the despised underclass of this House of Representatives. We are an abused and oppressed minority, and now we are told we have made tax policy for the last 20 years.

I believe that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], the hero of the gentlewoman from California [Mrs. BOXER], has been tax chairman in this House for about 10 years. She should take her complaints to him.

I do not know how the system comes to offend her; but certainly Republicans had little to do with controlling tax policy. We are not even allowed to make amendments.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 6 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

Mr. KASICH. Mr. Chairman, to those who are watching this debate today, I must say that you are going to be incredulous about what goes on in this Chamber. You are going to be very confused as to why it is that the Republican alternative was never permitted to be offered, and why it is that the Democrat majority is going to push through big tax increases.

If you are confused and frustrated, I urge you to write and call your Democratic Representative, because there is not a confusing debate here. I hope to outline it just very simply.

The debate today is really one on priorities. The question is, Do we raise taxes and spend the money as offered by the majority plan, or do we not raise taxes and control spending as offered by the Pursell-Kasich budget, which was not permitted to come to the floor?

Now, if you want to have a crack at not raising taxes and controlling spending, you have got to vote down this budget that the Democrats offered, that raises your taxes to the tune of about $180 billion, and does not control spending.

Mr. Chairman, it is really very simple. Let me just tell those who are watching this debate, who think that somehow the Democratic proposal is only a whack at the wealthy, I urge lower- and middle-income taxpayers to be aware of two particular items that they are going to find when April 15 comes and it comes time to file their income tax.

No. 1, under the Democrat plan, the personal exemption is cut. That is very clear. Everybody understands what that means.

That means the amount of money you should be able to claim as a personal exemption come this April will not go up at the rate it should. Your personal exemption will be cut, and you will be paying more taxes.

□ 1510

In the area of indexing, raising the rates actually occurs in this plan on individuals and families starting at an income level of $20,000. If you look at the Democrat table, those people between $20,000 and $30,000 are going to contribute $1 billion in taxes to solving this budget, just under the area of indexing.

So here we have two significant items that are going to jack up the taxes on middle-income and lower-income Americans, and what they get in exchange for it are not cuts in spending.

That is what is so very, very hard to believe. In fact, I would like to outline quickly what the differences are between the two plans.

In the area of entitlements—entitlements, of course, are the programs that go up automatically without a vote of the Congress, and they include things like Social Security and Medicare. I have to tell Members that under the Republican plan, that has no tax increase whatsoever, that the savings that occur in the entitlement area are virtually identical to the savings that the Democrats make. So the argument that somehow Republicans would be hurting those on Medicare and Social Security, that is a bunch of bunk. Our numbers are exactly where the Democrat plan is.

In the area of defense, the Republicans cut about $100 billion and save about $170 billion over 5 years. What do the Democrats do? They save about $170 billion over 5 years. So in the area of entitlements and in the area of defense, the Republican and Democrat plans are just about the same.

Now where do they come apart? They come apart in two areas.

One is in the area of taxes, where the Democrats want to soak the American people for $180 billion in additional taxes, including significant tax increases for Middle America, for middle-income Americans. What does the Republican plan call for? It calls for extension of some existing revenues that are now currently on the books and totals about $23 billion over 5 years versus the Democrat $180 billion tax increase.

Where is the other area that it differs? It differs in the area of discretionary spending. Those are the areas that we as a Congress can control because they do not go up automatically every year.

What are the Democrats proposing? The Democrats propose increasing discretionary spending to the tune of $180 billion.

What do the Republicans say? The Republicans say we want to control the increase in discretionary spending. We increase discretionary spending over 5 years by only $84 billion.

So in other words, the Democrat plan drives up discretionary spending by $180 billion. We increase spending in discretionary by only $84 billion.

How do the Democrats pay for their $180 billion increase in discretionary spending. They soak the taxpayers by $180 billion.

The bottom line is that we can get $410 billion in deficit reduction without a tax increase. The Democrats choose to have higher spending and higher taxes, higher taxes to the tune of $180 billion, and they do not control spending.

Look, folks, the American people do not want more of tax and spend. The American people want us to control the growth in Federal spending, and to do it responsibly. We have done it. The problems are protected in this budget. There is control on the growth of Federal programs.

But with the Democrats it is business as usual, more taxes and more spending.

I tell you that the American people reject that approach, and clearly, if given an opportunity to vote, would accept the Republican alternative, and would urge the defeat of the soak-the-taxpayer scam that the Democrats offer in their budget.

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4½ minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER].

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Chairman, last night some of us were in the Cloakroom watching the rerun of the biography of Richard Nixon, which had the Watergate week in Congress, Watergate time. When I thought about it, this is the most crucial week that Congress will face since that week, the most crucial week in 16 years because we have a handle on the debt problem that has bedeviled us for the last decade, to turn the slope around and have the percentage of debt to GNP actually go down over the next 3 years instead of going up as it has for the last 12. We have an opportunity for once in this body to see beyond the curve.

Yes, it is true, our constituents when we walk up to them are not saying please reduce the deficit. It is one of those abstract, around-the-corner issues that our politics does not handle very well.

But we are handling it well this week, at least so far, and that is our challenge. Savings is the key. If America has a weakness in our economy it is not that we have to restructure and become like Germany or Japan, but it is that we do not save enough. Individuals do not save enough, companies do not save enough, and their leader, the Government, does not save enough either. And this is the first time we have a message we can send, a message to America saying yes, we are willing to do it.

Once we reach that point, the logic flows inexorably in the direction of the Democratic plan. My colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle, you know it, you cannot get a handle on savings and on the deficit unless you raise taxes, period. There is not the votes on your side of the aisle for the kind of deep cuts that would have to be done in a true deficit reduction package without takes. There are not the votes with Mr. DOLE and Mr. DOMENICI, and the President himself crossed that Rubicon when he said he would no longer stick to "read my lips." He did, to his credit, put the benefit of the country ahead of a philosophy that is outdated.

Only the House Republicans cling to the discredited philosophy of the 1980's. And when they go out there on Main Street, they will find that their "no new taxes at all costs, even if it means the ruination of America" is no longer at the cutting edge. You may have been at the cutting edge in the late 1970's and the early 1980's, but you have lost it now, unlike your Senate counterparts, unlike your President.

If you are going to raise taxes, which has to be done, then the difference between the parties is clear, and that is maybe why Republicans run away from the tax issue, because our side is willing not to say that the middle class should get no taxes. They will get some. But to say that it ought to be proportionate, that it ought to be progressive, to say that the rich can pay a greater share than the middle class. It is not just the rich who will pay, but in the Republican plan they will not pay at all, and the middle class will pay, and pay and pay through the spending reductions that you wish to make, but do not outline as to how you would make them.

So our plan with the Rostenkowski amendment deals with the future and is fair.

Is there disappointment in it? Yes, I think the defense number, frankly, is outlandish. We could not get it lower. But it is not going to be a perfect plan for anybody, given the challenge, the future we face.

And I say to my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, if we want to stay No. 1 economically, if we want no longer to be afraid of the Germanys and the Japans, then we must, we must this week rise to the occasion, as our colleagues did 16 years ago, and vote for a fair deficit reduction plan that will keep America No. 1.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH], the Republican whip.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say first of all that for 5 months the Democrats asked us to offer a budget. Today we offered a budget, and the Democrats promptly ruled it out of order. Their excuse was that the Republican budget did not fit the Democratic Party's requirements.

□ 1520

In this Congress, the Democratic Party waived the Budget Act 62 times, and 62 times the Democrats found an excuse to bring their new spending to the House floor. But the Republican budget did not increase spending. It cut spending.

So the Democrats refused to let it be voted on. Even worse, the Republican budget had no new taxes and achieved $410 billion in deficit reduction by controlling spending.

The Democrats are so committed to tax increases that they had to stop the Republicans from offering a no-tax-increase budget. Imagine how the average American must feel watching the arrogance of the leaders in some of the Democratic leadership. According to a public-opinion poll last week, the American people, by 83 percent to 12 percent, want to cut spending. The Democrats reject the 83 percent who want spending cuts and refuse to even allow the spending-cuts budget to be voted on. The Democrats sided with the 12 percent who want more spending.

In the same poll, the American people opposed tax increases by 76 percent to 21 percent. The Democrats reject the 76-percent anti-tax-increase majority and side with the 21 percent who want higher taxes.

Three weeks from today the American people can decide whether or not to give the Democrats more votes to raise spending and raise taxes or they can vote Republican for lower spending and lower taxes.

The Democratic Party's slogan is to tax the rich, but their budget today raises taxes on working Americans.

The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON] understands the cost of raising taxes on working Americans. In his State, Jim Florio, a Democratic Governor, has raised taxes massively, and his approval rating has dropped to 18 percent. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON] calculated today that the Democratic Party budget will raise $654 on a family of four with $44,800 in taxable income. The Democratic plan raises $254 in taxes by reestablishing bracket creep on every American who pays income tax. The Democratic plan raises $135 in an anti-family cut of the real value of dependent deductions. The Democratic plan raises $145 in Medicare taxes, and the Democratic plan raises $120 on the average family in excise taxes.

Let me just say this: if you ask the average American if you have to raise taxes, would you rather raise taxes on the rich, they would probably say yes. If you asked them do they want to raise taxes at all, they almost certainly say no.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HUCKABY].

Mr. HUCKABY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, it is time that we in the House, in the Congress, ended this budget morass. It is time we take a stand. The American people truly deserve better and expect better from us than what they have seen in the last few days, the last few weeks.

The reconciliation package before us is an OK package. It is a fair package. It is a doable package. It is an understandable package.

I think each of us would like to see some changes made, naturally, in the scope and the depth of this legislation. I regret that it does not have a true hard freeze on all domestic discretionary spending, but it does have some real cuts in entitlements. It fixes the Medicare problem. It eliminates the gasoline tax. It does raise taxes on those with an adjusted gross income in excess of $200,000. It takes the rate from 28 to 33 percent.

We are hearing a lot about the fact that this package extends indexing, which is true, but let me point out to my colleagues that before 1986 we did not even have indexing, so one could say that there was an automatic tax increase every year before 1986.

I think that the bottom line is that this is a fair package. It has greater deficit reduction than we have ever had before. Let us make it happen. Let us get on with the business of America.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LEACH].

Mr. LEACH of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, with disappointment and reluctance, I rise in support of the substitute before us.

The strength of the Democratic approach is its progressivity; its weakness is the lack of discipline that has been applied to spending.

The Republican alternative which the majority disallowed from consideration this afternoon had the merit of holding down the growth of Government. Unfortunately, it reflected the weakness of ceding to the Democrats of a serious seat at the negotiating table. By voting against the original summit package and then refusing to play within the rules in crafting a congressional response, Republicans found themselves in the first instance with no alternative and in the second with an 80-percent no-show—a plan that came close, but in the final measure, failed to meet the budget resolution's call for a $500 billion deficit reduction package.

I am exasperated that the majority didn't allow a vote an this alternative and accordingly voted against the closed rule which precluded its consideration, but I must acknowledge my side knew the rules and wittingly refused to comply. We have the right to be displeased, but not outraged.

What the House now is confronted with is the pitting of the politics of envy versus the politics of indulgency. While I am disappointed at my party's avoidance of discipline, our refusal to accept the challenge to develop a $500 billion deficit alternative, it is impossible to conclude anything except that the Republican Party is entirely right about placing first priority on the need to restrain the size of Government.

On the other hand, it is clear that given $3 trillion in national debt which will rise another 10 percent this fiscal year, painful, costly decisions must be made. At issue is sacrifice, burden-sharing, and, most importantly, fairness.

This Member would have been unable to support the initial budget package except for the agreement that had been reached between the White House and congressional leadership that the frame work stood, with the priorities open to substantial change. Little, for instance, could have been more indefensible than to have allowed the distinguished senior Senator from Texas [Mr. BENTSEN] to get his way by imposing a tax on home heating fuel which would fall disproportionately on northern homeowners in exchange for substantial new tax breaks for oil producers in States such as his own.

Clearly a confrontation is in the making between the House and the Senate as well as between this body and the White House. It would appear the majority party senses political momentum and prefers the winning of a partisan vote rather than a victory on the substantitive issues at stake. It would also appear that as real as the deficit reduction package is, it is achieved at higher levels of spending than would be good for the economy.

Nevertheless, as a protest against the unfairness of the summit priorities, and as a reflection of a desire to end the bubble but not indexing, I intend to vote in favor of the Rostenkowski package.

At this stage it is imperative that budget negotiations go productively forward. A setback today would send chilling signals to the markets of the world, producing a cascading loss of confidence in the American system. Hopefully, in the face of a veto prospect, negotiations will proceed with the Senate that will produce a product with more restrained spending and optimally a reduction in capital gains.

In any regard, it should be painfully clear that cleaning up the fiscal Augean stable demands discipline from legislators and sacrifices from all Americans. It demands old-fashioned leadership, not new-fangled attention to public opinion polls.

The Rostenkowski alternative has grave warts, but at least it keeps the process moving. Perhaps that's the best that can be said at this stage in the process.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON]

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to try to draw attention to some things that are true about this package and others that I do not believe are true, at least not wholly.

First of all, it has been claimed that this is a deficit reduction package. That may be true, but it could better be called a tax increase package.

Second, it has been claimed that this is a tax on the rich, and that is partly true, but mostly not true. Let me just explain very briefly if I may.

The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] stood in this well just a few moments ago and said something about bracket creep. Bracket creep will mean an increase in taxes for the average middle-class family, a family with taxable income of $44,800, of $254 a year. That is calculated. It is indisputable, and I want everyone in this House before they cast their vote today to know that because of that one provision the taxes on middle America will be increased by $250 a year.

Second, there is something called the personal exemption which is also subject to inflationary pressures. In the current tax law, the formula calls for an increase in that personal exemption every year. This year it is $2,050. Next year it would be $2,150.

What does that mean for a family of four? It means they would have an extra $400 of exemptions next year under the current law, but not under the new law that has been proposed.

Under the new law, they would lose $400 of that exemption. At 28 percent for this family, that means an additional tax of $112 a year, so now we are talking about $254 a year, and now we are talking $112 a year.

Let us go one stop further and talk about one other thing here, the Medicare tax. The same family, and this bill raises the Medicare tax on up so that people who make $100,000 a year pay for it. This family who makes somewhere between $50,000 and $60,000 a year gross would pay an additional, I estimate, $145 a year; 254, 112, 145, and finally the excise taxes.

If we consider that all families are going to pay this excise tax, and let us say this family of four pays 35 cents a day, 35 cents a day every day of the year, $120 a year. That comes to a grand total, ladies and gentlemen, of $636 a year for the family with a taxable income of $44,800 a year.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SAXTON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding and in showing how this package does tax heavily the middle class.

I think it is important for folks who sit down at the breakfast table to work out their own taxes, if they go to their form 1040 and line 37, they have taxable income of $44,800, under the Democrat plan you lose your right to index inflation into your tax brackets.

What that means, very simply, to the average guy or the average lady making out her taxes, she is going to pay under the Democrat plan more taxes at the rate of 28 percent, and she is going to be multiplying the amount of money that is taxed less at the rate of 15 percent, meaning she is going to be paying more taxes.

Under this example that the gentleman has given of a family with $44,800 in taxable income, very simply, that family is going to be paying $254 more under the Democrat plan than under current law, and current law includes the Repubican package which had no tax increase.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WISE].

Mr. WISE. Mr. Chairman, I started out 3 weeks ago, and I voted no on the original proposal like many of the people in this Chamber. I wanted a budget badly, but I could not live with a bad budget.

I think that today we have before us a package that is much more equitable and much more fair. I note with interest that many of us were involved in that process on both sides of the aisle, and the issue was to cut $500 billion over 5 years through a combination of tax increases, yes, and spending cuts.

Yet today I hear complaints from the other side because they were not permitted to offer a rule or amendment that would have not have met that obligation, but would have only cut $410 million.

So, we are here today, trying to push forward the same kind of goals that we all were focusing on only a few weeks ago. I wish there were a video replay to play because I am listening to a lot of those, who last time were prepared to accept tax increases, suddenly become born again no-taxers. Apparently, the gas tax was OK for some Members on the other side of the aisle last time. It is not OK today. Apparently those other taxes were the most regressive, they were OK. They were not OK today. I think we need to focus on the fact that the tax package before Members today is more equitable, and particularly does ask those in the upper income brackets who are presently paying the same percentage of their income, to be paying a fairer percentage. That it does do that, that it does raise the same amount of money that President Bush signed off on just a few weeks ago, and that the Republican and Democratic leaders signed off on.

So, Mr. Chairman, as I look at this package before Members, about 90 percent of it is roughly the same. I think the American people should know that. We are talking about entitlement cuts agreed on, Medicare cuts agreed on, and the fight is over taxes. One group says we can have no taxes. I wish I could live in La-La Land. I wish it were possible to do that. However, even the President of the United States ponied up to the bar and recognized the need for new taxes. So then the question becomes, and it seems the sole question is, who pays those taxes. I believe it is time for those who have not been paying their fair share, and the tables illustrate that, to begin paying it.

Yes, the tax burden will be spread across all, but it will be spread across the upper income for the first time, much more significantly, than it ever has. Those persons paying over $200,000 a year.

I think it is also important to point out that the other side wants to focus on the domestic discretionary account, that is public investment. My senior Senator from West Virginia says that is the runt puppy of the budget for many years. Indeed, it is $326 billion below the baseline today. The defense budget, I might add, is over $560 billion above the baseline for 1980. In 1980 the public investment was 3.6 percent of the gross national product. Today it is 2 percent.

Therefore, I would urge that we pass this package today. I think it is important to the country.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. EDWARDS], the distinguished chairman of the Republican Policy Committee.

Mr. EDWARDS of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I oppose this bill. First, because it does not contain enough spending cuts. Second, because it contains higher taxes for every American.

I will say this. The Democratic plan is a fair plan. I have heard it suggested that it is not fair. It is fair. It hits everybody. It hits the rich. It hits the middle income. It hits the poor. It hits everybody across the board.

The Democratic solution to the deficit is to have the American taxpayer tighten his belt so the Federal Government can just keep spending more money. Where are the spending cuts in this bill? The American people keep insisting that we in the Congress need to do something about Federal spending. We need to bring Federal spending under control. So where are the spending cuts in this bill? The Democrats were not able to make any real cuts that did not come out of defense.

The Republican plan, I say that in quotes because the Democrats did not allow the Republican plan even to be offered on the floor today, the Republican plan would have contained $8.7 billion in nondiscretionary cuts in the first year, $66 billion over 5 years. That is money taken out of Federal programs out of the bureaucracy, out of foreign aid. Nothing. The Democrats could not find anything. We cut Defense spending by $170 billion over 5 years. We cut $10 billion in foreign aid. The Democratic package could not even cut a dime from foreign aid while they are busy raising taxes on the American people. The Republican alternative, which was not able to be offered, would have given Members the opportunity to cut almost $400 billion in Federal spending over 5 years without raising taxes. The Democrats could not find any nonentitlement programs that need cutting, except Defense.

What the Democrat bill does offer is increased taxes. Despite all these years of experience that would show that increased Federal taxes only lead to increased Federal spending, this piece of legislation is very stark proof that the Democrats in this body have not learned this lesson. The taxes in this bill are of the most regressive nature and hit the hardest those who can afford them the lease. To the Americans who drive to work, Democrats in the House offer a 100-percent gas tax increase over 2 years on top of the dramatic price increases they have already had to endure. To other Americans, they offer excise taxes. More taxes on everything. To all Americans, the Democrats offer increased income taxes by not indexing the tax brackets.

Finally, let me just say that this bill is worthy of opposition for no other reason than the restrictive nature of the debate which the Democrats imposed a gag rule. Not only can the Democrats imposed a gag rule. Not only can the Democrats not think of a way to reduce the deficit except by raising the taxes of the American people, they even prevent the presentation of an alternative so that we can reduce the deficit without taxes.

Because of the elements in this bill, because of the restrictive nature which shuts off debate in the most important part of it, cutting spending, we in the Republican Party have only two choices. We can either vote against this package or we can say to the American people that we have abandoned the plan to cut spending. We will go along with the tax increase. My friends, we are not going to do that.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

The gentleman continues to refer to the fact that somehow we are going to deal with the deficit crisis and not have to confront the issue of revenues. The fact is that the President himself has recognized that reality, and even the Republicans in the other body, to their credit, are willing to accept that responsibility and are sitting down now and designing a package that is made up of spending restraints and revenues. They are not running away from that challenge.

It is time that the Members on that side recognize the same responsibility and confront it. Do not run for the back doors. Stay here. Debate the issues, and make the tough choices in all of these areas.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. MAZZOLI].

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Chairman, let me first of all salute my friend from California [Mr. PANETTA] on a job very well done, a courageous effort. We are proud of the gentleman. I would also like to include in this the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] who will soon be leaving this Chamber, for his good work throughout the 20 years I have served with him.

Perhaps if I had been on the Committee on Rules I would have fashioned a different rule, but the fact is we are where we are, and we have to move the process forward. We have two very distinct challenges facing Members. We have to meet the Friday night budget deadline in order to avoid a shutdown of government, but we have to avoid that shutdown in the right way. We have to pass a fair and equitable, and balanced budget.

The budget before Members today, with the Rostenkowski amendment which will be offered later today, does give Members that type of a budget. It spreads the tax load, I think, equitably and evenly across the income classes. It reduces the burden on the recipients of Medicare. It eliminates the so-called growth package which really was a euphemism for a series of loopholes that would have made the 1986 Tax Act look like swiss cheese. Finally, among other things, it creates a capital gains reduction, but it targets it for middle income people.

I therefore support the Democratic proposal, and hope the Chamber does and that the President will sign it into law.

I realize that many Americans are impatient and restless with this budget process. This is, however, more than just simply, as the coaches say, about the budgetary X's and O's. This is more than reaching the bottom line. This is a struggle for the heart and soul of our party, for the heart and soul of the Republican Party. It is a struggle to set the direction and tempo of American society into the next century.

This is not going to be decorous or pretty or tidy debate. But, I think we will look back on this as a job well worth the effort.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would advise that the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] has 1 hour and 3½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] has 1 hour and 7½ minutes remaining.

□ 1540

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Alabama [Mr. CALLAHAN].

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, the media is seeming to spotlight on several issues and the debate today is revolving around several issues, primarily income tax increases on the American people.

The emphasis is on who is responsible for what, whose fault is where?

But let me tell you, there are a hundred other provisions in this bill of which the American people are unaware.

Not one Member of this body has read the final package we are to vote on today. Among other things, it requires that the American businessman be placed under a bounty system, because it requires the OSHA to go out and raise $1.2 billion in new revenues and penalties. That is just an example of what we are going to be faced with if you do not give us the opportunity to introduce a substitute bill, which we know you are not going to do.

So let me encourage my colleagues to vote this measure down today, and give us the opportunity to come forth with a package that the American people can understand.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. LEVIN].

Mr. LEVIN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, what we are seeing today is the explosion of two economic myths perpetuated by Republican policy over the last decade.

First there was the promise of "read my lips, no new taxes."

Second, the promise of lower taxes for the wealthy through a massive capital gains tax break. When the President retreated from the first and renounced his pledge of no new taxes, he clutched to his bosom the second. Both were bad policy.

Now they are turning out to be bad politics.

Republicans are being hoisted on their own petards. They are sowing dissension in their ranks and being exposed as the champions of the rich. It is a consummation devoutly deserved.

Unfortunately, the Nation is also suffering. At a time when we should be seriously attacking the budget crisis, the Republicans are scrambling to put Humpty-Dumpty together again with a package that dodges the issues, and indeed once again repudiates the President.

The President has continually shifted his position and now the House Republicans come forth with a shifty proposal that is a fig leaf, a fig leaf that fails to mask their inability to meet the deficit reduction targets because they cannot stomach taxing the rich.

There they go again. Read their lips, they say. No new taxes. But I say, once renounced, twice clearly political propaganda.

Democrats are united because we have faced up to our responsibilities, told the American people the truth and produced a plan that is real deficit reduction and is fair.

I call on my colleagues on the other side of the aisle and the President to join us these next 3 days for the good of the country.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE].

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, the myth that the Democrats are the party of fairness, the defenders of the little guy against the depredations of the Republican rich, needs a dose of cold reality.

What is fair about delaying the indexing of tax rates? Who gets hurt? Not the wealthiest 1 million taxpayers. They lost their personal exemptions back in 1986; but as Dracula arises from the coffin at dusk, so does bracket creep rise from the dead as Democrat darkness falls on the taxpayers of America. Bracket creep, a favorite tool of the tax-and-spend school of government, was buried under President Reagan. Now it is back and it is going to drain $36 billion from low- and middle-income America.

For example, a married couple with two children with a taxable income of $34,000, hardly opulent, hardly a bloated bondholder, a malefactor of great wealth, would pay taxes in 1991 of $5,100, but that is under present law. Under the new Democrats law he would pay $5,413.50, an increase of $313.50, more than 6 percent.

Is that protecting the little guy? Is that protecting the middle-income person?

This will be a permanent tax increase, even if indexing is deferred only 1 year.

My friends, there is a tax revolt out there in America and some of us seem unwilling or unable to understand this hard reality. The Democrats are addicted to spending and taxes and they support their habit by more and more taxes.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the American people understand who is on their side and who is on the side of fraud and myth.

Let us look at another example, foreign aid. Now, the Democratic package does not touch foreign aid. The Republican package, which unfortunately will not see the light of day, freezes foreign aid. At least it is a benign cut.

Now, we are supposed to get a peace dividend because the Soviet Union is no longer our major adversary. Why does not the peace dividend transcend the defense budget and reach into foreign aid? If there ever was an unpopular program among Americans, it is foreign aid. Could we not do something in that field to save the beleaguered taxpayer? I think we could. The Democrats think we cannot.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HYDE. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I say to my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HYDE], I understand from staff that the numbers between the Republican package and the Democratic package on foreign aid are virtually identical. It is fun to pander on foreign aid. I do not suggest my friend is doing that.

Mr. HYDE. Did the gentleman say pander on foreign aid?

Mr. MOODY. It would be fun to do so.

Mr. HYDE. I have always supported foreign aid. I believe in foreign aid, but I think the peace dividends ought to occur there too.

Mr. MOODY. The Republican and the Democratic packages are the same on foreign aid.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. WYDEN].

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the resolution.

Mr. Chairman, there has been a great deal of discussion, particularly about how Democrats cannot make any savings except in the defense area.

Now, I note that the Energy and Commerce Committee generated a $44 billion in savings, but I wanted to go beyond that and talk in a more specific way about finding savings in the social programs in the country.

In looking at this issue, it seems to me the question is how can you find the savings in the social programs without hurting the very poor, those who live in the shadows of our communities. This bill does that. In particular, it does it by finally taking on some of the most powerful lobbies in Washington that have basically gotten a free ride all through the 1980's. For example, all through the eighties the drug companies have taken advantage of the Medicaid Program. They have charged one price to large, private buyers like private hospitals and health maintenance organizations, they got a great price. Medicaid, however, was charged a lot more. The drug companies basically stiffed the Medicaid Program. No large buyer of medicine would pay the price that Medicaid has been paying.

In this legislation, we finally correct that. Instead of cutting once more those on a very low income or the rural hospitals or the inner-city facilities, this bill goes after the drug lobby. It is high time. The bill saves $2.1 billion by finally getting for Medicaid the best price on the medicine it buys. I think that is an example of how we ought to make savings. There has been a lot of talk about how Democrats can't make any savings in the social programs, but the RECORD shows otherwise.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BURTON].

Mr. BURTON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding to me this time.

The gentleman from California indicated awhile ago that those who are working on a tax package that will meet our crisis are statesmen. Well, let us look at the facts.

Over the past 10 years, we have gone from $599 billion in tax revenues to $1.2 trillion, more than double. We are getting $80 billion a year right now in new tax revenues without a tax increase, but that is not enough.

Here is what they want to do. They want to raise income taxes by $93.6 billion; overall taxes, $180 billion.

Now, what does that mean to the average American families, not the rich, but average American families?

□ 1550

To a married couple with two children, it is going to increase their tax liability $313.50 per year. To a single person making only $21,000 a year, it is going to increase his tax liability or her tax liability $151.50 per year. For a family of four making $44,800, it is going to increase their tax liability $631 a year.

But that is not the whole story, my friends. It is going to take $180 billion out of America's buying power. That means they will not buy $180 billion worth of TV sets, automobiles, refrigerators, or clothes. And when they do not buy those products, that means we are not going to produce those products, and if we do not produce those products, the people that work on the assembly lines are going to put out of work.

For each 1 percent of new employment, it costs the American taxpayer $40 billion out of the Treasury. This is a recession move the Democrats are talking about. It is a major tax increase that is going to put this country into a deep bottomless recession, and it is their fault and they are telling you it is good for America.

I tell you it is baloney.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, what the gentleman failed to refer to is the $300 billion deficit, the $3.2 trillion national debt that is robbing the American people of their future. That is what counts, that is what needs to be addressed. That is what the gentleman has avoided.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI].

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, in our democratic system we solve the Nation's problems by shopping in a marketplace of ideas. The bigger the problem, the more ideas we generally have to pick from.

Mr. Chairman, the budget is a big problem, a very big problem. And not surprisingly the marketplace of ideas for deficit reduction is crowded and noisy.

The provision reported out of the Ways and Means Committee without recommendation as part of budget reconciliation represents a modestly improved version of the Budget summit agreement which this Chamber rejected October 5. You will recall that the chief complaint against the summit agreement was that it was unfair, placing too much of the burden of deficit reduction on the backs of those least able to bear it.

The committee reported package repairs the more glaring flaws of the summit. First, it reduces by $10 billion the harsh provisions relating to Medicare beneficiaries, without abandoning the summit objective of achieving significant cuts in spending.

The package also lowers by 1 cent the gasoline excise tax increase which was included in the summit agreement, while eliminating the tax on home heating oil entirely. And it drops a provision that would have required a 2-week waiting period before unemployed persons could receive compensation. The guiding motive behind making both of these changes was to promote equity.

Finally, the Ways and Means Committee's reported bill strips away from the summit agreement $19 billion of revenue-losing provisions. This is, after all, a plan to reduce the deficit, not to make it bigger.

The summit agreement included a collection of so-called small business growth incentives that no one liked. They were intended to promote economic growth. But the only growth these proposals would spark is growth in the tax-shelter industry.

The one revenue-losing provision from the summit which the committee retained was the expansion of the earned income tax credit. This provision is designed to ease the pain of deficit reduction on America's poorest people. Poor people did not benefit from the excesses which created the deficit. We see no reason to ask them to pay for the fiscal cleanup.

Mr. Chairman, we are fast approaching the time when we will have to make a decision on whether we are serious about reducing the deficit. The deficit debate has divided us like no other issue in recent memory. This division has yet to be resolved.

With this thought in mind, the Ways and Means Committee reported this package without recommendation. We believe that the deficit issue should not be settled either in secluded military quarters or by a select few.

Mr. Chairman, my guess is that the committee-reported provisions are everyone's second choice. Everyone seems to have a better idea. But, Mr. Chairman, it is not clear whether any of these better ideas can successfully run the gamut of the legislative process.

This will not be our last vote on a budget deficit package. Whatever the outcome of future votes, it is important that we send the message to the American people, to the markets, and to the world that we are serious about the need for significant deficit reduction. Nothing less than our own credibility—the health of our economy—the standard of living of future generations—nothing short of the national interest is at stake.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. DREIER].

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Chairman, one of the greatest tragedies of this debate that has been going on for the past several weeks is the creation of what appears to be somewhat of a victory for my colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle. They have been winning this us-versus-them battle. The class warfare, this soak-the-rich mentality which has had a great deal of success in the media.

Well, our colleague, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. SAXTON], has very well outlined the fact that this is not an us-versus-them package. It is one which clearly is going to penalize greatly that middle-income wage earner.

He used in his outline his analysis of the Form 1040 with the family of four with a taxable income of $44,800. He shows that the increase will be $639 for that family of four.

I also want to point to the fact that my great friend from California, the chairman of the Committee on the Budget [Mr. PANETTA], has done a superb job of talking about the issue.

My friend from California has talked about the fact that we need to step up and address the issue of taxes. Very clearly, if we look at the past four decades, for every $1 tax increase, we increased spending by $1.58. We were supposed to have $3 in spending cuts for every $1 in tax increase in the early part of the last decade. Unfortunately, this package continues that pattern of increasing spending even greater than we increase taxes.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman and Members, I rise in opposition to the tax increase package prepared by our Democratic friends. I am just amused at the different estimates that have been made by the people on the Democratic side about the Republican package that they have not seen fit to even make in order.

But the one element that this institution lacks is a sense of discipline to restrain spending. The American public can easily determine for themselves which party is on which side. Our Democratic friends clearly believe we Americans are undertaxed.

That is nonsense. We are just spending too much.

I have a chart here that shows what would have happened to the existing deficit that this year will increase our national debt by some $364 billion, if we had just observed limiting spending increases in the decade of the 1980's to the CPI.

It shows clearly that had we followed just that simple discipline in 1987, the budget would have come into surplus. The reality is that outlay increases in 1980 over the preceding year were 17.5 percent, for instance, and in 1981 over 1980, 13.9 percent. Skipping down to 1985, 11 percent over 1984; indeed 1990 over 1989, 10.6 percent.

The CPI increase all during these years was averaging far less than half of that.

When you look at the voting records of my colleagues on the Democratic side, you will find time after time they have voted against modest reductions in spending proposals by limiting the increase in the rate of inflation.

This is the alternative we should pursue.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Washington [Mrs. UNSOELD].

Mrs. UNSOELD. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the American public has rightly become outraged with 12 years of borrow-and-spend, credit card economies, when the rich went on a spree of high living and working America paid for it.

I am excited about what we are going to do today in this House. I am excited about today's Democratic budget proposal. It is a good deal for working America, and for our Nation's elderly. The Democratic proposal finally is going to make the rich pay their fair share and provides long-term investment in working America's future—in small business, in timber, and in home ownership.

Over the past decade the rich have gotten richer and working America has paid for it. The Republican agenda for the past 10 years has been to cut investment in America's future—to cut education, law enforcement, health care, and roads and bridges while the incomes of 60 percent of working America have virtually stood still. At the same time, the wealthiest Americans now enjoy an increase in their income of 87 percent. It's time, Mr. Chairman, to tell the richest 1 percent in this country that their party is over.

The American people have sent a clear message to the Bush administration and to Republicans—working families are not going to take it in the gut to bail out the wealthy. If the President closes down Government again, it will be because he wants to protect the wealthy. The Democrats are not going to put up with this blatant favoritism for the rich.

I am excited. This House of Representatives is going to stand up for working America today!

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER of Washington. Mr. Chairman, the so-called compromise agreement was rejected. So, like it or not, now is the chance to offer other alternatives on deficit reduction. But the alternative that Republicans wanted to offer was not allowed to be offered. That alternative responded to the American people by saying we should get deficit reduction with a hard freeze on discretionary domestic spending. Instead, all we are asked to consider is the Democratic alternative which calls for increases in domestic discretionary spending and does it through increasing taxes, not just on the rich, but on a typical middle-class family, at a rate of $610 a year. Most of that is an increase in income tax because of the elimination of an inflation adjustment for the personal exemption and an elimination of an inflation adjustment for tax brackets.

Mr. Chairman, this package should be rejected, and we should get the opportunity to offer a deficit reduction package that emphasizes spending restraint.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Florio-Dukakis tax plan.

Mr. Chairman, in framing the issue I say, "If you vote yes, you vote to raise $160 billion in taxes. If you vote no, you vote to allow us to cut spending by $410 billion without any new taxes."

I say to the American people, "Watch how your Congressman votes. Watch very carefully."

The Democrats say their plan taxes the rich. Let us see who pays these taxes.

I say to my colleagues, "If you are a married couple with two children and a taxable income of $34,000 in 1991, you will pay $313.50 more in taxes under this plan." That is really socking it to the rich.

Let us see who else is rich according to the liberal Democrats. They say, "You are rich if you take an income tax exemption for your kids, you are rich if you smoke cigarettes, if you drink beer, and if you buy an airplane ticket. You are also rich if you are single and your taxable income is $21,000. In that case your taxes will increase by 5 percent."

Then there is the upper rich, not to be confused with the rich. According to the liberal Democrats, if one files jointly and their taxable income exceeds $78,000, they are super rich.

Let us see a show of hands. How many of my super rich colleagues who are voting for the Democrat plan who will be earning $125,000 next year are willing to give their 25 percent pay raise to the super poor?

I say to my colleagues, "Come on. You are super rich. I don't see anybody raising their hand."

Mr. Chairman, I say to the American people, "Beware $160 billion tax increase on every working man and woman. Watch how your Congressman votes. You can pay them back in November."

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 seconds.

I say, Watch how your Congressman votes, because the test will be whether that Congressman votes for a fair package, for the deficit reduction, and not one that just puts the burden on the middle class and the poor.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. MOODY].

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, 2 weeks ago this Chamber rejected by about 60 percent on both sides a so-called bipartisan summit package that by almost any measure was not fair. It had heavy hits on the middle class on top of 10 years of hits through the payroll taxes and other ways. It has heavy blows on Medicare patients. It hit home heating oil and imposed a 2-week delay on unemployment compensation. Meanwhile it had almost no sacrifice in that package requested of the wealthy. In fact, there were $12 billion in tax giveaways for "growth" and another $4 billion in so-called energy incentives.

However, Mr. Chairman, today we have a chance to pass a very fair package. Both the bare bones package reported out by the Committee on Ways and Means without recommendation and the Democratic substitute are far more fair than the summit package. And they are real. They meet the $500 billion requirement of the President, unlike the Republican plan which does not. The Republican plan claims to cut only $400 billion, or only 80 percent of the assignment. In fact the reconciliation portion of the Republican plan, which we are debating today, only meets its assignment by about 50 percent.

Mr. Chairman, the Democratic alternative before us today is fair. It puts a 10-percent surtax on taxable incomes over $1 million. It asks those who make over $200,000 a year to pay a flat 33 percent of tax rate at the very top rather than dropping down to 28 percent, as they now do. It softens the hit on Medicare, removes the home heating fuel hit, removes the 2-week waiting period on unemployment compensation, and removes altogether the increase in gasoline tax—a heavy part of the excise package we rejected 2 weeks ago.

The key fact, I say to my colleagues, is that the Democratic alternative of the Committee on Ways and Means is the first package of all the packages being considered, that asks the wealthy to pay a greater proportionate sacrifice than the middle class. Every other package fails that test. I hope everyone will bear in mind this critical fact.

I urge adoption of the Democratic alternative deficit reduction package.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CRANE].

Mr. CRANE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], my colleague, for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I think at the outset it is important for us to understand that we are currently today being taxed in this Nation at record, all-time-high levels in the history of this Republic. The fact of the matter is, we are not undertaxed, we are overtaxed, and at a critical time when to add to that problem we are threatened by a fragile economy.

Back in January 1987, when our former Speaker, Jim Wright, was first elected, he was reported in the Washington Post as to a statement he made before a Democratic caucus when he was urging a major $65 billion tax increase at that time. Some of the Democrats, understandably, were dragging their feet, and they reminded him that we Republicans accused the Democrats of being the party of tax-and-spend. According to the Post article, Jim Wright says, "Well, it is true. We are the party of tax-and-spend. That is why people sent us here."

As my colleagues know, I would love to campaign against the opponent who gets out in the hustings with me, who says, "Vote for me, folks, and I will tax you, and I will spend your money."

There is some wisdom to Jim Wright's analysis, however. As my colleagues know, according to the Wright analysis, one quotes, "Tax the rich," because they are all Republicans; right? And then it is dispensed to favored groups out there, beneficiaries, to win votes in November. But the fact of the matter is, if my colleagues analyzed the components of the tax package, it taxes the rich, to be sure. They go into a fourth bracket now, 43 percent bracket, if they make $1 million a year. That is going to raise $7.6 billion. But let us look at some of the other components. The fact of the matter is, the only people who will be hit by a freeze on indexation are people defined as lower and middle income brackets. That is over a $17 billion hit there for just indexation freeze—1 year.

Who is going to suffer the most through the gas tax? Seventy-eight percent of the people in the lowest income brackets commute to work. Again, it is a hit on the people most severely in the lowest income brackets.

Beer and cigarette taxes, $15.5 billion; aviation excise tax because we know only the rich fly on airplanes, $12 billion; $10 billion from State and local employees; $5 billion on a 5-year extension of the unemployment surtax.

To be sure, we are creating a situation here where the rich may get a shot, and that can be dramatized, but it is the middle and lower income brackets that are going to take the biggest hit, and I urge Members to reject this continuation of business as usual.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. BENNETT].

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, we have a responsibility to act. The committee has done a good job in bringing before us a way in which we can act and act intelligently.

I feel the greatest mistake this country ever made in any one piece of legislation was the 1981 tax bill, which gave great benefits to large corporations and individuals who are very wealthy and got an undue gift from the Federal Government.

Now, lest anybody accuse me of being antirich, at one time when I was a young lawyer in my firm we represented people like Alfred I. Du Pont, Edward Bok, Charles Doering, among the most wealthy people in this country. I never met one of them that did not feel like he should pay his just taxes. So do not bash the rich. The rich are willing to make their proper contribution. At the present time they do not do so. This bill will make an effort in that direction.

Finally, before I close, I want to say to Members that all the tribulations we are having here today are not going to solve the fiscal situation of our country. There is only one way in which the fiscal situation in our country can be solved, and that is to eliminate programs.

We have a lot of programs, and I am not talking about reducing programs, I am talking about cutting out programs, even good programs. We had an excellent opportunity the other day to cut out the arts and humanities. We also have programs like community development funds, the mass transit funds, and things like that. These programs are good programs but are essentially local in nature. The people are in an antigovernment mood. They are antigovernment, and have an antitax point of view. They do not want to have big government.

We are not answering. The country is not giving the answer that it should to our constituents. The answer that our constituents want is less government. They have a right to ask for that. Thomas Jefferson, the founder of our party, said those who are governed best are governed least. That is something we ought to be hearing today in 1990.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY].

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Chairman, demagog long enough and you start believing your own demagogy. The Democrats assume that Americans are stupid. The Democrats say that we are here because Reaganomics has destroyed our economy. Mr. Chairman, Americans are not stupid. They have lived during Reaganomics. They remember that policies like the Democratic proposal we have before us today destroyed our economy under Carter. After getting only a small few of his proposals, President Reagan was responsible for lowering interest rates, arresting inflation, and creating 23 million new jobs during the longest growth period in our history.

Our deficits are created by spending, not by too little revenues. Let us reject demagogy and look at the facts.

Our revenues have gone up since 1981 by $500 billion, but our spending has gone up by over $700 billion. It is spending that is the problem, not too few revenues. Revenues have risen by 7.5 percent and spending by 9 percent over the last 10 years.

Americans are not stupid. The Democrats say the rich are not paying enough. Let us look at the IRS figures. They do not demagog. They know who owns what and what they pay.

The top 1 percent of income in this Nation pay 25 percent of the total income taxes paid in this country. The top 5 percent of income in this Nation pay 43 percent. The top 10 percent of income in this country pay over 55 percent of the income taxes collected in this country.

Indeed, the biggest target of the Democrat revenge, the 65,000 taxpayers with over $1 million in income, who represent only 6/100ths of 1 percent of all taxpayers, not only paid 11 percent of all the taxes paid, but they paid 41.3 percent of the total revenue increase in 1988. This means that the Democrats and their allies, like the Kevin Phillipses of the world, are engaged in the most astonishing and destructive, not to mention irresponsible, level of distortion on this issue. The result could be catastrophic for our economy.

The package before us is based on demagogy, and not on facts. This is a very important week for America. We can choose the failed economics of the Carter years that almost destroyed this country, or we can reject this package and come back to the real problem, spending. We can take the Republican economics of cutting spending, increasing growth and jobs, and rejecting raising taxes on middle-income America.

Mr. Chairman, this package will destroy our economy if it becomes law. Let us vote it down.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 seconds.

Mr. Chairman, if I might say to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DELAY], it has been the last 10 years of Republican policies that have brought us to the point where we have to confront a record deficit. That is the problem we need to confront at this time.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY], the chairman of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Omnibus Reconciliation Act for fiscal year 1991. I want to commend the chairman of the Budget Committee LEON PANETTA for a job well done. Veterans have been asked to help our Nation reduce a tremendous budget deficit, and I believe they are willing to do their fair share.

Pursuant to the reconciliation instructions contained in the budget resolution, the Committee on Veterans' Affairs met on Friday and adopted a package that CBO estimates will save $627 million in fiscal year 1991 and $3,602,000,000, during the next 5 fiscal years. Our committee is in full compliance with the instructions contained in the budget resolution.

The committee faced the dilemma of weighing our budget directives against our responsibility to millions of veterans who are depending on us to preserve and protect their benefits. I believe the committee met both objectives effectively, responsibly and fairly.

We carefully studied every VA program to determine where these reductions or revenue enhancements might be implemented to cause the least strain on the VA and on veterans who use its services.

In my opinion, these savings can be absorbed without undue hardship on any one VA program or on veterans who receive benefits and use VA services. Most changes in current law would be prospective and, therefore, would protect current beneficiaries. It is a package which I believe veterans generally will understand.

A 627-million-dollar cut in entitlements and increased revenues in the current fiscal year 1991 budget is a substantial amount; however, it is better than the alternative—$1.2 billion under Gramm-Rudman sequestration. Our veterans' benefits system simply could not bear such an enormous blow to its budget.

I support the savings proposals before us, not because they cut veterans' programs. I support them because they will help avert a national disaster. That is exactly what we face unless we get control of the budget deficit. We can no longer continue down the same path of fiscal irresponsibility.

The Committee on Veterans' Affairs has complied with the mandate of the House and I believe we have done our best to come up with a proposal that will not unduly impact our Nation's veterans.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN].

Mr. McMILLAN of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding and congratulate him on the excellent work he has done, as well as the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. MONTGOMERY].

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Democratic alternative. As an original supporter of the summit agreement, it is no pleasure to point out that this Democratic proposal has predictably moved too heavily to more unfair taxes to solve the deficit. The Republican substitute, which would have achieved some $25 billion more in spending reductions, has been ruled out of the floor debate.

There were two flaws in the original summit agreement; one was Medicare, which has been corrected by all parties. Second, the possible weight of excise taxes on middle-income people.

The American people must be made aware that the Democratic proposal we are considering today would dramatically increase the tax burden on middle-income American taxpayers, while it purports to "soak the rich."

The second largest tax increase in the Democratic bill is postponing tax indexation, which raises $36 billion over 5 years, not on the rich, but on working Americans.

For the middle-income American who did not want to pay roughly $14 more per year in cigarette taxes or $29 more per year in beer excise taxes, this Democratic proposal will add on this "indexation tax" on the order of $313.50 more for a couple with two children and taxable income of $34,000 per year. So much for tax fairness.

Mr. Chairman, I supported the original budget summit because, above all of the conflicting special interests, the American people expect us to solve the deficit problem, and to do it fairly and now. Political posturing is expected and appropriate at the beginning of the budget process, or in campaigns, but the time for fun and games is over. The expectation of the American people now is for a solution.

Mr. Chairman, I am under no illusions as to what the result of this vote is going to be today. The tax raisers will get their way. But I hope that the resulting conference will act in the national interest and produce an agreement that will attract a bipartisan majority in this House with a bill that the President can sign.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. COYNE].

Mr. COYNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Democratic fairness alternative.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. DE LA GARZA], the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the opportunity to speak briefly on this issue, and want to commend the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, who is also a distinguished member of the Committee on Agriculture, and all of the Members who have worked very, very diligently in this endeavor on both sides of the aisle.

Mr. Chairman, this year's long and difficult budget process has placed many unpleasant choices before us. Perhaps for no other committee have these choices been more difficult and painful than for the Committee on Agriculture which I chair.

The budget resolution calls for agriculture spending to be reduced by $1.022 billion in fiscal 1991 and a total of $13.627 billion over the next 5 years.

I come to the floor in support of the omnibus budget reconciliation bill and to briefly explain the agriculture title and what it contributes to the deficit reduction package and what it means for American farmers.

For 4 long days last week the members of the Committee on Agriculture struggled in our individual party caucuses, in a small bipartisan ad hoc group, and finally back to the full committee to come up with a reconciliation package.

This was the most troubling and the most painful budget debate we have ever experienced in the Agriculture Committee. You just can't reduce farm spending by 25 percent from our baseline levels without inflicting pain on somebody. We put proposals on the table, debated them, tore them apart, and put them back together again.

We argued about how to maintain equity among the commodities as we made these cuts. We had to settle on cuts that hit the corn farmers, the wool and dairy producers, the cotton farmer, the wheat producer, the tobacco farmers, and, yes, even the much-maligned honey producer in as equitable manner as possible.

But we made these cuts. We did it in an equitable and as fair a manner as possible. And most importantly, Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture developed a bipartisan reconciliation package.

Mr. Chairman, I want to take this opportunity to thank Mr. MADIGAN of Illinois, the committee's ranking Republican, for his work, his cooperation, and his willingness to have the committee work in unison. We met the reconciliation targets and we both put our names on the letter that was sent to the Budget Committee notifying Chairman PANETTA of our committee's action.

But more importantly, I want to thank the members of the Agriculture Committee for their long hours of work, their bipartisan spirit, and yes, their strength in making the tough choices we faced.

Mr. Chairman, the agriculture title of this reconciliation bill achieves spending reduction totaling $1.2 billion fiscal 1991, and $13.6 billion over the next 5 years.

How real are these cuts? Mr. Chairman, these cuts are very real. Our proposal reduces the amount acreage eligible for Government income support payments. On top of that, our proposal changes the way we calculate these deficiency payments.

The net result is that we are cutting the level of Government support of farmers by 25 percent from our baseline and a 25-percent cut in our farm bill.

Mr. Chairman, no other group of Americans is giving up so much for deficit reduction.

All the program commodities are sharing in these cuts. Wheat, corn, feed grains, cotton, and rice are all taking a hit.

Dairy and honey producers are taking a hit. Even the farm programs that operate at no Government cost, but receive Government protection, are sharing in this burden too: the sugar cane and sugar beet, tobacco, and peanut farmers.

Mr. Chairman, these are real cuts. Income support for American farmers is being cut because there is nowhere else to cut to meet our deficit reduction goals.

Mr. Chairman, I will note that this reconciliation language amends the House-passed farm bill. At about 4 o'clock this morning House and Senate conferees on the farm bill reached agreement on a 5-year reauthorization of our farm commodity, agricultural research, conservation, food stamps, and agricultural trade programs.

This legislation blends with the policies agreed to in that bill and will, as called for in the budget resolution, reduce the spending in that bill 25 percent below our baseline levels.

None of the changes we make in the agricultural title of reconciliation were made easily. This $13.6 billion package comes on top of the more than $30 billion we have been required to reduce agriculture spending by since 1981.

Finally, I want to bring to my colleagues' attention a clause contained in the agriculture section. That clause states that changes called for in this reconciliation package shall cease to be effective on July 1, 1992, if legislation to implement an agricultural trade agreement resulting from the Uruguay round of GATT is not enacted by June 30, 1992.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Agriculture added this clause with the concurrence of the chairman of the Budget Committee, Mr. PANETTA, to send a signal to our trade competitors. That message is that we will not unilaterally disarm American agriculture in the face of unfair subsidies and trade barriers by other nations. In this budget document we are committed to altering our domestic policies to meet budget constraints, but we will not do this without the protection of an international trading agreement.

Mr. Chairman, I hope my colleagues will recognize that if you don't think that agriculture is not being treated fairly in this budget process, you will at least admit that we are bearing a disproportionate share of deficit reduction.

I remind my colleagues that if you abolish the entire Department of Agriculture—and that would include food stamps, nutrition programs, research, and extension—you would reduce the Federal budget by only 4 percent. All of the money we spend on farm price support programs—what is often characterized in the press as the "subsidy for farmers"—amounts to less than 1 percent of the total trillion-dollar-plus Federal budget.

What we seem to forget is that farm programs have enabled us to be the best-fed people in the history of the world, and for the least amount of disposable income of any major industrialized country.

In the package before us today, we have tried to meet our reconciliation instructions in a way that is as fair as possible to farmers. We have tried to do so without disrupting program objectives. But, without question, this package severely alters the structure of farm programs.

The little line that barely shows up on a chart showing farm spending as part of the Federal budget just shrunk out of sight.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BALLENGER].

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Chairman, at this time of economic anguish here in the United States, on the verge of a recession, the worst thing we can do is to raise taxes. The Democrat reconciliation package includes $93.6 billion in tax increases that will shrink credit, raise interest rates, and guarantee that recession.

With layoffs occurring everywhere in the United States, you would think this tax sacrifice asked of the American people would be supported by a decrease in the size of the Federal Government. With our troops in the field, the only cuts in the Democrat package are in defense. The rest of the Government continues to grow.

This is obviously the opposite of what the American voter wants. I hope the voters recognize this before the election and before the depths of the recession created by this Democrat package.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes and 30 seconds to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. DENNY SMITH], a member of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Chairman, taxpayers know that this is a recipe for disaster. This economy cannot take a tax increase as planned by the House Ways and Means Committee. We should not even be in this position.

If we had frozen the growth in spending, the budget would be balanced now. A fair and simple approach, stop the growth in the Federal bureaucracy. Even starting this year we could get substantial savings, a $77 billion increase in revenue from economic growth. That could be applied to the deficit for deficit reduction and would eliminate the deficit in 4 to 5 years.

Instead, the free spending by the Democrats continues. Even under this much ballyhooed deficit reduction package, we have a $15 billion increase in discretionary spending. We have a $50 billion increase in entitlements. It completely wipes out any advantage of increase in revenue from a productive economy.

The President may buy off on this package, but I refuse to swallow this package. This package of Democrat assumptions, Democratic provisions, and Democrat philosophies of government is about to raise taxes over $170 billion first and then ask questions later.

My opposition is not an attempt to protect any segment of our economy. No new taxes means no taxes for anyone, not the largest tax bill ever devised. The costs are passed on to the taxpayers at every opportunity, but our Government gets no smaller. This is business as usual.

Behind my no-new-taxes stance are some fundamental assumptions: Less government; not more. People should be given the opportunity and incentive to make their own decisions about their own lives. Before throwing more money at this huge bureaucracy, we must make it more responsive.

I urge my colleagues to vote no on this proposal. We need a flexible freeze on spending. Balance the budget with no new taxes.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Mr. Chairman, this is an important afternoon. We vote on hundreds of matters in this Chamber afternoon after afternoon. But this vote is particularly important because it is going to affect the people of this Nation for a long time.

It is not an easy vote. When we are talking about increasing taxes and cutting programs, it is very difficult. This vote is going to make the people in our districts unhappy, people who are just trying to make ends meet and do not need any new taxes. But the process must go forward.

I went home this weekend and here is what my people told me: "Go back there. Do what you have to do. Get a budget."

Recently we watched on television, as many of our people did at home, the program on the Civil War. It was a difficult time then, but there were people in this Chamber like there are today that made the process work. Last night they covered on television Watergate again. A difficult time, but again there were people who made the process work.

This time is no different. Deficit reduction is hard but we must do it.

Also, let me point out, Mr. Chairman, some of my constituents say pass a budget because your President, my President, the President of all of us should focus his attention on the Middle East. He should not be worrying about whether he is going to close down the Government again or whatever he is not. He should be worrying about making sure that we resolve the situation in the Middle East, diplomatically or economically, but so that we do not find ourselves in a war that he did not have his total attention on, which of course he wants to have.

The third reason I think we have to say something this afternoon why this is not so embraceable is the fact that Congress has only had a few weeks to try to put this package back together. Of course, in January we had the budget, and then we had the summit, and then we had the mini-summit, but what we have before us today is probably by far the fairest budget we can do. I really think, Mr. Chairman, we have to get a majority of the votes this day, get it into conference and get it out again, and go home.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER].

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Chairman, America has two alternatives—we are told the Republican alternative doesn't meet the President's deficit reduction challenge. So the House won't even have the chance to vote on it.

We are told the Democratic alternative is better, even though its supporters obviously don't think it can withstand head on head competition.

Mr. Chairman, contrary to what we are being told the Republican alternative lowers the level of deficit spending. The Democratic tax and spend proposal will do little work than tax us into recession, leaving us with a higher level of deficit spending.

The Republican proposal is progrowth, antirecession, and encompasses spending controls and process reform.

The Democratic plan is soak the rich rhetoric, then business as usual tax, spend, and decline. Anyone who believes this antiprogress and anti-take-home-pay scheme will actually reduce the deficit should be in the market for cheap junk bonds or a gulf-view condo in Kuwait.

The Democrat plan will push the economy over the edge and when we are in recession and the deficit mushrooms they will be pointing fingers, instead of looking in mirrors.

The Republican alternative keeps faith with the taxpayers and with the retirees, and with the young people who will be looking for meaningful employment * * * young people who will be taxed out of jobs by the Democrat tax and spend scheme.

Its time to quit trying to mobilize support for high tax programs by cultivating envy. The Republicans have a positive alternative, let's bring down the deficit by controlling spending, not raising taxes.

The American people are not fooled by all this tax the rich rhetoric. The Democrats have been in control of this House for decades. All the tax hikes and loopholes were not put in place by the Republican minority. We cannot even get our bill on the floor for an honest vote.

Finally, next year when our people are suffering recession, they will know who to blame for no jobs and increasing deficits, it will be the Democrat Party who refused even to permit an alternative from being considered, who will bare the blame. And all your talk about the wicked 1980's won't change the fact that you have taken America back to the depressing 1970's.

□ 1630

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 seconds just to make clear that the Republicans were not denied the opportunity to offer an amendment. They were denied the opportunity to offer an amendment that did not meet the numbers.

They could have fashioned it in any way they wanted as long as they met the numbers. So this is not the issue of whether or not they had the opportunity to offer an amendment.

We wanted them to offer one that met the numbers that the President wanted us to achieve in terms of deficit reduction.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCMILLEN].

Mr. MCMILLEN of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Rostenkowski amendment and want to commend the gentleman from California.

As had been said many times today, it is not a perfect agreement. Passing it sends a signal to the world that we, in fact, can govern and that we can govern with fairness. Remember, my Republican colleagues, the outline of what the President and the Democratic leadership agreed to, $350 billion in spending cuts over 5 years and $150 billion in revenue. We must make sure that we enforce that formula.

I would like to refute a couple of arguments that have been made on the other side that spending is out of control over the last 9 years. If we look at a chart from the Congressional Budget Office, we will see that interest has grown in the last 9 years by 146 percent. This is the reason why we have a deficit. The S&L scandal, the HUD scandal are costing this Government billions of dollars, and the 1981 tax cut that eroded the revenue base of the Federal Government is costing us billions of dollars.

In fact, if we look at this chart, look at outlays minus interest, true spending, spending has grown by 59 percent, but revenues have gone up by 65 percent, so clearly spending has not been out of control. The fact is we do not have enough revenue, and that is what the President has agreed on.

We must be realistic. Let us put away our electioneering, our partisanship and move forward with a budget.

The second point I would like to make is that if we add this tax increase of $150 billion that the President has agreed on, somehow we are going to throw this country into a recession. We are talking about $19 billion in 1991, less than 2 percent of the budget of the U.S. Government, not only next year, but through the 5 years. If that throws this country into a recession, this country is in a lot worse shape than I thought it was, and it means that we ought to do something serious about the deficit today.

That is why I urge the passage of the Rostenkowski package.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Budget spoke a moment ago and said that our amendment did not conform to the summit agreement.

I must tell the Members that there is nothing that is being presented on this floor that conforms to the summit agreement. The committee bill and the Rostenkowski amendment do not conform.

I must further tell the Members that, based against the CBO baseline, there is no alternative today that exceeds $500 billion or reaches it. It is only the expanded summit baseline that makes this package before us equal to $500 billion savings.

The reason it makes $500 billion is because the majority was willing to take the baseline from the summit, and to take $500 billion from the summit, but not to take the rest of the summit agreements.

What they are telling us is, "You cannot offer an amendment unless you do the same dumb things we Democrats have done." We Republicans are unwilling to do that, and we will let the public decide whether it was fair for them not to let us offer our amendment or not. We are not going to let Democrats decide what was fair.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HILER].

Mr. HILER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I have been in this body for 10 years, and I must say there have been very few times where the difference between the parties has been as clearly indicated as it is today.

Earlier today the Republicans tried to bring up on this floor a budget proposal which would reduce spending by nearly $410 billion over the next 5 years as our plan to try to get a handle on the deficit, no tax increases.

The Democrats, on the other hand, are bringing proposals forward which would increase taxes by nearly $170 billion. The gentleman from Maryland who spoke just a short few minutes ago, I think, clearly articulated the differences. He said the problem we have is not that our spending is out of control, it is that we do not have enough revenues. That is clearly the difference between the parties today.

The Democrats continue to believe that we have a shortage of taxes, and the Republicans continue to believe we need to strive for more spending cuts.

I believe, as the gentleman from Minnesota has said, that the American public will side with our side.

But getting beyond the tax-and-spend, and spend-and-tax aspects of this, I think it is sheer lunacy, with an economy on the ropes, with $40-a-barrel oil, to be worried about the deficit in 1995. We ought to be concerned about a recession in 1991.

There is absolutely nothing in this package that we are debating today that will help us prevent that recession in 1991. I have yet to hear of a single economist say that if we pass this deficit-reduction plan there is going to be a big dramatic decrease in interest rates.

We have heard maybe, maybe 25 basis points in short-term rates. My friends, anybody who believes a drop in interest rates of 25 basis points in short-term rates will keep us out of a recession is acting in a different world than I think the rest of us are acting in.

Vote the proposal down.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS].

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment Mr. PANETTA for the masterful job he did in getting us to this point, and to compliment the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, for the amendment which he will be offering which I think will present the American people as well as this body with a fair budget and tax proposal.

Those who partied during the Reagan years will now be expected to pay their fair share.

But now let me ask: How is it that the Republicans all of a sudden have found a way of dealing with their crisis of not being able to get together? Up until yesterday their position was that they were not going to offer any package at all.

That would not have sounded very good, so they came up with a solution. They offered a package which could not be accepted, could not be accepted because the President has said, and here we are 3 days away from the deadline, the President has said that unless his parameters, $500 billion deficit reduction over 5 years, are met, he will veto the reconciliation package.

So what do the Republicans do? They come forward with a $410 billion package, no taxes. How do they get to that point?

Rollcall, which is the congressional newspaper, spells it out, headline, "GOP Strategists Advise Hill Republicans in Tight Races to Run Against the President." That is what they are doing at this point. They are not running against us. They are running against the President of the United States, the President of their own party.

It seems to me that if we want this process to move forward, to adopt a fairer package, to keep the Government from being shut down again, the thing to do is to adopt the Democratic package and ignore the rule-or-ruin tactic that the Republicans are trying to foist on us.

Mr. Chairman, the crux of the budget debate is this: Who pays more?

Do we reduce the budget deficit by taxing mom, dad, grandma, and grandpa, and leave the millionaires largely untouched?

Over a week ago, this House said "no."

Today, we have a chance to prove that we can reduce the budget deficit, and we can do it fairly. The thrust for a progressive budget package is unstoppable.

Let's be sure of 1 thing. There is a world of difference between this Democratic budget package and the Bush administration's. The Democratic budget raises, $16 billion in revenues for fiscal year 1991, $10 billion of which comes from the 1 percent of Americans with the highest incomes. The Bush budget sought $20 billion in revenues, but only $3.2 billion from the top 1 percent.

Apparently, the Bush administration's concept of balancing the budget is having the lower- and middle-income people pay for the tax increases, see their Medicare payments increased, and watch the tax credits fall to the wealthy.

The clock has run out on the Reagan party for the rich. While we were on Reagan's watch, the size of the Federal debt doubled, the number of millionaires doubled, and one of the most corrupt administrations in U.S. history severely damaged the Federal Government.

President Bush wanted to keep the party going with his budget package. But, in 1990, Congress will not continue to wink at the rich and famous of this country, while socking it to the middle class and the working poor. The American people must be clear on this point.

It is a colossal political blunder on the part of the Republicans to cater to the wealthy with tax cuts and to defend the tax bubble. It's time to make the wealthiest 1 percent pay their fair share and burst the tax bubble.

Let's vote for this budget package. Let's reduce the budget deficit. And let the onus be on President Bush if he insists on vetoing a budget package that is progressive and fair, and let him explain it to the American people. The ultimate question still remains: Who will pay for the Reagan revolution?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. ARMEY].

Mr. ARMEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Let me make a quick static comparison of the two propositions, well, the one proposition before us and the one that should have been before us, using the CBO static scoring method sanitized for the insular world of Washington politics.

The package before us, the package granted permission to be brought to the floor by the Committee on Rules controlled by the Democrat Party, ask us to vote $170 billion with increased taxes in order to achieve what is scored as $483 billion worth of reduced deficits.

We were denied the right to bring a Republican alternative that would have had no increase in taxes, and would have been scored to reduce the deficit by $410 billion through spending cuts alone. That means there are $97 billion more in spending in the Democrat package brought to the floor than what would have been in the Republican package that was not brought to the floor. There are $127 billion in taxes in the Democrat package brought to the floor that are not in the Republican package that was denied the right to come to the floor.

What is real is that there are real tax rate increases. There are real spending increases. These will survive when we move from Washington to the real world. However, when we get this package in implementation in the real world, should this package be passed, historical precedent tells Members that in the dynamics of the real world, the spending will go up more than what is projected. The tax receipts will go down. We will have an unrealized deficit reduction. The economy will be in a recession, and all that will have grown will have been the size of the Government and the power of the Democrat majority in Congress that has enabled it to deny the American people the right to have considered today, through a Democrat rule, not a democratic rule, to have considered today a nontax increasing real deficit reduction package. I say, vote "no."

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLPE].

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the package that is before Members. I think the only responsible decision we can make is to embrace this package, as well as the Rostenkowski amendment.

The deficit crisis we face is real. It is destroying our economy. Our future is being undermined. We are affecting a tremendous transfer of wealth, American wealth, overseas into foreign interests. During the eighties the United States devolved from the largest creditor nation in the world to largest debtor, and we saw our share of the top banks and corportations in the world slip. We are losing control of our economic destiny, as more and more decisions which affect American jobs are made outside the United States.

It is time now to get our economic house in order. We have to begin that process today, not tomorrow. As my colleague from Texas, Mr. STENHOLM, says, "When you're in a hole, and you want to get out, the first rule of thumb is to stop digging." I believe that it is time to stop digging a deeper hole.

The deficit reduction package that we have before Members is as real as the crisis itself. There are no easy or painless solutions. We all know that. There is no quick fix. The spending cuts and revenue increases in the package before us are both needed in order to end the crisis.

The majority of the package, indeed, is spending cuts. Three hundred billion of the $500 billion are spending cuts, and they are real. Make no mistake about it, all Americans will be asked to sacrifice in order to get our economy back on track.

This package will be accepted by the American people if we have the guts today to embrace it, because the American people understand that we have to take control of our destiny. What they insist upon, however, is that the burden of deficit reduction be spread fairly—that there is no category of the population, particularly those wealthy Americans who have benefited the most from the Reagan economic policies—that is exempt from the burden of deficit reduction.

This package is a fair package. It will insist, it will require that the very wealthiest 1 percent of our citizens—Americans who have experienced huge tax cuts in the past 10 years and have seen their income grow from an average of $313,000 to $550,000 per year, so that today they command as much wealth as the bottom 40 percent of the population—will finally have to pay their fair share.

Let Members be clear about two things. There is no way to reach the deficit reduction targets agreed to by the President, by the bipartisan leadership of the House and Senate, without a combination of both spending cuts and new revenues. Let Members be equally clear that the reality of the no tax pledges that so many of our colleagues have taken has been to lock in an unfair tax system and ensure that the very wealthiest among us will be exempt from any of the burdens of deficit reduction. It also means that the lion's share of deficit reduction will fall, again, on middle and lower income Americans—who have been squeezed enough.

We are, in this package that is before Members today, able to dramatically reduce the cuts that were originally going to be imposed upon Medicare recipients. We have been able to eliminate the provision that was calling for a 2-week delay in unemployment compensation payments. We have been able to reduce the burden upon family farmers. we have been able to do that precisely because we were willing in this package to say that the wealthy who have been the beneficiaries of the past years should now stand up and pay their bill for the party they have enjoyed for the last decade.

Let Members get beyond this immediate crisis, and get our country onto a much more positive future. Let Members enact the package today.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. JAMES].

Mr. JAMES. Mr. Chairman, time is running out on us. It is the middle of October, and still the Congress has not passed a budget. It is a shameful situation. But what is even more shameful is the fact that the Democrats in Congress continue to advocate a tax increase as the solution. They try to shroud the justification for this in talk of tax fairness and equity, but it is not true. The bottom line is that their proposals to add new taxes are being made to cover the fact that they cannot find the will to control spending.

I have heard a lot of talk about tax fairness that everyone needs to pay their fair share.

All of these things of course are true. But the cure proposed by the Democrats is wrong. If you want to eliminate the bubble, eliminate it, that's fair. But do not use that as the excuse to raise taxes on the middle class. What is not fair is the practice of increasing spending and then using class warfare as a justification for raising taxes to cover it. At a time when our economy is slowing down, we do not need higher taxes. And at a time when the fabric of our society is being strained, we do not need to be fanning the flames of hatred and jealousy by invoking class or any other differences.

The Republicans have a better solution: let us cut spending. It is the only real solution to the problem.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5835, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act, along with the Democratic alternative amendment which drops several revenue provisions and reduces the amount to be taken out of Medicare.

Our budget chairman, Mr. PANETTA, said earlier today that this is perhaps the toughest vote we will have to cast all year. Mr. Chairman, I am a member who feels that. Our country has taken a decade-long holiday from fiscal responsibility, and it is a painful and difficult process to turn that around. But the alternative, is the President himself has finally recognized, is fiscal ruin, further deterioration of our dangerously weakened economy. We simply must act, and act decisively. There is no other responsible choice.

That is why the attitude of our Republican colleagues is so disappointing. They have been unable to come up with a package that does the job. They know that even $500 billion over 5 years in deficit reduction would not completely solve our problem, and yet they say that is too much; they simply cannot put a plan together. So they fall back on the stale rhetoric of the past, trying to mask the fact that they do not have a genuine alternative to put on the table.

Well, the Rules Committee did the right thing in saying that the only alternatives that can be offered are those which meet the ground rules laid down by the President and leaders of both parties—namely $500 billion in defict reduction. If the Rules Committee said to us Democrats, "You can miss the target by $100 billion," then of course we could spare ourselves some political heartburn as well. But we wouldn't get the job done that the American people rightly expect us to do.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, despite all the rhetoric about taxes, that this is a package that mainly relies on spending cuts—two-thirds of the $500 billion in savings. It is not primarily a tax package, but a package of spending cuts and enforcement measures that will send a long overdue signal that America's decade of fiscal irresponsibility is over.

This package is also fairer than many suggested it would be when the budget resolution was adopted 2 weeks ago. The Ways and Means Committee had taken full advantage of the flexibility the summit agreement and the budget resolution gave them, and the result is a package that shares the burden of deficit reduction far more equitably. The gasoline tax increase is gone—entirely. The home-heating oil tax is eliminated. The most onerous Medical reductions have been removed. And we are finally going to ensure that the wealthiest among us—those who have benefitted most from the shifts in the tax burden over the last 10 years—will pay their fair share.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, it is a tough vote, but it is also a necessary vote. It is a vote that will separate those who simply talk about fiscal responsibility and defict reduction from those who are determined actually to do something about it. It is time to stand up for our children and grandchildren and to stop passing to them the bill for our excesses. It is time to muster the courage to pass a true deficit reduction package, so that we can get to work on the numerous challenges facing our country. I urge a "yea" vote.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL].

Mr. FAWELL. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that one just cannot be responsible insofar as the majority is concerned if one is against raising taxes. In the final analysis, there is a not a finer man or a harder worker in this body than the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], but what he has in his reconciliation bill is a giant tax increase and the usual promises for "out-year" spending restraints.

I have not yet seen real deficit reduction since I have been in Congress, and I am in my sixth year now. I have seen a lot of new taxes. They are for real. They come with the summit agreements which are presented to Congress from time to time. I have seen all these pledges about out years, that we will have spending constraints and so forth and so on. That has never happened. Indeed, I think the majority is absolutely incapable of real spending cuts or ever eliminating a program. The bias in this body is for spending and then taking more to cover still more spending.

As a Member of Congress, and mostly I am talking to the majority party, we have got to look in the mirror and we have to see that we, ourselves, are the overspenders. We can't blame anyone else. We, the Congress, the majority party basically, is responsible for the fact that in 1990, this "out-year" of previous summits and of Gramm-Rudman, for instance, ran up a $220 billion deficit when we were supposed to have a big fat zero! That does not count $135 billion in borrowing from trust funds. That is $355 billion of new debt in a year when we are supposed to have zero deficit—a balanced budget, for instance. And next year it is estimated that $293.7 billion of new deficits will be incurred and $145 billion more from trust fund borrowing, or a total of $438 billion will be added to our national debt. That is about $800 billion of new debt, almost a trillion dollars, in just 2 years—at a time when Federal taxes are as great as they have ever been. So the problem is not a lack of taxes! It's simply profligate overspending.

I speak to you people on the other side of the aisle. You have not balanced a budget for 20 years in a row. How do you justify that? You are in control here. And you have got a $290 billion in interest on the national debt that you have to pay out each year for nothing—to transfer to the very rich, because that is the amount of interest payments owed in 1991 to the foreign and domestic investors.

I mean, can you not once in a while look in the mirror and see that you have been prolifigate in overspending and the reason we have got to pay out $290 billion per year that buys nothing is because we have not been able to control our chronic overspending?

It is time that we looked at overspending and had some respect for the evil it represents. It is time for line-item veto power for the President, and real budget reform and, yes, elimination of low-priority programs and a prescription on new Federal spending. None of that is in your reconciliation bill and without those reforms all of your promises to control outyear spending in 1992 to 1995 mean nothing. We know that from experience.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 seconds to just urge the gentleman to look at the overall package, because two-thirds comes out of spending restraint and 30 percent comes out of revenue, so I think it is a pretty balanced package.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS], the chairman of the Committee on Government Operations.

Mr. CONYERS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 5835. In its final form, after all the amendments are adopted, it will be a good bill given the limitations placed on the legislative branch to reach agreement with a President more intent on preserving the privileges of the wealthy than on rebuilding our economy and restoring fairness.

I had hoped to be voting today for a package that is not only fiscally responsible, but also makes major new investments in our people, realizes the full possibilities of an end to the cold war, and fully recovers from the wealthy what was stolen from the rest of the American people during the greedy days of the 1980's.

However, with the adoption of the Rostenkowski amendment on revenues and entitlements, I believe this bill represents a significant step in the right direction.

Mr. Chairman, as the chairman of the Committee on Government Operations which has principal jurisdiction over reforms to the budget process, I also am here to offer my views on title XIV of the reconciliation bill, which makes extensive revisions to the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law and to the Congressional Budget Act.

It is not easy for me to come before this body to speak in favor of including this title into the Reconciliation Act. In a very real sense we are creating Gramm-Rudman-Hollings 3. I opposed the original Graham-Rudman-Hollings law in 1985. I opposed the revisions made in 1987. And if I could have my way today I would propose a significantly different budget process reform bill.

But this title, like the budget resolution the House passed last week, is a product of extensive negotiations with the administration at the budget summit. Budget task force meetings among relevant House committees have worked out the details of title XIV. Everyone knows the fate of the summit agreement is intimately linked with the budget process revisions and enforcement provisions of this title.

There are two important provisions in this title the American people should know about. First, the surplus in the Social Security trust fund will no longer be able to be used by this "read my lips and read my hips" President to mask the true size of the deficit. Truth in budgeting will be advanced and the elderly better protected.

Second, the administration will no longer be able to manipulate economic assumptions and overestimate tax collections, in order to trigger a sequester to reduce the deficit. As a result, Congress should no longer face the demagoguery of the White House as it tries to blame the Congress for causing a sequester which in reality is caused by unrealistic numbers from OMB.

The changes envisioned by this title will undoubtedly create a straitjacket approach to Federal budgeting. This probably will ensure that greater deficit reduction is achieved than in previous years. On the other hand, it will take a great deal of discretion away from Congress when it comes to setting spending and revenue policy.

For the next 3 years, and perhaps for the next 5 years, our hands will be tied tight. We will have little opportunity to raise new taxes to pay for our mounting social needs, to take advantage of what should be a large peace dividend, and to fund new investments needed to meet our urgent human needs and to make our work force more productive. And outside of today's vote on the Rostenkowski amendment, we will also have little ability to recoup the huge tax breaks which the wealthy have received over the past decade from supply-side economics. Such restrictions truly make these budget process revisions a mixed blessing.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LIGHTFOOT].

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, we have heard a lot of discussion this afternoon about the numbers. We have heard a lot of glowing rhetoric of why one package is good and why one package is bad. I would suggest that people who are watching this should listen to 10 percent of it, the other 90 percent of it put in the trash can where it belongs.

But for just a moment, why are we having this discussion today? I would suggest to my colleagues that it boils down to the simple fact that the Democratic leadership in the Congress does it deliberately in a premeditated plan to force us into government by crisis. When we get into a situation where we have government by crisis with the constant threats of shutting down the Government, who wins?

The answer is, the senior Democratic leadership who wishes to push through a package loaded up with all the wonderful goodies that they want, with all the wonderful taxes that they want. The bottom line of what we have done is make a shambles of representative government because people with different opinions and different ideas who were sent here to express those opinions are effectively shut out of the process.

I think what we have seen displayed here today, the sheer raw power, the sheer arrogance, the sheer push to see that only one package is brought to this floor, is the best demonstration that you can ever see of what is happening in the Congress of the United States, where quite frankly we have four or five men in senior leadership positions who are ruling this country, effectively shutting the American people out. It is time for a taxpayers' revolt. I am ready to sign up.

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. DORGAN].

Mr. DORGAN of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, I have been listening to this debate in my office. It was interesting to think that this country is literally drowning on debt. It is almost like a Titanic headed for an economic iceberg. The debate here is quibbling about room service.

When, oh when, is there going to be a wake up call for everybody in this Government? Each side has something to offer in this debate.

Yes, we ought to cut spending. Of course, we ought to cut spending, and we do so in our package. You are right about that; but yes, we need more revenue. Will you not wake up? We must have more revenue as well. The goal, after all is to reduce the national debt by $500 billion—not some trifling sum.

I have been about 10 minutes on the floor and I have heard the words hatred, jealousy, class warfare. What tired foolish empty rhetoric from people who apparently have walked away from responsibility to govern.

The President sent a budget down here and not one of you on the other side offered it. We made in order a rule that said you could offer it not just that budget—you can tinker with it, you can make changes, and you did not offer it.

Now we have allowed the Republicans who went to the Rules Committee and said, "We want to offer an alternative today, but we can't come up with the $500 billion; $400 billion is our plan. We want to borrow $100 billion more and have the grandchildren pay for it.

What kind of a plan is that?

Then you stand on the floor and blame the Democrats. In ranching country we have a saying that describes that kind of a proposal. "All hat and no saddle."

Why do we not decide to get the best of that both sides have to offer? Why do we not put something together that heads this country in the right direction, that really does reduce the deficit? After all, good government is much more than good sloganeering. Let us decide today to join hands and take the best ideas from each side. The best that both have to offer and put this country back on track.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. GRANT].

Mr. GRANT. Mr. Chairman, I want my colleagues on this side of the aisle to know that I know the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA]. I believe that his motives are entirely good in this effort. I know him. He is a decent and honorable man. I think the issue here is that we just fundamentally disagree on how we ought to be approaching the solution to this budget issue. We at least have agreed on one thing, and that is that we need to balance our budget.

There are just four ways that we can do it. We can increase taxes. We can cut spending. We can increase productivity, or we can do some of those three.

The Democrats have said, well, let us raise some money, $150 billion or $180 billion over 5 years. Let us cut some spending and it will add up to $500 billion deficit reduction over 5 years.

Those of us who are Republicans have some problems with their specifics. In the first place, we do not think we need to raise taxes. We pretty much dislike the fixation that has been put here on the rich against the poor. The fact is, we do not want to tax anybody, rich or poor.

There is a simple fact here, too. There are just not enough rich people to go around to spread that much taxes. Instead, we think there is a better way. We can cut Government spending. We can freeze spending levels, and that is real freezes, not spending adjusted for the cost of continued programs, not the silly way, but freezing real spending.

We can cut foreign aid. In our program, if we were allowed to offer it, it would have cut foreign aid by $10 billion.

We could have cut defense by $170 billion. Then we could have cut some entitlement programs on which most of the Democrats and Republicans agree.

The fact of our argument today is that we just do not think we ought to stop at this point, that we are being forced to stop at this point. We would have preferred to continue the negotiations a little further or even had a vote on our proposal.

Now, I did not vote to sequester the Government. I voted for those extensions of the Government. I thought it was reasonable to do so and would have done so again.

I think what we need at this point, Mr. Chairman, is just a little more time.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMITH].

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the chairman for yielding, and I wish to pay tribute, great tribute for the incredible amount of work and effort that the chairman has put into this.

Let us not talk to each other with our own words. Let us hear from somebody else, an interested observer, the editorial in this week's U.S. News & World Report, and I quote:

George Bush dramatically asserts that our nation may not survive the "cancer" of the deficit and solemnly advises us: "When you get a bill, the bill must be paid. When you write a check, you're supposed to have money in the bank." Well, Mr. Bush, America has been writing checks without money in the bank for the 10 years you have been Vice President and President. If deficits were so dangerous, where were you when the Deficit Decade added more than $2 trillion to the national debt? No wonder this turnaround and other flip-flops arouse such cynicism and anger.

Mr. Bush loses more credibility as a fair guardian of the Treasury by his obsession with maintaining the lowest rates that the very rich pay and reducing the capital-gains tax; even Republicans acknowledge that such measures would increase the deficit by $19 billion over five years. His justification for lower taxes for the rich is that this would actually help middle and lower-income groups by stimulating the overall economy and creating jobs.

Remember that, trickle down? Are you all wet enough yet?

How's that? In the 1980s, when we had low marginal tax rates for the rich, growth rates for the GNP, productivity, savings and investment all went down, compared with the three previous decades when deficits were lower and tax rates were higher. Without the huge increase in second earners, mainly women, there would have been no increase at all in real family income. The truth is that the economy benefits more from lower deficits and lower interest rates than it does from lower marginal tax rates, higher deficits and higher interest rates.

That is a disinterested observer of this process.

We are here after 10 years because of profligate defense spending and two ill-advised tax cuts pushed by two Republican Presidents, supported by the bulk of the Republicans in this House.

Mr. Chairman, it is time to pay the bill. It was a mistake. Now we are trying to cure it. We have got a package of spending cuts and tax savings by virtue of putting back where it belongs the tax rate on people who can afford to pay and not have the middle class get it once again. And the reality is when it comes to step up to the plate to hit that ball, make a home run for America, the Republicans are nowhere to be found. Democrats are going to do this.

If that is what it is going to take, oh, yes, we will do it. And it is not anything that has to do with taxes, that the American people are upset about; it is that they are upset that taxes are being paid by them and not by people who can afford it more.

We are going to rectify that, whether you like it or not, whether the President likes it or not. It is going to be rectified, and the people of this country are going to have a progressive tax system that works for America.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the chairman of the Republican conference, the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Chairman, I would remind the gentleman from Florida that it has been the Democratic Party that has dominated this House for 40 years. The House, by our Constitution, pases appropriation bills. They have their origin here. If the deficit is the result of spending, and I think the public understands that, it clearly lies in the laps of the Democratic majority.

Mr. Chairman, the liberal Democrat leadership plan is a half baked recipe for recession. It cynically panders to the poor, while extending Democratic rhetoric to soak the rich. Twice cynical because their 10 percent tax on those who earn over $1 million raises little money and has the purpose of diverting attention from a cleverly crafted provision to increase taxes on the backs of working Americans.

Tax rates rise from 28-33 percent and hide their plan to return to bracket creep. Remember bracket creep—whereby inflation pushed working families through upper brackets because of inflation alone? That is the time bomb hidden in this political plan crafted with elections only 3 weeks away.

To the liberal Democrat leadership—it's your choice as we go to conference. Will your majority in both Houses decide to govern or will it be business and politics as usual?

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Montana, [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the chairman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, the American people have denied the Republicans the majority leadership in this Congress for a third of a century. Today we are witnessing the reason for that. The Republicans in this House do not conduct themselves as the loyal opposition. They are not a political party attempting to govern.

The Republicans in this House are a political terrorist SWAT team. They have taken their own President hostage, and they are using him as a shield against the American voter.

By failing to even develop a budget that meets the Gramm-Rudman budget summit requirements for deficit reduction, the Republicans have adopted a scorched-Earth position of opposing everything, their own President, the Senate, and the House.

These Rambos of the right, unable to govern, have no plan to offer, want no compromise, seek no consensus. They desperately intend this mindless assault of political terrorism to distract, to confuse and to frighten.

The Republicans in this House want to mine the harbors, burn the villages, take no hostages, savage their own President, lay waste to this institution and enrage the public's anger at incumbents and at this Congress.

Make no mistake, they do not want to govern, they only want to lay waste.

You do not deserve to govern, because you cannot govern.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself one-half minute to try to recover from that savage onslaught against this 40 percent of the House for having despoiled America all these years. It is a bit of a surprise that while we have served in our oppressed minority, we have made all this policy, however incendiary.

We certainly apologize to the gentleman from Montana if our 40 percent, which has never been allowed to make an amendment, has disrupted any of his service here in the House with its fierce power.

Mr. Chairman, with that, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RITTER].

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, the real damage of the Democratic budget package is in its rich-versus-poor, soak-the-rich rhetoric.

It will do harm to economic growth in this country. I think it is economic growth which produces the tax revenues. It is economic growth, stalled at the present time, which has made the deficit yawn open.

Liberal Democrats have absolutely learned nothing from the 1980's period of economic recovery. We had the longest period of economic recovery in the history of the United States of America, and we did it with a doubling of tax revenues.

Now, those tax revenues just happened to rise when the tax rates were cut.

One other assault on economic growth: The middle class is about to lose indexing. They say 1 year. Well, it is 1 year and then all the years after it, if they go back to indexing. But who sitting here believes that the taxocrat Democrat Party is going to give up this wonderful source of new revenues for new programs that they can go out and present to their constituency.

Let us face it, Democrats are elected because they provide these presents for all these people.

That is the real difference, ladies and gentlemen, between the two parties; one sees the strength of America as Federal programs provided to as big a constituency as humanly possible, and the other sees the strength at the grassroots back home in our congressional districts.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. VISCLOSKY].

Mr. VISCLOSKY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, in going door to door this weekend, I bumped into a gentleman who had emigrated from England, was recently naturalized, and asked if I had watched the series on the Civil War. He wanted to talk about the budget.

□ 1710

Mr. Chairman, I said, "Yes, I have," and he said, "Do you realize that 620,000 people died to provide this Nation with a strong and vital future, and people like me want you to preserve that, and to make a decision and to lead?"

Mr. Chairman, that is what we are are here today about, and that is why I support the Democratic package.

I feel constrained, not wanting to place blame, to respond to several arguments made on the other side, however, the rhetoric of Dr. Feelgood, and that is in 1980 we were told can solve the budget problem by simply helping the wealthy. In 1990, we are told we can solve the budget problem by cutting the deficit less, and there is no taxes in our package.

I would simply ask, "What do you call the additional $20 billion in interest that the American people are going to have to pay because you fell short today by $100 billion?"

We must adopt the Democractic package. We must lead this country, and we must act responsibly.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentlewoman from Illinois [Mrs. MARTIN].

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, rather than calling anyone awful or terrible, just maybe we could look at the bill for a second. I am even willing to admit, although we have different roles, we would all like to cut the deficit. I really have never heard of a politician of any party saying, "Let's have a big deficit." So, let us not accuse. We may differ on how we want to get there.

As I looked at this bill, because, as one tries to make decisions, the one thing I do not think has been made clear enough to any of us is that in the particular bill we are voting on 70 percent of the bill is new revenues. Some are taxes, some are user fees, some are increased costs. But for those who talk about savings, as if perhaps there is change in a program addict, differences that would exist past this first year, I think that is disturbing even for those who might otherwise want to support the bill.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, it is the reverse of a TEFRA. This one would be $3 worth of new revenues. We get a dollar's worth of cuts.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. KOLBE].

Mr. KOLBE. Mr. Chairman, at last we are at the moment of truth. After all the skirmishing of the past 2 weeks, after all the various alternatives that have been offered, after all the efforts at compromise, the true colors of the Democrats in the House are revealed this afternoon.

What are those colors? It is the red flag of spending and taxing. The trouble with Democrats is that they have never met a spending program that they didn't want to increase.

And this Democrat tax bill proves that: It says, let us tax consumers with higher taxes on beer, wine, and cigarettes; tax the poor who depend on their old autos by doubling the gas tax; and tax every American with an income above $20,000—that is how the Democrats define the rich—by not indexing their taxes for inflation. Bracket creep—it is the old Democrat shell game: Tax everyone by taking a bigger chunk of their incomes as they struggle to keep ahead of inflation. It's insidious, and it is wrong.

At the same time, the Democrats will not cut spending. Well, that is not quite right. They will cut defense, they will cut protection for our soldiers and sailors in the Middle East. But there is not a Federal bureaucrat they will cut, not a grant to an agency they will eliminate, not a dime of foreign aid they will keep here at home.

So, you say, it's easy to be negative. Where's your alternative? Well, there is an alternative, but you're not going to see it on the floor today. In the absolute height of cynicism the Democrat Rules Committee—not the House Rules Committee—but the Democrat Rules Committee, refused to allow the Republican alternative to be offered. Why? Because they are afraid to let their own Members vote on a plan that cut spending but doesn't raise taxes.

The Republican alternative would reduce the deficit by over $400 billion in the next 4 years. It would do this without making drivers pay more gas taxes, without raising the taxes of every American by freezing bracket indexing, without taxing beer and wine and cigarettes more, without adding a higher Medicare premium for every senior citizen.

How would it accomplish this? By cutting spending. It would freeze—absolutely freeze—spending on all defense and domestic spending programs for 3 of the next 5 years and allow only an inflationary increase in the other two. Simplistic? Perhaps, but the American people by a margin of 83 to 12 percent say that is what they want to do.

Isn't it sad that the American people aren't going to be given an opportunity today to vote on an alternative that would cut spending? Perhaps they'll want to send another message to this House on November 6.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DURBIN].

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Chairman, in lieu of several years in purgatory, I have instead listened closely to this debate over the last 3 hours. As I have listened to this debate, I have decided it is important for me to come to the floor and issue an apology.

First, let me say this: I know how difficult it must be on the Republican side of the aisle. They could not find one Member on the Republican side of the aisle of the House to offer President Bush's budget earlier this year. Then, when the President came with his summit agreement, promised the Sun, the stars, and the Moon to the Republican side of the aisle, they could not muster the votes necessary, nor could the Democrats for that matter, to enforce President Bush's idea of how to deal with the budget deficit. So, left to their own devices and their own conference, they were asked to come up with their own plan on cutting the budget deficit, and again they fell short of the mark.

Mr. Chairman, I listened on the floor today anxious to hear how my colleagues on the Republican side of the aisle would deal with these failures, and what I heard from them in their frustration, in their desperation, in their sputtering and gasping for political breath, in their search for someone to blame, they could come out with only two words: Jimmy Carter.

Give me a break. It has been 10 years since Jimmy Carter was President. The Republicans have got to come up with a better excuse.

The fact is that the Republicans have controlled the White House for 10 years, and the fact is that we have had recordbreaking deficits and, if we add all of the overspending of Congress, from $200 to $300 billion in that 10-year period of time, we still have $2 trillion of deficits directly attributable to Republican Presidents.

Now today we face a responsible alternative, and there is only one alternative on the floor because only one met President Bush's criteria. That responsible alternative was addressed by a friend of mine, in my district, last weekend. He came up to me in the shopping center and said, "Congressman, I'm not too happy with what's going on in Washington, but, if you're there fighting so that the people who can afford to pay taxes are going to pay their fair share, keep up the fight."

Mr. Chairman, that is painful for a lot of Republicans to accept. They say that this is our soak-the-rich philosophy, but, if we look at the statistics over the last 10 years of Republican philosophy, of Reaganomics, the middle class in this country have suffered. Sure, higher taxes are being paid by the rich, but they are earning a heck of a lot of more money. That is why they are paying more, and they can pay even more at this moment.

As part of the Democratic plan, we are assessing a tax. My colleagues hear people standing on the Republican side of the aisle saying, "We believe in the economic growth theory of pampering the privileged." Give me another break. If a millionaire cannot afford a 10-percent surcharge in America, how can we impose President Bush's 12-cent-a-gallon Federal gas tax on a working family?

Mr. Chairman, ours is the fairer approach. It is an approach which gives to working families in America a tax break with a new capital gains provision aimed at helping them, not the super-rich.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. IRELAND].

Mr. IRELAND. Mr. Chairman, the Democrats are once again trying to pull the wool over the eyes of the American people with their Democratic tax plan. This new stealth taxation is called the elimination of indexing.

However, my colleagues, it does so at the expense of the real purchasing power of the American people.

This proposal will not add a penny to the taxes paid by the rich. If someone is in the highest tax bracket, when indexing is eliminated they will not be affected at all. But it will add $36 billion in taxes to the lower and middle-income tax-paying Americans. I say, "If you're now in the zero income tax bracket, you could be pushed into the 15-percent tax bracket. If you're now in the 15-percent tax bracket, you could be pushed into the 28-percent tax bracket. While inflation may indeed increase, your income, your purchasing power, stays the same. But you'll be forced into a higher tax bracket, and, lo and behold, under the tax plan of the Democrats, your take-home pay will be reduced."

So, Mr. Chairman, what our Democratic colleagues are proposing is to force taxpayers to feed Uncle Sam before they feed their families. It means less spending power for those who already earn the least. It means an arbitrary pay raise for an already bloated and ineffective Government bureaucracy.

I have a word of advice for lower and middle income Americans. The next time a Democrat says that his party is the party of the lower and middle class, look beyond his mouth. One could very well find his hand in their pocket.

□ 1720

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. PARRIS].

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Chairman, I have watched with some amusement today as the Members of the majority try to paint this budget as reality. Time permits just two examples of the Democratic illusion on spending cuts.

Do you know where they found $9 billion in savings? By raising the Federal bank deposit insurance premium by a small percentage, they claim a $9 billion savings, on the theory that the premium increase will prevent several bank failures and the Government will not have to pay the cost of closing those institutions.

Do you know what happened when the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Health and the Environment found that they had raised $800 million more than they expected through fee increases in this budget? Did they apply it to deficit reduction? Oh, no, they created a new entitlement program which will cost $798 million out of the $800 million that they found in new fees. A new Government spending program that they call a savings.

Mr. Chairman, come on. Let us clear the smoke and smash the mirrors. It is high time for a little accountability around here. Reality is upon us, and it is finally time we recognized it.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL].

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Chairman, I read somewhere that someone had written that the next thing worse than a dumb campaign promise is keeping a dumb campaign promise. Somewhere along the line an attractive phrase came up, "Read my lips." The distinguished Vice President took that and climbed his way all the way to the Presidency of the United States.

But any economist can tell you that when you take a look at your books and you find that the third largest item in your budget is just paying the interest on the money that you have borrowed over the last decade, and that you would find that the preceding administration had borrowed more money than all of the Presidents that the Republicans had since George Washington, it seems to me that it is time for the President to take off his campaign hat and put on the hat of the President of the United States and the leader of the free world.

Mr. Chairman, you have to recall it was not that long ago that the President ventured out to Andrews Air Force Base and, with Democrat and Republican leaders, mumbled something that sounded like "taxes." It has not been that long ago that some responsible Republicans have said that in order to meet our reduction in the deficit, we had to cut spending, yes, but we had to raise some money as well.

So it seems to me that if one wants to label the Democratic Party as pandering to the poor, is it asking too much that somewhere in the Nation's Capital we be concerned about the people who are homeless, the people who are jobless, and the people who are hopeless? If that is the label you want to stick on Democrats, then, thank God there is someone here that is willing to have the courage to say that you can only cut so much, and, yes, we have to raise revenue.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 16 seconds to remind the House that within this budget resolution that the Democrats just voted for, there is a modest increase in the debt ceiling from $3.1 trillion to $5 trillion, making the increases of the past decade look minuscule.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the omnibus tax increase bill we are considering here today. History has proven that tax increases do not work and several of my colleagues have proven that tax increases are not needed to balance the Federal budget deficit.

Unfortunately, the majority democrats in the House have chosen to prohibit debate on our alternative to this budget package which would balance the budget with responsible controls on spending growth and no new taxes. There is a very basic rule to balancing a budget that most American families understand very well. If you are spending more than you have, cut back on your spending. The Federal budget deficit will not be eliminated unless Federal Government spending is brought under control.

History clearly proves, tax increases lead to spending increases. In fact, since World War II, every $1 increase in taxes, has led to more than a $1.50 increase in Government spending. Now we are being asked to support almost $145 billion in tax increases over 5 years with no significant spending control in sight. Are we supposed to believe that everything is going to be different this time? Worse than that the package will stifle economic growth.

Members concerned about reducing the deficit can start by repealing the 33-percent pay raise that passed Congress last year. How can Congress accept such an obscene pay increase and then call for extra taxes on American taxpayers? Any reconciliation package aimed at reducing the Federal budget deficit should include a repeal of the congressional pay raise.

I urge my colleagues to reject the suggestion that increasing taxes leads to deficit reduction. Further, I urge my colleagues to reconsider the merits of the Republican plan—a balanced budget plan that allows for a strict control on annual spending growth, much needed reforms in the budget process, and progrowth initiatives for a strong American economy.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. PACKARD].

Mr. PACKARD. Mr. Chairman, here we go again. Higher taxes for virtually all Americans, and not just for the rich. And here we go again, increased spending in virtually all categories, except defense.

That is what this package will do. And what will be the end result? Recession. Recession. It has happened before. It is a return to the Carter days of higher interest rates, higher unemployment, higher inflation, malaise. It is deja vu all over again.

Mr. Chairman, you say Americans want us to govern. Well, they do not want us to return to the days of higher taxes and more spending. That is not governing. The American people do not care whether it is a Republican plan or a Democratic plan. They want and deserve a responsible budget.

This bill is not responsible. I think we can come up with a responsible budget somewhere between what the Republicans are recommending and what the Democrats have.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will notify the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] that he has 14½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Chairman, the proposal before us represents a much fairer approach to deficit reduction than the one this House rejected last week. This proposal does not contain a regressive gas tax hike. It does not make the unemployed suffer by cruelly forcing them to wait 2 weeks for their first check. It reduces the increase in Medicare premiums and the deductible amount. It is fair to rural hospitals, many of which would have gone broke if the summit plan had been enacted.

Of course, there are new taxes. That issue was resolved when President George Bush endorsed new taxes. But what the Republicans do not like is, these taxes are fairly distributed. The very rich pay the most. After all, it was they who partied the hardest during the past 10 years. The result will be lower interest rates and a healthier economy. I suggest the rich will make more money than ever before.

The Republicans offered no alternative. They cannot meet the basic requirement set down by their own President. They cannot get to $500 billion, even with spending cuts. The President, the bipartisan leadership, and the American people asked for $500 billion, but you came up short. If you cannot meet the ante, you do not belong in the game.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentlewoman from California [Ms. PELOSI].

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding. I rise in strong support of H.R. 5835 and for the Democratic alternative, and commend the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] for their leadership in presenting this package today.

Mr. Chairman, I opposed the summit agreement we had before us before because it did not recognize the realities of life for young American families, and because it gave a tax break to business at the expense of our senior citizens.

The Democratic package before us today is a vast improvement for young and old alike. By eliminating the bubble and placing a surtax on those making over $1 million a year, we have lessened the tax burden on young Americans with young families. As we look to the future, we must examine how our decisions affect young families and those older Americans.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the Democratic alternative does just that. I commend the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] again, and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI] for their leadership.

I would also like to say to Members on the other side of the aisle that the statute of limitations on blaming Jimmy Carter has run out, but it has not run out for Ronald Reagan.

□ 1730

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. CRAIG].

Mr. CRAIG. Mr. Chairman, I stand in opposition to any legislation that will raise taxes and plunge this economy into a recession.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. MCCOLLUM].

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Chairman, we have had several Democrats out here today tell us that we cannot solve the deficit without raising taxes, and that is nonsense, technically. Of course we can solve the deficit if we are just willing to cut spending.

What these Democrats are saying in bold and plain terms is that they control the U.S. House of Representatives, in the majority and in every other way, as they have for 36 consecutive years, and that they, the Democrats, will not solve this deficit without raising taxes. And that they, the Democrats, will not cut spending on the domestic discretionary side. That is what they are saying. That is the only thing that is negative here.

We Republicans for years have been advocating cutting spending, at least holding to in part a hard freeze and doing something to let the growth in this economy break us out of this problem, and we have gotten nowhere because we are not in control. We are not in the majority. We are the minority, but we do speak for the majority of the American people.

The overwhelming majority say cut spending, do not increase taxes, and let us be sensible and reasonable. Let us defeat, frankly, for the American people, this abhorrent plan coming out of that side of the aisle, this ridiculous new tax and spend proposal that is not new at all. It is the same old Democrats, tax and spend, tax and spend theme that I have heard the entire time that I have been in Congress.

The American people are sick and tired of it. Let us defeat it. Let us get rid of it, and let us get on with doing what they want, which is cutting the spending on the domestic discretionary side.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. TORRICELLI].

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Chairman, what kind of people have we really become in America? The economy of the Nation is imperiled. There is a hormorrhaging debt. Our future is in doubt, and there is a burden to be borne.

Just as other nations were summoned to war, we are summoned to solve the economic and the fiscal woes of our country.

Who do the Republican minority summon to lead this fight? The elderly, children, people of modest means. And to what end? To protect middle-income people?

Mr. Chairman, the most feared words in America are, "I am a Republican and I am concerned with the middle class." Please, what we ask is a 10-percent surcharge on millionaires, a charge on people who buy yachts and airplanes. That is who we serve to protect.

We have malice for no one, but working families and middle-income people did not benefit from the tax programs of the last 10 years. Children and the elderly received no windfall, and so rightfully now we ask those who have benefited to pay the bureden and to bear the freight.

Mr. Chairman, we ask these things because America is worth it.

I do not know who it is the Republicans seek to serve here today, whether it is holding their own offices or escaping responsibility. But it is time to take leadership. This bill offers that leadership.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS].

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, $145 billion in new taxes, that is what we are talking about, and do not forget it. And in just a little while we will hear an amendment be brought to the floor. What is that going to do? It is another higher mess of taxes.

This bill that we are talking about is more disingenuous, more fraudulent than the one that we refused just a week and a half ago.

Ladies and gentlemen, this is a terrible thing we are doing to the American public. The American people are screaming for relief. They are sick and tired of being taxed to death. If Members do not believe me, go out in the streets and ask them. Ask them in front of this Capitol, ask them in the supermarkets, ask them anywhere. They want relief.

And I am so sick and tired of hearing about we will not tax the rich, we will not do this and we will not do that. Why do we not start working together like we should? We are elected as a body, and once we are here we should act like a body. Let us bring relief to the American public. The American people need a break, and let us give them a break.

This morning after coming back to the Capitol after spending all night on a conference committee, I smelled a tremendous odor when I got outside the Capitol, and do you know what I think I smelled? The Democrats cooking up another budget. The American people deserve better.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Chairman, there is something worse than not having a budget Friday and shutting down the Government, and that is a lame duck session. Talk about the voters being mad now. Wait until we go back and face the voters when there is a lame duck session and we haven't acted on the deficit.

House Republicans have their plan, and House Democrats have their plan, but where is President Bush? Where does he stand? Why is he more comfortable negotiating with Gorbachev than he is with ROSTENKOWSKI or BENTSEN? Why does he build coalitions in foreign policy and negotiate face to face, and be totally engaged with foreign leaders, and when it comes to the budget and domestic policy he is not interested. In fact, he is out campaigning for Republican candidates, playing politics?

We are stuck here in Washington. We are absorbing these painful debates with extreme difficulty, both sides, but the President is out. Where is he? We need the President to show some leadership?

The Democratic alternative is a plan that is a dramatic improvement over the budget summit agreement or any other proposal. We have attempted to reflect the strong sentiments of Democrats about tax fairness. The plan is both significant and real.

The deficit reduction issue has served to highlight philosophical differences between Democrats and Republicans. The goal of the budget summit agreement endorsed by the President and the bipartisan leadership was to reduce the deficit by $500 billion over the next 5 years. The Democratic alternative fully achieves that level of deficit reduction, but in a way that is fair to all Americans.

The budget summit agreement which the House rejected on October 4, clearly placed far too much of the deficit reduction burden on Medicare beneficiaries, as well as other low- and middle-income Americans. We have a far superior plan that requires more of a contribution to deficit reduction from individuals who are best able to afford it.

The Democratic alternative also puts an end to the false notion that only wealthy Americans are able to help the economy grow. We have greater confidence in middle-income Americans. This alternative provides savings and investment incentives to the small businessmen, farmers and small investors who are the backbone of our economy. A deficit reduction package that is both fair and real in the best stimulus for economic growth.

Enactment of the Democratic alternative will be a major step forward for our country, restoring fairness to our Tax Code and confidence abroad.

WAYS AND MEANS DEMOCRATIC ALTERNATIVE SUMMARY

1. The proposed level of increased Medicare beneficiary payments would be reduced from the $28 billion contained in the Summit Agreement to $10 billion. Total Medicare savings would be $43 billion rather than $60 billion.

2. The 2-week waiting period for unemployment benefits would be dropped. (This proposal was also dropped from the modified Summit Agreement reported to the House Budget Committee on October 10.)

3. The $2 billion of new entitlement spending, and the $19 billion of revenue losers (enterprise zones, energy incentives, extenders and the so-called "growth" package) would be dropped.

4. The following revenue provisions would be dropped entirely from the Summit Agreement: The gasoline tax and the petroleum tax; the limitation on itemized deductions; the HI tax on State and local government workers; the disallowance of interest paid on corporate tax deficiencies; and the increase in railroad tier II taxes.

5. The following provisions of the Summit would be modified: Airplanes would be added to the luxury tax; and the distilled spirits tax increase would be $1.00 rather than $1.50.

6. To deal with the progressive problem of the Summit Agreement, the Democratic Alternative would add the following provisions: the "bubble" would be eliminated and an explicit 33 percent rate bracket would be added; the rate of the individual minimum tax would be increased from 21 percent to 25 percent; the HI wage cap would be increased to $100,000 rather than $73,000 as provided in the Summit Management; indexing of the tax brackets and the personal exemption would be delayed for one year, and a 10 percent surtax would be imposed on individuals with taxable incomes above $1 million.

[From the AARP News, Oct. 15, 1990]

STATEMENT ON BUDGET RECONCILIATION PROPOSALS

"The American Association of Retired Persons (AARP) believes that it is vitally important that the Administration and the Congress work together over the next several days to enact into law a Federal budget that fairly distributes the burden of deficit reduction among all Americans," said Horace B. Deets, AARP Executive Director.

Deets added, "to meet the test of fairness, this budget should take into account the policies of the last decade which have placed a greater and greater burden on those with modest incomes. Those who are more fortunate must now be asked to pay a little more.

"We are very pleased that the Congress has begun to recognize that older Americans should not be asked to pay more than their share," he noted. "Compared to the original summit agreement, the plans put forward in the House and the Senate over the last week reduce the burden on Medicare beneficiaries by nearly one-half to two-thirds. We are also pleased that the Committees rejected more onerous proposals that would have income-related Medicare premiums or made changes in Social Security.

"This week the Congress has a tough job. Faced with proposals from the House Ways and Means and Energy and Commerce Committees and the Senate Finance Committee, the Congress must shape a Medicare policy that the President and a majority in the Congress will support.

"The Democratic Alternative offered by the House Ways and Means Committee, when combined with the new Medicaid coverage both for low-income Medicare beneficiaries and for children included in the Energy and Commerce package, constitutes a fair and effective proposal. Among its strongest elements are: A Medicare deductible that would not rise above $100; and no increase in the amount that doctors can balance bill their Medicare patients above the additional 25 percent that was permitted in last year's Physician Payment Reform legislation.

Deets noted that the Senate Finance Committee's proposal is "far less acceptable in its present form. With its doubling of both the Medicare Part B deductible and the amount some doctors can "balance bill" their Medicare patients above the Medicare-allowed rate; its very limited protections for low-income Medicare beneficiaries; and its reinstated coinsurance on laboratory services, the Finance Committee's proposal clearly places a much heavier burden on the most vulnerable—those who are sick and those who have low incomes.

"The welfare of Americans of all ages is at stake in this budget debate," Deets concluded. "The across-the-board cuts of a sequester or of a government shut-down would take a dangerous toll on our nation's economy and the millions of Americans—old and young, rich and poor—who depend on government programs and services. It's time to put aside partisan politics and find a solution to the budget crisis that will be fair, equitable and affordable for the American people."

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Maryland [Mrs. BENTLEY].

Mrs. BENTLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Chairman, listening to the floor debate in my office I was struck by the attempt to tar the Republicans in this House with favoring the rich with tax breaks as though all of the taxes proposed in the Democrat budget package are targeted at the rich.

Come on fellows—who drinks beer and smokes cigarettes and uses public fishing boats and drives the big gas-guzzling trucks—the Republican rich? Horsefeathers. This regressive bunch of taxes is aimed at the American middle class and has nothing to do with earning power.

It has been the Republicans opposing any new taxes—who proved that no taxes are necessary to get us where we need to go and you would not even let us get it to the floor. Come on you guys. Let's not lay a bunch of fees and additional national sales taxes on the American people. My constituents whom I see every day do not want additional taxes. This is a discriminatory package and rather than creating more jobs, the OSHA provisions which will put a bounty on American industry—to raise revenue—will not do much for employees in the companies under attack.

If one is concerned about the economy, then one must remember that taxes on sales are recessionary. Increases in energy taxes are inflationary. The rhetoric coming from the other side of the aisle may sound like good politics, but Lord help us, it sure makes bad policy and worse law.

Do not lay this mess at our feet—we had no chance to change it. I like what Representative DORGAN suggested. Stop throwing arrows at each other—let us talk together.

And remember that the welfare of the country is more important than either side of this aisle.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, first of all I would like to compliment my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA], distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, for all of his patience and hard work. I also want to pay special tribute to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI], for attempting to do something that would indeed be much more fair to the vast majority of the American people.

The alternative Democratic budget requires that those who benefited from the Reagan years must help to pay for the Reagan years. It is that simple. It eliminates the tax bubble for the rich. It imposes a 10-percent surtax on incomes over $1 million.

Who can quarrel with that when the middle class has been picking up the tab for the majority of Americans for so many years?

This package is much, much more fair to older Americans. It reduces the unfair hit on Medicare beneficiaries' out-of-pocket expenses. It saves the cost-of-living adjustment not only for Social Security recipients but for Federal retirees and railroad retirees, and it drops a grossly unfair provision contained in the summit deal that would impose Medicare tax on State and local government workers that already are paying their share of retirement coverage.

In addition to that, it is sensitive to the needs of the unemployed, and it drops the 2-week waiting period for unemployment checks.

In addition, it drops the regressive gasoline tax. How can anyone quarrel when the alternative budget will drop the 9-cent gasoline tax and scales back the proposed tax on liquor?

I urge passage of the alternative Democratic substitute.

I voted against the budget summit package, because it placed an unfair portion of the burden of deficit reduction on older Americans and middle-income Americans.

Mr. Chairman, over the last 10 years, the period in our history that I refer to as the lost decade, we saw huge increases in defense spending, enormous tax breaks for the rich, and enormous cuts in programs that benefit middle-income Americans. During this period of voodoo economics our Nation's deficit tripled. Now we are asked to pay for this decade of excess and inequity. Although there are several items in this package that I don't like, no better or fairer plan, that deals responsibly with deficit reduction has been forthcoming from my colleagues on the other side of the aisle. The deficit is a cancer which threatens the future of young Americans. Medicare premiums will not be increased in the first year. I am concerned about increases in the future but I believe that in the future Americans will demand universal health coverage for all Americans. I believe health care is the No. 1 domestic issue and we must address it comprehensively. I will continue my own fight to reverse this funding trend, yet the proposal offered by Chairman ROSTENKOWSKI is much, much fairer than the $90 billion in Medicare cuts that the Republican alternative proposed.

My colleagues claim that there are no cuts in this package and that is not true. Most of the committees in this House met painful reconciliation targets. Yet, the alternative offered by my colleague from Illinois drops a dramatically unfair proposal to impose Medicare HI tax on State and local retirees who already have coverage. The alternative eliminates the regressive and untimely gasoline tax that could cripple our interstate commerce; it drops unfair increases on tier II railroad retirees. Contrary to earlier recommendations, the package keeps a pledge to our civil servants for full cost-of-living adjustments for all Federal annuitants and, still retains a 50–50 lump-sum benefit for Federal retirees age 65 or with 30 years of service. The Democratic alternative drops the absurd 2-week waiting period for unemployment checks.

To do this, our distinguished Ways and Means Committee chairman simply asks us to require that wealthy Americans pay their fair share. This package eliminates the grossly unfair tax bubble. It increases the Medicare HI wage cap from $53,000 to $100,000. It requires the Donald Trumps of this world to pay a little more tax on their yachts and private jets. No, Ms. Helmsly, taxes are not just for the little people. Those who benefited from the Reagan years must be asked to help pay for the Reagan years. I urge my colleagues to support the Rostenkowski amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New York)

Mr. LENT. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Democratic plans.

Mr. Chairman, the farce that we are witnessing today typifies all that is wrong here on CAPITOL HILL.

America is facing a crisis of grave proportions. For months, the President sat down with Democratic and Republican leaders in Congress and together they crafted a budget package. None of us liked that program, but despite my misgivings I voted "Yes," not only to resolve our budget deficit problem but also to restore in some small measure the respect of the American people, which had been lost during the budget debate.

A majority of my colleagues voted to defeat that package. Since then, members of both parties have worked to prepare budget alternatives. The Democrat plan relies more on taxing the middle class than cutting spending. The bipartisan alternative developed by the Senate and endorsed by President Bush tackles the tough problem of spending cuts without resorting to overburdening the already overtaxed middle class.

But guess what? None of us will be able to choose between the two budget plans. No Member here will be able to indicate whether he favors increased taxes or cuts in Federal spending. And why will we not be able to stand up and be counted? Because the Democratic Rules Committee has dictated our choice: We must choose the Democratic tax package or nothing at all. We will not have the opportunity to support the bipartisan Senate proposal because, here in the House, the Democrats have a majority and the Republicans do not. It is as simple as that.

Public opinion polls show that the American people are fed up with "business as usual" here in Congress. They are fed up with new taxes and deals struck behind closed doors; they object to a process that shuts out choice; they are tired of the same old tax and spend policies that got us into this mess in the first place.

President Bush attempted to draw us together to pass a deficit reduction package. When that effort failed, the leadership in Congress sought to divide us along partisan lines by eliminating any element of choice from our decision. Instead of discussing and debating the relative merits of our two differing proposals, we Republicans find ourselves shut out of the process, with no alternative but to vote this package down.

And that is exactly what we should do. Vote "No".

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. INHOFE].

Mr. INHOFE. Mr. Chairman, I was not going to be speaking today until I heard the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GRANT] use a word that I think is very appropriate. He said that our country today is bloated, and when I think of our country being bloated as it is today, maybe we in the Republican Party have not been doing the right thing.

We have been proposing cuts, and every time we propose a cut, the doctors from the left and the Democratic Party say no, that surgery would not work. We are not going to be able to cut this. So we proposed more cuts, and they say, on the other hand, that it is not going to work.

I think that we have to recognize the fact that we are to the point now where maybe sophisticated surgery is a little bit too late for this patient. Our patient is the country. The country is bloated.

What this country needs is a good enema. I suggest that we reject the tax-and-spend plan by the Democratic Party, send it back and invoke the freeze that the Republican Party is suggesting and give this country the enema it needs.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Chairman, once I was forced to watch a movie, Mr. Chairman, called "The Attack of the Killer Tomatoes." It was supposed to be pop art and very funny, and I do not know, this debate today, with all of this yelling, reminds me of "The Attack of the Killer Taxers."

We all know there are not enough rich people to carry the burden, and no matter how much ranting and raving there is here about soaking the rich, the middle-class American taxpayer has sensed that there is a dirty little secret here, particularly in the indexing provisions.

I represent what is described in all the political almanacs as a blue-collar Democrat working district in the middle of Orange County, represented for 10 years by Mr. S&L, Jerry Patterson. It is a working blue-collar, 51-percent Democratic district with only 40 percent Republicans. They are not fooled.

Here is a line from the Wall Street Journal. You read it folks. It is today, and I will put it in the RECORD.

I will be submitting about three pages of Government grants that show we are not serious about cutting spending here, just taxing the middle class.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to ask ourselves why the public is so cynical about government. I think there are two reasons for that.

I think the No. 1 reason is that for 10 years politicians in this country have lied to the American people and simply told them that we could solve this deficit problem with no real tough choices; we did not have to have both spending cuts and revenue increases, and now, thank God, finally, the public is being leveled with.

Finally, even the President of the United States has faced up to the problem, and he is telling people what the facts are. He is telling people, "You have to have both spending reductions and revenue increases to deal with the problem."

That is what this bill does. It levels with the American people honestly today in a way that no budget has done in the last 10 years.

The second reason that people are fed up with their Government is because they think that the wealthy, they think that the high rollers have essentially had the fix in over the past 10 years, and they have been right.

Over the 1980's, the richest 1 percent increased their income after taxes by almost 80 percent. At the same time, the average working American has seen the purchasing power of his income decline about $2,000. And yet just a week ago, the President tried to push a package through this Congress which hit the middle class twice as hard as it hit the very wealthiest people in our society. The public said no. The Congress listened. They voted it down.

Today, instead, we have a much more fair package which, for the first time, says to the very wealthiest people in this country, "Boys and girls, you are going to pay your fair share. You have had the largest benefit from the party in the 1980's, and you are going to help pick up the tab."

You cannot fool the American people. They know this is going to be costly, but they want it to be fair. This tax package is. We ought to support it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BUECHNER], a member of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. BUECHNER. Mr. Chairman, I imagine that somewhere in the Democrat Cloakroom as they prepare all of the little speeches about fairness and the rich, there must be somebody who says, "You know, the reason communism failed was because there were not enough rich people to tax in Russia," because that is what I hear out here.

Fairness; where does fairness start? Fairness starts by doing the right thing, and the right thing is not a speech. It is not dredging up the old 1930's and 1940's political rhetoric. It is not waving the bloody shirt of class politics and strife. Fairness is, first of all, doing what the American public knows we ought to do, and that is to cut the spending that this Congress has been so profligate with.

Yes, there is an irony out there. The people have elected Republican Presidents who said, "I do not want to tax you," and yet they have given us a Democrat House that has said, "You want it, you got it."

That is not the way you can run this Nation, Mr. Chairman. Let us drop the speeches.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. UPTON].

Mr. UPTON. Mr. Chairman, I have been listening for a couple of hours now on the merits of this Democratic tax bill, that is right, tax. You are raising taxes to fuel more spending.

One of the reasons that I voted against the summit agreement last week was that it did not freeze Government spending, not cut, but freeze. And guess what, this bill does not freeze spending either.

In other words, spending will go up next year, and so will taxes. Eighty-three percent of the American people believe that the problem with the budget process is that spending is too high.

I worked with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. PURSELL] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] on an alternative budget, and the main plank of that budget proposal was to freeze spending. That means this year's spending levels would be the same as last year's spending levels. We saved over $200 billion.

Your argument on your side of the aisle was it did not hit the $500 billion target.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEVINE].

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Democratic budget plan and the Democratic alternative.

We are here today because the bill has come due on the Reagan years. The unpleasant reality is that someone must pay for the orgy of tax cuts for the wealthy and increased defense spending we witnessed in the 1980's.

Our task is complicated by the fact that these are difficult and troubling times for our Nation.

Our Armed Forces are eyeball to eyeball with a bloodthirsty madman in the Persian Gulf.

Our economy is stuck in neutral. We have already entered into the first stages of a recession. The only question is how serious it will be.

All of the ingredients are present to make the coming recession the worst since the 1930's.

The issue we are debating here then is a simple one: Who is going to get stuck with the bill for the voodoo economics of the 1980's?

Is it going to be lower and middle income taxpayers and the elderly?

Or, is it going to be the wealthy, who benefited most from Ronald Reagan's generosity.

The budget summit plan that Congress rejected would have placed that burden squarely on the shoulders of the poor, the elderly, and the working class in this country.

I should say parenthetically that this is not the budget I would have preferred. I would like to see Medicare benefits expanded, not taken away.

I'd like to see a windfall profits tax on big oil included in the package. Such a provision would have more than paid for the reductions in Medicare with money left over.

I would have preferred to see a Social Security tax cut for working people.

In fact, I'd like the plan better if there were no tax increases at all. But that is not realistic. The President understands that.

My Republican colleagues were unable to produce an adequate budget plan made up solely of spending cuts.

Despite its shortcomings, the Democratic alternative is a good plan.

It cuts the deficit even more than the summit agreement.

It would shift the burden to wealthy rather than middle income taxpayers. It would help ensure that the wealthy do their fair share to cut the deficit and strengthen our economy.

It is astonishing to me that the administration and its allies in Congress continue to try to make good on Leona Helmsley's admonition that "only the little people pay taxes."

I do not want to believe that the Bush administration is prepared to allow the Federal Government to come to a halt simply to protect the interests of the privileged few in this country.

How can the President justify telling the poor and the elderly that the programs on which many of them depend for their very existence must close up shop because he doesn't want wealthy taxpayers to pay their fair share of taxes.

With this resolution we say that the Democratic majority in the House has had enough with the policies which have led us to the brink of economic disaster.

We say that we want a progressive tax system. We say that we believe in fairness and equity. We say that we believe in a better America for every American and a better future for our children.

This plan moves us a long way toward those goals.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, maybe it is good that this debate comes late in the session and late in the year and is so close to an election, because this debate focuses us on a watershed choice that tells you all you need to know about the difference between the two different political philosophies, one protax, the taxers, and one no-tax.

□ 1750

Now, there is a letter that came out today that tells Members the difference between the two, and who is who. This letter is from the National Taxpayers Union, and it says:

A vote for the tax plan proposed by Ways and Means Committee Democrats is a vote for a 7.4 percent income tax increase for a 2-earner couple with two children earning $35,200 of taxable income. It's a vote to make that family pay over $2,000 more of new income taxes through 1995. It's also a vote to take away $600 of tax deductions from every family of four filing a tax return.

It goes on to say, "Millions more middle class taxpayers would find themselves in the 28 percent tax rate bracket." It goes on to say, "The tax increase portion of the committee reconciliation bill also deserves rejection. It represents a larger tax increase than that proposed by the rejected budget summit agreement."

"These higher taxes, and especially higher income tax rates threaten our economy which is already in recession in much of the country." The National Taxpayers Union makes clear that the taxers are the Democrats. The no-tax people are the Republicans. Reject the big tax budget. Reject the taxers.

Look for this particular issue to come up again on election day, because I think the American people will take one look at what has happened on this floor today and throw those Members out.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. CARDIN].

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Chairman, I share the frustration of my constituents, and I think many people here about the fact that we missed deadlines on getting the Budget Resolution passed, but I want to congratulate the House leadership and the Democrat leadership for the package we have before the Members, and the Democrat alternative.

It shows we have the courage to deal with the deficit. If we will deal with the deficit in a real way, it means we have to increase taxes and reduce spending, and make sure that those funds are used to reduce the deficit.

If it is the leadership of the House, the Democrat leadership that can get Members on target for a 5-year program so that we can reduce the deficit by $500 billion, it is the Democrat alternative that makes sure that we do it in a fair way. In a fair way means less cost to our elderly on the Medicare system, that we can maintain a 25-percent rule that no more than 25 percent of Medicare is paid for by the premiums of the beneficiaries, and we can do it in a way that is fair, that everyone contribute to the cost. A more progressive way, so that those are best able to pay for the costs of the deficit share in the deficit reduction program.

I urge all Members to support the alternative.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON].

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Chairman, all this in 30 seconds. If we are going to do anything about the deficit, either we have to raise taxes or lower spending, or a combination of both. That is not very sanguinely approached by Members of Congress.

That is why we have gone to blue smoke and mirrors over the years. Now, we have run out of time, and we have to do something about it. So, that is why we come forth with a package that is real. I support the package.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining 3½ minutes.

Mr. Chairman, we are at the end of what has been a long and agonizing trial. I want to thank the chairman of the Committee on the Budget, the distinguished gentleman from California [Mr. PANETTA] for a good year's work, and for all the courtesies that he has shown to me. I only wish that together we could have done better, that our heroism would have lived up to our duty, and to the expressions that we made at the beginning of the year.

I would also like to thank the committees and their chairmen who have done better in reconciliation this year than ever before. There are a large number of them. In many cases their contributions were minor compared to the scope of the bill, and yet to the committees involved there was a fair amount of sacrifice. I congratulate the committees, and urge them to do even better in the future.

However, I do want to talk about what this whole game is about. We started with a summit agreement of $500 billion of savings. We are now down to what is a little hard to define because it is a moving target. But, certainly in terms of the CBO summer baseline, it is probably little more than $480 billion in savings. We started with a good deal of reduction of expenditure, and we are now down to more tax increases than domestic expenditure reductions.

This chart and the chart that will follow, I think will explain what I am trying to say. Here is the CBO summer baseline. Here is what this wonderful bill is doing to reduce expenditures. Here is what it is doing to domestic discretionary expenditures. In the next 5 years it will spend $180 billion over the 1990 expenditure level.

As the next tax chart comes in, we will find the tax revenues are also going over the baseline in the Rostenkowski by about $150 billion.

This companion simply means that we are going to take every nickel of taxes and we are going to spend them for additional discretionary expenditures.

How is that for a way to reduce deficits, Mr. and Mrs. America? How do citizens like paying more sales taxes, more employment taxes, and more personal taxes just to let Democrats do that extra spending?

Have we saved anything here? I guess, we saved some defense money. Was that at issue here? No, defense spending is not even before the Members today. Did we save anything else? Yes, a little Medicare, but we came way down from the summit agreement.

This process has produced an erosion of the savings of the summit, an erosion of entitlement savings, erosion of enforcement powers, a buildup of taxes under the theme of tax the rich, and a buildup of extraneous portions of the reconciliation bill.

By my count, Mr. Chairman, in the Rostenkowski Democrat tax and spend bill, a little more than a third of this savings, including the interest, will have been derived from fees and taxes. Thirty-six percent will come from discretionary expenditures, all of which are military spending, and a tiny little 17 percent will come out of mandatory expenditures.

Our goal was a bold and heroic plan, and what we have actually delivered is very, very little. Now, if Members believe that their constituents think that a third of the whole deficit reduction program is supposed to be taxes, then they will want to vote for the Democrat bill, for Rostenkowski.

If Members believe their constituents need to pay more for cigarettes, need to pay for their jobs, and need to give up indexing of their tax rates, vote for the Rostenkowski amendment. If Members believe in cutting expenditures, it is a shame Members could not vote for the Republican alternative.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 5835, a bill reconciling congressional committees to produce deficit reduction in accordance with the terms of the Congressional Budget Resolution for fiscal year 1991, fiscal year 1992, fiscal year 1993, fiscal year 1994, and fiscal year 1995.

In the last couple of weeks, the issue of deficit reduction has generated more hot air, created more hard feelings, and alienated more of the American public—under the guise of budget policy—than it has managed to do since I first came to this body in 1971.

We have heard many accounts of the events which have led us to this moment. The Democrats have their version. The Republicans have their version. The President and the White House staff have their version. The American public watching the budget debacle no doubt has its own ideas on just what has been happening here over the past 9 months. I believe it has decided that the management of this body is incompetent to deal with fiscal policy.

As I see it, Congress was presented a budget by the President last January. It did not like the President's budget, but was unable to muster the votes within its own ranks to pass a budget resolution. So a summit agreement became the vehicle of choice—both sides could play and both sides share the blame. That summit group of White House and congressional negotiators met for over 5 months.

On the eve of the fiscal year, September 30, the summit announced details of an agreement. That agreement promised $40.1 billion in deficit reduction in fiscal year 1991 and $500 billion by 1996. It was not a perfect agreement, but it did promise to achieve significant savings. It was comprehensive and well understood. Perhaps most important, it was an enforceable agreement with enforcement measures unlike any we have ever tried before.

In the wee morning hours of October 5, the House defeated the budget resolution conference report that embodied the summit agreement. It failed because it couldn't gain a majority of votes from either party, much less a majority of the House.

Three days later, the Democrat leadership of the House pushed through a new version of that conference report. That resolution reduced savings in entitlement spending, reduced agricultural savings, further cut defense spending, and increased the amount of unreconciled—unlikely to ever be achieved—savings that would have resulted if Congress had seen fit to pass the earlier summit agreement. Nevertheless, it allowed us to move on to the next step of reconciling the savings called for in the budget resolution.

The budget resolution essentially proposes to reduce the deficit by cutting defense spending, increasing taxes and user fees, reducing entitlements, and increasing domestic discretionary spending. In this reconciliation bill, we are considering the portion of that resolution dealing with mandatory spending and new taxes. The other large piece of the budget resolution—discretionary spending for domestic, international, and military affairs—will be enacted as we consider each of the 13 appropriations conference reports still to come before this body.

This reconciliation bill will yield 77 percent of the deficit reduction called for in the budget resolution. Sixty-eight and one-half percent of the first year savings will come in the form of new fees and revenues. If this bill is passed, fees/revenues will account for 62.6 percent of the 5-year total. That's not the way the American people want to reduce the deficit.

Entitlement spending reductions account for 21 percent of first year savings and 16 percent of the 5-year package. Defense cuts, the only cuts called for in appropriated accounts under the budget resolution, comprise 25 percent of first year savings and 37 percent of the savings produced in the first 3 years covered by the resolution. After 1993, if the Democrats still control this body, we are likely to see the defense accounts contribute substantially more, and domestic discretionary spending increased.

The greatest failure of the summit, and of the Democrat-passed budget resolution is the failure to reduce by even one dollar the amount spent on domestic discretionary programs. Over the next 5 years, domestic discretionary spending will increase by a total of $170 billion in outlays over its 1990 level. This is more than would be spent if we just allowed it to grow at the rate of inflation.

Defense spending will be cut, entitlements will be cut, taxes will go up, but domestic discretionary spending will grow at a rate well above inflation. We can not do anything about discretionary spending in this bill, but as you vote for the Medicare cuts and tax increases in this package, remember some of the pain might have been avoided if domestic discretionary spending were not such a sacred cow.

Reconciliation is always the hardest part of enacting any budget resolution. It requires committees to make tough decisions by producing savings from the programs under their jurisdiction. Within certain parameters, committees can produce those savings by imposing fees or cutting or eliminating planned spending. These are the only two ways to produce real, lasting deficit reduction—raise revenues or cut spending.

This reconciliation bill lumps together the decisions of each of the 12 committees charged with producing savings under the budget resolution. It is an imperfect bill, because everything in it does not contribute to deficit reduction. Some of the committees were unable to produce the savings asked of them. A few of the provisions in the bill produce disingenuous savings.

AGRICULTURE

The Agriculture Committee was charged with producing $1,022 million in savings in the first year and $13,627 million in savings over 5 years. We are told by the CBO that the Agriculture Committee will not meet these directives. It is really hard to debate the merits of the agriculture portion, however, since we have yet to see a final version of the language or a cost estimate—even as debate on this bill is underway on the floor of the House. If legislation implementing a Gatt agreement is not passed by June 30, 1992, the committee's savings will be substantially reduced after 1993. In fact, if an ageement is reached, the savings from agriculture will fall short of the 5-year total by $17 billion.

BANKING, FINANCE AND URBAN AFFAIRS

The Banking Committee was directed to produce $1,507 million in savings in 1991 and $13,258 million over 5 years. The committee reports respective savings of $1,723 million and $13,407 million. The lion's share of the Banking Committee's reconciled savings (65 percent in 1/67 percent over 5) comes from a dubious proposal regarding the bank insurance fund. This measure requires the FDIC to do what it already has authority for under present law—Seidman has already announced an increase on the deposit insurance it requires of banks to 19 cents, with expected increases to 23 cents in the next year.

The Congressional Budget Office [CBO] is scoring this as deficit reduction because it is anticipated that the FDIC will have to raise rates to cover its liabilities. The truth here, however, is that all of the money raised by

FDIC will either go toward paying off depositors or toward raising the bank insurance fund to a safe level. The money will not be applied toward shrinking the deficit. It will only contribute to helping keep the hole from getting bigger

EDUCATION AND LABOR

The committee was directed to produce $215 million in savings in fiscal year 1991 and $3,770 million over 5 years. While it has exceeded its directive for 1991, the committee falls more than $100 million short in meeting its 5-year target. One specific concern I have with the savings reported by this committee is that 87 percent of its first year savings and 51 percent of its 5 year savings come in the form of increased fees and pension insurance premiums. Additionally, $22 million in 1991 savings and $141 million of the 5-year savings are assumed to accrue from civil penalties. No adjustments for behavior changes are included in these particular estimates so they are probably overly optimistic.

Even worse, the committee piled on extraneous and controversial measures having nothing to do with deficit reduction. Child care in the form of H.R. 3 is here. Criminal penalties under OSHA are here. A new college facility financing program is here. Over 100 extraneous provisions, money protecting special interests are hidden in this bill. This is the wrong vehicle for these items and they should be removed from the text of reconciliation and taken up separately based on their individual merits.

ENERGY AND COMMERCE

The Energy and Commerce Committee also excepted its directive for fiscal year 1991, but falls short of producing the required 5-year savings. The committee was charged with savings of $3,731 million in fiscal year 1991 and $43,721 million over 5 years. For fiscal year 1991, the committee is $186 million over target, but falls a whopping $3,157 million short of the 5-year directive. Medicare yields 93 percent of the committee's first year savings and 95 percent of its 5 year savings. Medicare provides will bear the burden of these savings—83 percent.

The medicaid portion of the committee's reconciliation submission contains $506 million in fiscal year 1991 savings and $4,942 million in 5 year savings. Unfortunately for the budget deficit, the committee did not limit itself to measures that reduce the deficit. While it produces these savings, it spends $234 million for new initiatives in fiscal year 1991 and $2,854 million over 5-years. These are no doubt important, worthwhile, and much needed provisions. But the summit agreement this bill attempts to reflect clearly limited new, pay-as-you-go initiatives to fiscal year 1992 and beyond. If an agreement is an agreement, there four provisions should be stripped from the bill and subjected to the same pay-as-you-go standard being applied to all other new entitlement legislation.

INTERIOR AND INSULAR AFFAIRS

The committee was charged with producing fiscal year 1991 savings of $343 million and 5-year savings of $2,018 million. The committee missed its first year target by $18 million, but promises to exceed its 5-year total by $371 million. Ninety-one percent of the committee's deficit reduction proposals come in the form of user fees.

JUDICIARY

The committee was directed to produce $91 million and $495 million, respectively, in fiscal year 1991 and 5-year savings. This bill would increase patent and trademark fees for the 1991-95 period, it would automatically credit these fees to the "salaries and expenses account" of the patent and trademark office, allowing them to be available without appropriation. Therefore, there will be no net savings. Unless the bill is amended to make the additional fees offsetting receipts subject to appropriations, the committee can not be scored with any deficit reduction.

MERCHANT MARINE AND FISHERIES

The good news is that the committee managed to exceed its fiscal year 1991 directive by $18 million and its 5-year directive by $34 million. The bad news is that the committee achieves these targets solely by raising fees. Additionally, the language reported by this committee contains numerous extraneous provisions, including language introducing water quality standards for recreation areas, allowing the acquisiton of real estate, and clearing the way to build another dam. Also, the committee extends veterans' benefits to merchant marines through the Merchant Mariners Fairness Act of 1990 included in this bill.

The really bad news is that a point of order will be made against $1 billion in fees. This bill will soon lose a full billion dollars in savings.

POST OFFICE AND CIVIL SERVICE

The committee exceeds both its first and 5-year directives—$2,165 million and $14,350 million—by $261 million and $110 million, respectively. The so-called reform of the civil service lump-sum retirement benefit is unfortunately not much more than a timing shift. This bill proposes to suspend for 5 years the 50/50 lump-sum benefit. Under this proposal, payments we currently make to Federal retirees who opt for the lump sum would instead be paid out more slowly during their retirement. Since much of the payout takes place outside the 5-year estimating window, eliminating the lump sum saves money in each year of the package. On a long-term actuarial basis, however, the proposal does not save anything.

PUBLIC WORKS AND TRANSPORTATION

Of the 12 committees directed to produce savings in this reconciliation bill, none was more successful in ignoring the budget resolution that the public works and transportation committee. This committee was charged with producing modest dificit reduction of $42 million in fiscal year 1991 and $254 million over the next 5 years. Instead, it succeeded in producing additional direct spending of $240 million in fiscal year 1991 and an incredible $3,204 million over the next 5 years. While the rest of this reconciliation package is at least aimed in the direction of dificit reduction, the public works committee's submission is so far in the opposite direction that it should simply be stripped from the bill as extraneous matter. Some of it will be.

SCIENCE, SPACE AND TECHNOLOGY

Laudably, the committee exceeds its reconciliation directives by $1 million in fiscal year 1991 and $8 million over the 5-year period. The entire $6 million fiscal year 1991 savings and the $33 million 5-year savings is derived from user fees. Additionally, the committee submission includes four clearly extraneous provisions: one authorizing a study to identify new, potential user fees, one establishing a mandatory radon program at EPA, one containing the complete title III language of H.R. 5170—FAA research, engineering, and development authorization act of 1990—and another containing the provisions of section 2 of H.R. 4887—catastrophic failure prevention research program. I believe we should accept with gratitude the real deficit reduction produced by the committee, but respectfully request that the extraneous matters be considered in the normal legislative process.

VETERAN'S AFFAIRS

The committee was directed to produce savings of $620 million in fiscal year 1991 and $3,350 million over 5 years. It exceeds these targets by $7 million in fiscal year 1991 and $252 million over 5 years. All but $73 million of the total veterans' package deficit reduction is achieved through program reforms, rather than increased user fees.

WAYS AND MEANS

By far the largest portion or reconciliation is achieved through language submitted by the ways and means committee. It is important to note, however, that this package contains none of the economic growth incentives envisioned when the summit was convened or reiterated with the President's repudiation of his "no new taxes pledge."

The committee achieves $22,873 million in savings in fiscal year 1991 and $198,235 million over 5 years—$5,328 million and $3,832 million more than directed in the budget resolution. Taxes account for $19.4 million of the fiscal year 1991 savings and $52.8 million of the 5-year savings.

SUMMARY

When the summit mechanism was created last spring, the order was placed for $50 billion in deficit reduction in fiscal year 1991 and $500 billion by 1995. The original summit agreement defeated by this House on October 5 offered savings of $40.1 billion in fiscal year 1991 and $500 billion by fiscal year 1995. The budget resolution agreed to on October 8 will produce an optimistic $38.8 billion in savings in fiscal year 1991 and $483 billion over the 5-year period.

This reconciliation bill will implement the largest portion of the $38.8 billion in savings called for in the budget resolution. It produces $29.9 billion in deficit reduction in fiscal year 1991 and $246.2 billion between 1991 and 1995. This reconciliation bill accounts for 77 percent of the total first year savings—defense contributes the rest—called for in the budget resolution. It comprises 51.5 percent of the 5-year total.

New revenues, not including those user fees scored as entitlement savings, account for 64 percent of this bill's first year savings and 58 percent of the 5-year total. With respect to the total budget resolution package, revenues as defined in this bill, account for 50 percent of the fiscal year 1991 deficit reduction and 30 percent of the 5-year package total.

If we consider user fees to be what they really are—new taxes, the total revenue component of this reconciliation package grows to 68.5 percent in fiscal year 1991 and 62.6 percent of the 5-year total. Compared to the total budget resolution parcel, combined user fees and revenues in this reconciliation bill total $20.5 billion—53 percent—in fiscal year 1991 and $155.7 billion—32.2 percent—over 5 years. If the Democratic alternative is passed, taxes and fees will contribute 36.7 percent of the 5-year total budget package.

I oppose this reconciliation bill on its own merits and because it is an integral part of the Democrat-designed and Democrat-passed budget resolution. Aside from its attack on defense spending, this package is short on spending cuts and long on taxes.

The only discretionary spending cuts provided for in the entire budget resolution are those in military spending. Defense cuts account for 25 percent of the real entitlement spending reforms only account for 21 percent of the fiscal year 1991 deficit reduction package and 16 percent of the 5-year promise. Outlays for domestic discretionary spending will grow $128.3 billion over 1990 levels by the end of this 5-year package.

No matter how you view it, this is a tax-heavy proposition. The deficit reduction in this Democrat-sponsored reconciliation bill and the budget resolution which begat it, squarely place the burden of deficit reduction on the shoulders of the taxpayer. Until the American public gets a little relief from the congressional pork barrel, I will not support such onerous tax increases.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SLATTERY].

Mr. SLATTERY. Mr. Chairman, when all the political dust settles here today, it is critical for Members to vote to reduce our deficit. Our Nation's economic future is clearly in jeopardy, and I am pleased that President Bush has acknowledged this.

I must admit that I am deeply worried about how our country will deal with the next recession. In every recession since the Great Depression, our Government has either cut taxes or increased spending to stimulate out of a recession, and that is exactly what Ronald Reagan did in 1981.

My colleagues, what are we going to do to stimulate out of the next recession when we go into it with a $200 billion deficit? We could easily see a $300 or $400 billion deficit, that has to be financed by foreign capital. The only way we could attract foreign capital is with high interest rates. Yet at home, the only way we could stimulate the economy is with lower interest rates. My friends, we would clearly be in a jam where we would have one foot on the economic accelerator and one foot on the economic brake.

Mr. Chairman, as we look at this package, we must not lose sight of some basic facts. This is a $500 billion 5-year deficit reduction package. It is the largest deficit reduction package that we have voted on in recent years. It contains real cuts and real revenues, with real budget process reform. Of this $500 billion total, two-thirds is from spending reductions. Yes, we are making some tough spending cuts in entitlements, in defense, and in agriculture. One-third is from revenue.

Mr. Chairman, let me point out to my colleagues that the President endorsed a revenue increase of $130 billion in the summit agreement.

□ 1800

In fact, Mr. Chairman, the President went on national television to urge us to vote for this $130 billion revenue package.

Well, the American people responded. They called us and they said, "Don't vote for it," and the reason they did is because they thought it was unfair, and they were right.

This plan makes some changes. The ROSTENKOWSKI plan drops the 12-percent gasoline tax, a regressive tax that was wrong, and in its place we have a modest increase in the income tax rate for those people in this country who have an income of more than $185,000 a year.

Mr. Chairman, the easy vote today is "no." You can go home and easily justify your vote, to the applause of many special interests, but there is one special interest who will not hear you. They are too young to understand what we are doing today. They are the kids who will have to pay every dollar of every bill that we refuse to pay, and it is simply immoral for us to continue this policy of the last 10 years.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote for this reconciliation package.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the balance of the time.

Mr. Chairman, I also want to express my thanks to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL] for the cooperation he has shown me during this battle. My only hope was that we could have worked together on this package.

The American people expect us to face up to the challenge today, not to run from it, not to kid them, but to face up to it. They have heard a lot of excuses. The time for excuses is over. This is the time to make tough choices; $30 billion in savings the first year, $250.7 billion in savings over 5 years.

Americans want to believe in us, but to do that we have to believe in ourselves and have the courage to make the tough choices. Let us make them by voting for this package today.

Mr. KYL. Mr. Chairman, there has been a lot of talk about fairness by our colleagues on the Democratic side of the aisle. But, this tax bill fails every test of fairness.

A family of four earning $35,200 would see a tax increase of 7.4 percent under this plan. A single person making $21,000 a year will find a tax bill 5 percent higher. Tax the rich? Families earnings $35,000 a year are going to be very surprised to learn that they are now among the rich.

The truth of the matter is that the Democrats aren't talking about taxing the rich; they are talking about taxing every American.

Mr. Chairman, Federal tax collections have doubled in the last 10 years. Apparently, a mere doubling of revenues isn't enough. The Democrats now want to levy the largest tax increase in American history—not on the rich—but on all Americans, even those with modest incomes.

This bill would delay indexing of tax brackets and personal exemptions. That one provision represents $36 billion out of the pockets of all Americans over the next 5 years. The increased Medicare premium and deductible will force senior citizens to shoulder a disproportionate share of deficit reduction. It lays the foundation for a new national sales tax under the guise of luxury taxes. It taxes alcohol and tobacco.

The Democrats want the American people to pay significantly higher taxes so that Congress can continue its spending binge. Look at the spending bills the House of Representatives has passed so far. The VA–HUD appropriations bill 17.3 percent over last year's levels. The Labor-Health and Human Services-Education bill which totaled 11.3 percent over last year's levels, a $17.3 billion increase. The Agriculture appropriations bill totaled 11.5 percent more than last year. The Treasury-Postal Service appropriations bill came in at 12.3 percent more than last year.

If taxes are increased, does anyone really believe that spending will be constrained? I don't think the American people are fooled by this package. It is tax and spend all over again.

I urge my colleagues to oppose the bill.

Mr. GRADISON. Mr. Chairman, the debate over the budget and the approaching election have focused attention on the economy during the eighties. So far, the Democratic interpretation is prevailing in the media and threatens to become the conventional wisdom. Their interpretation, however, is wrong. As Alan Greenspan once said, "Everyone is entitled to their own opinions, but not their own facts."

Stripped of the rhetorical veneer, the Democrats' arguments can be seen for what they are, the politics of envy. These arguments are too important to let go unchallenged.

FAMILY INCOME

Democrats have had a field day with statistics and demonstrate little or no change in real, that is, after inflation family income since the early seventies. The cause of this is hardly Republican policies. Rather, it is two external oil shocks and the inflationary period of the Carter administration. It has taken the longest peacetime expansion in our Nation's history just to gain back lost ground.

This is also true when you look at family income by income groups, The following table shows that all groups lost ground from 1973 to 1981 and all groups gained during the eighties. The rich did not get richer at the expense of the poor; rather, everyone got richer. To complain that someone got richer faster than someone else is to engage in the politics of envy.

CHANGE IN REAL FAMILY INCOME BY QUINTILE AND RACE

[In percent]

Quintile	1973–81	1981–88
Top fifth	−5.5	20.6
2d fifth	−5.8	12.9
3d fifth	−7.9	10.2
4th fifth	−12.0	8.7
Bottom Fifth	−15.8	5.6
Whites	−7.1	15.0
Blacks	−7.4	16.5

It is also worth noting that while the income of black families fell during the seventies slightly more than white familes, since 1981, black family income has risen faster than white family income.

A NATION OF HAMBURGER FLIPPERS?

Democrats often allege that we are exporting all our good jobs overseas. The facts are otherwise. The unprecedented job growth of the eighties has been in good jobs at good wages, and has been in higher paying jobs than the jobs created during the seventies.

We are becoming a high-technology, service-oriented economy, but we are, at the same time, maintaining and expanding our manufacturing base. Manufacturing's share of GNP today is at its historical average and has been climbing since 1982 after a significant decline during the seventies.

TAXES AND THE RICH

Recently, the Democrats have been resorting to appeals to class distinctions, claiming the rich aren't paying their fair share of taxes. To rectify this injustice, the Democrats seek to raise marginal rates and impose a surtax on millionaires, a stark reversal of the goals of the Tax Reform Act of 1986.

The facts, however, indicate that the rich are paying at least their fair share of income tax. The share of Federal income taxes paid by the richest 1 percent of taxpayers climbed from nearly 7 percent in 1981 to over 13 percent in 1986—almost a doubling—and the richest 5 percent of Americans paid almost 43 percent of all Federal income taxes in 1986.

By contrast, the poorer half of Americans pay only 6.2 percent of Federal income taxes, down from 6.8 percent in 1979, and the poorest 25 percent pay less than 1 percent of all Federal income taxes. The income system is progressive.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to make one more point. The Democratic reconciliation alternative delays indexing for 1 year. This would hit the middle class hard and would mark a temporary return to the bracket creep of the seventies. It represents over 10 percent of the tax revenue raised by their plan.

We need a budget that is based on equity and facts, not hypocrisy, cynicism, and the politics of envy.

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Chairman, today we are witnessing a triumph for left-wing politics in America. After having their pro-tax candidates completely defeated in the previous three Presidential elections, their strong-arm congressional leadership run out of office in disgrace, and their remaining leadership divided and weak, the Democrats have rebounded to what can only be described as one of the great come-from-behind victories of all time. This reconciliation package is the symbol of that victory.

Just what does this "victory" mean for the American taxpayer?

A record tax increase: Americans currently carry the highest peacetime tax burden in history. This plan would add to that burden a record tax increase of $144.7 billion over the next 5 years. If you include increased user fees and other expenses, this package will increase the cost of the Federal Government to Americans by $177.7 billion.

Abuse of Federal trust funds: This package abuses several of the Federal trust funds, including Social Security, by raising their respective fees and then using that money to balance the budget.

No spending cuts: With the exception of defense, there are no spending cuts included in this package. All other Federal spending areas are slated to increase over the next 5 years.

Bogus economic assumptions: The economic assumptions included in this plan predict record economic growth and interest rates that haven't been seen in the last 25 years. If these assumptions are true, then we don't need a tax increase to balance the budget; if we adopt this tax increase, there's no way these economic assumptions could possibly come true.

Mr. Speaker, the economy is slowing to a crawl, inflation is rising, and the Democrats are calling for a tax increase. Business as usual is too light a term to describe what is happening in the House today.

At the same time, Republicans have been completely shut out of the legislative process. Democrats have stated that the Republican alternative was not allowed to be considered because it fell $100 billion short of the deficit reduction targets included in the budget resolution.

Their own proposal, they claim, lives up to the $500 billion in deficit reduction required by that resolution. The truth is the Democrat plan won't cut the deficit by $1, let alone $500 billion. Here's why.

No spending restrictions: Without enforceable spending caps, Congress will continue to spend more money than it takes in. In the post-war period, Congress has spent $1.58 for every dollar it raises in taxes.

Over-priced tax increases: Congress chronically over-estimates the amount of revenue it will raise by increasing taxes. Every tax increase we passed during the 1980's failed to raise as much money as the tax committees and Congressional Budget Office claimed it would.

Phantom interest savings: The interest savings included in this package are never going to happen. These projected savings are expected from lower future deficits and lower interest rates. Since neither is going to happen, interest expenses are going to increase, not fall.

If we adopt the Democrat's budget reconciliation package today, then next year we will have a larger deficit, an economy in recession, and a Federal budget process that failed in every way since its inception in 1974.

What can we do to avoid this? Adopt the Republican alternative.

Spending cuts: The Republican alternative includes real spending cuts. Our deficit problems are the result of too much spending, not too few taxes. The Republican alternative cuts defense spending and freezes discretionary spending, entitlements, and foreign aid.

Budget reforms: Furthermore, the Republican alternative includes much-needed budget reforms that will prevent this type of last-minute budgeting from happening in the future. These reforms include eliminating the fraudulent "current services" budgeting, so in the future a spending increase is called a spending increase, not a program cut.

No tax increases: Republicans recognize that Americans are drowning under thier current tax burden. For that reason, this package does not include any new taxes, including no increased Medicare premiums.

Mr. Chairman, if giving committee chairmen the responsibility of cutting spending was the way to reduce the deficit, we would have balanced the budget 20 years ago. The Democrat proposal demonstrates that truth only too clearly. The only hope we have today of true deficit reduction is to adopt the Republican alternative and reform the budget process. Since the Democrats have prevented us from doing that today, we should kill their tax-and-spend proposal and force them to consider our alternative plan. Otherwise, the deficit will continue to grow, the economy will sink into recession, and next year House Republicans will be coming to the floor saying "I told you so." I can tell you now those words will be a hollow victory.

Mr. SYNAR. Mr. Chairman, this budget decision is a recognition by Congress that we have crossed the last bridge of easy answers. This bridge must be crossed in order to get to the solutions that have eluded us for way too long. Once this bridge is crossed, Members can begin the process of correcting the mistakes of the Reagan era which permitted the wealthier to be undertaxed; and which saw an excessive growth in defense spending leading to the present budget crisis. My support of this bill has not been an easy decision.

I voted against the budget summit agreement on October 4 and voted for the revised budget on October 7, with the expectation that a fair agreement could be devised. I believed there had to be four elements to be fair. First, it had to protect poor elderly Americans from unfairly high Medicare premiums and annual deductible amounts. There had to be provisions under Medicare that did not simply shift costs to beneficiaries who can not afford to pay. Second, the revenues raised had to recognize that working Americans and the middle class, have borne a disproportionate share of the cost of Government over the past 10 years. Third, the tax bubble had to be eliminated so that the richest Americans would not pay less of a share of taxes than middle income and working taxpayers. Fourth, the burden of deficit reduction had to be shared.

For the past week, I have participated in the process and listened to the comments and suggestions of my Oklahoma constituents. There are competing interests in this debate and I made my decision on the basis of whether the budget met my stated criteria but more importantly on the basis of whether it is fair.

There are provisions I like in the budget and there are sections for which I would not vote if these were included in separate legislation. On the plus side, the Democratic alternative clearly begins to reverse the regressive tax structure of the past decade which has allowed the richest Americans to avoid their fair share of taxes. Contrary to the Republican alternative, the agreement does not rely heavily on hidden taxes which are thinly disguised as user fees for Government services.

The bill does contain a minimal increase in Medicare premiums, however, these have been fairly distributed. In fiscal year 1991, the increase is the same as expected under present law and will mean only an increase of $1.30 per month. The deductible is raised only $25 for all 5 years to $100.

Included in the package are certain budget process reforms. Some of these are good in that the Social Security surplus can not be counted as reducing the deficit and a pay-as-you-go system is adopted for future spending. The down side is that the reforms take more responsibility for budget decisions away from Congress and thus further away from the American taxpayer.

There is actual deficit reduction in the package, not sham techniques. The actual reductions over 5 years are significantly more than that proposed by the Republicans. This is the first reduction I have seen in my tenure. I am convinced it will assist in stimulating the economy and provide for growth.

I have a responsibility to ensure that Government takes care of the needy and develops a sound infrastructure for the future. This bill begins the move toward those goals.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the 1991 budget resolution included reconciliation instructions to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries asking for $222 million in fiscal 1991 with increases in the out years. Our committee reported provisions which exceed the amounts of savings which we were asked to produce.

The bulk of our savings are achieved by raising existing tonnage charges which apply to commercial vessels entering the United States from a foreign port. They are found in section 121 of title 46, United States Code. These tonnage charges date almost to the beginning of our Nation and have not been increased since 1909. This single provision will generate $190 million in additional revenues each year.

The committee has also authorized the Coast Guard to collect true user fees for services like examination and inspection of vessels and the licensing of crews. These user fees will generate about $30 million in the first year.

The committee's proposal also authorizes the Environmental Protection Agency to charge user fees which offset the cost of several environmental regulatory programs, raising an additional $22 million.

Finally, the committee has amended the Coastal Zone Management Act to require the Undersecretary of Commerce to charge fees offsetting the cost of permit appeals under that law. This amendment will achieve savings of as much as $500,000.

For legislative history of the CZMA provisions, please see pages H8068 to H8103 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of September 26.

The committee also added provisions derived from H.R. 44, H.R. 188, and H.R. 4333. There is also a provision on NOAA facilities in Virginia.

Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries has complied with the spirit and the letter of its reconciliation instructions. I ask the members to support these provisions and support the passage of H.R. 5835.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Chairman, I am very reluctant to vote for this resolution. I will, of course, reserve judgment on the conference report. Earlier I voted No on the Rule, and I did so because it excluded consideration of the so-called Republican substitute on the budget, which would, if considered, have given those of us who are unalterably opposed to raising taxes, a chance to vote on a budget that does not raise them.

What would I do instead of raising taxes? I would probably not design a budget such as that designed by the Republicans. I certainly would not inflict the pain of deficit reduction on handicapped children, or the frail elderly who depend on Medicare and Social Security.

But I would reduce the deficit and balance the budget over 5 years, as has been stated here before by myself and others, simply by reducing defense spending, cutting NATO support, and reducing foreign and international aid.

I would do the above, and by so doing achieve what both the Democrats and the President want, without raising a single tax on anyone.

While I appreciate the work done by the Ways and Means Committee in bringing down the cost to senior citizens on Medicare, and the fact that no gasoline or petroleum taxes are being imposed under their alternative budget, and most certainly for taxing the rich, there are serious, in my opinion, cuts in veterans' pensions and health benefits, and in student loans.

The budget package, even without taxes, does grave damage to domestic programs here at home, and will cause panic and upheaval in many lives before we are through with it in 5 years time.

Mr. Chairman, there is nothing wrong with this process except that which brought us to this process in the beginning—and that is the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Act which should, in my opinion, be repealed. No one abides by it. We waive its requirements and jurisdictions here at the drop of a hat. We use it to suit our immediate needs to get off the hook whenever that need arises.

Yet when crunch-time comes—and I blame the President directly for the 5-month delay in this reconciliation process since the May 1st adoption of a Budget Resolution by this House—everyone lets Gramm-Rudman rise up as a monster more horrifying than we could have ever conjured up as children, playing in the dark—and we let it scare us into closing down Government, and locking the doors of our Nation's historic sites to the disappointment of children, and we threaten to furlough Federal workers, cut child nutrition, and education for the handicapped, and to cut rehabilitation for the disabled, and reduce or severely curtail veterans' program benefits. That is what we have been doing in the years since enactment of Gramm-Latta I and Gramm-Latta II in Reagan's heyday, and we are now letting the successor, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, play the monster, and give us an excuse to do just what we are doing—raising taxes in order to reduce the deficit.

The Democrats didn't create this deficit—no Democrat has served in the White House while the deficit doubled, tripled and quadrupled itself into the critical mass it has become today. Democrats tried, have tried, to keep the deficit down, by sending Presidents over the last decade annual appropriations bills that were far below the amounts requested by Presidents in the White House. And we did it at great sacrifice of domestic programs for the elderly, for educationally deprived children, for the economic welfare of our States and localities back home—all because of Mr. Reagan's voodoo economics to blithely cut taxes, while approving the most massive, peacetime defense buildup ever known to man. In order to build that nuclear, pie-in-the-sky, arsenal of planes that won't fly and Star Wars and Brilliant Pebbles, while at the same time keeping spending below the President's own request, the Congress cut education, cut spending on health care for all Americans, watched economic development opportunities go out the window—for 10 long years.

During these past 10 years, we couldn't get full funding for Head Start, or WIC for women, infants and children, or job training for displaced workers.

Increases for child care or for chapter 1 remedial education for young children? Forget it. We barely hung onto EDA and ARC funding, under a Presidential decree that these programs be zeroed out of existence.

In the past 2 years, we have failed to provide catastrophic health care fo the elderly, and under the new rules in this package, we bind the hands of appropriators and ourselves for 5 long years, during which time we will be unable to even consider the need for health care for 37 million Americans who have access to absolutely no medical care at all. And lest we forget, one out of every 5 of those 37 million Americans without heath care are children—children often conceived and reared in such dire poverty throughout these United States, not just Appalachia, that they've never had three nourishing meals a day, a decent home, decent or warm clothing, or care from a doctor or a dentist. Children don't go to the polls and vote—and they have no voice unless it is ours raised in their behalf.

For 10 years Democrats have tried to do two things. Work with Republican administrations, support the President of all the prople as often as possible, and to keep down spending as evidenced by the appropriations bills sent to the White House for signature over that decade that were less in dollar amounts than the White House demanded.

We have seen ourselves castigated, as Democrats, as incumbents, for the sins of others—namely those in charge of the White House, for too long.

Dr. Feelgood doesn't live there any more, but we do have a President who said "read my lips," and when that didn't work, made a joke of the economically perilous times we are currently in by saying "read my hips." I don't think the people of West Virginia found it very funny.

And during these past 2 weeks, when exhaustive efforts have been made by all involved to come up with something fair—just plain, old simple fairness in terms of a budget—the President has been off campaigning for his friends, and when he isn't doing that, he apparently is sitting in the War Room contemplating foreign policy. He certainly bowled me over the other day when he admitted he preferred making foreign policy, to making domestic policy. And that policy certainly has been embraced by his Secretary of Defense who recently stated that it was delightful having the Congress out on recess when Iraq invaded Kuwait. Does this mean war? Is there a method to this madness? Do we dare finish this budget and go home, leaving Bush and Cheney in charge? Do we dare leave them in charge, if we adopt this budget package today?

It's a 5-year package, Mr. Chairman. Is that why Desert Shield, for which I gave the President my support, is separate and apart from the rest of the budget? So that no matter what happens in the next 5 years, if the President wants war in the Persian Gulf, he can unilaterally declare one all by himself, and get funding for it to boot?

I am a Democrat, and I am told by the Republican Members of this body that since we control the Congress, everything bad that has happened is our fault. Well, the President has vetoed and been sustained 14 times on major legislation during this Congress alone and I say, it's a two-way street Mr. President. Read the Constitution.

My people in West Virginia have been taxed to the absolute extent of their ability to pay. Thousands are out of work; thousands more have left their beloved State and gone elsewhere for work, for they no longer possess the dignity that goes with a paycheck and the good feeling that comes from putting a meal on the table for their children, or warm clothing on their backs.

Most of the Members speaking on the floor today have stated how difficult this decision is. But they believe, most of them, that America is watching the debate, and looking for strength in us, to bite the bullet and to reduce this runaway deficit, no matter how we have to do it. I hope they are right.

Mr. MAVROULES. Mr. Chairman, I rise today to add my voice to the budget debate and to urge my colleagues to work together to forge much needed unity behind this new plan. Throughout the country, Americans are exasperated with Government, with the administration, and with Congress. Most people do not understand the philosophical differences that have undergirded this debate. And frankly, I think it is time we set aside our differences and work to restore much needed public confidence, confidence in the budget process, confidence in Congress, and confidence in the Government as a whole.

In my judgment, the budget morass we have found ourselves in was avoidable. To critics who point the finger at Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, I want to make it clear up front; Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is not to blame for our current fiscal gridlock. Budget paralysis is a byproduct of the administration and Congress' inability to own up to the onerous task of substantially cutting spending while raising new revenues.

In my judgement, the American people want candor first and foremost. And candor is not what the administration has been providing. On January 29, Bush administration officials estimated the budget deficit would be $63 billion. Exactly 9 months later, they admit it is $293 billion. That is an increase of $230 billion. That is an increase of $1,000 for every American man, woman, and child. That is bigger than the entire economy of the country of Mexico.

The budget summit was convened to draw up a plan to pay the bill for Reaganomics. However, what the budget summit gave us was another prescription for balancing the budget on the backs of the poor, elderly, and working class. I could not support such a plan. Raising the cost of gasoline and home heating oil and ravaging Medicare accounts while granting a tax break to oil companies who have gouged the pocketbooks of average Americans did not strike me as a fair way to balance the budget. Even the distinguished minority whip, NEWT GINGRICH, took issue with the $60 billion cut in Medicare accounts.

No one doubts that we must face up to cutting the deficit. No one doubts that this is no easy task. The only doubt that exists is in how we most equitably accomplish this task.

I supported the revised budget resolution. Like the original summit agreement, the revised budget resolution mandates deficit reduction to the tune of $40 billion in fiscal year 1991 and $500 billion over 5 years. Also like the original agreement, the revised resolution derived roughly 36 percent of its cuts in discretionary spending; 21 percent in mandatory spending; 3 percent in user fees; and 33 percent in revenue increases. However, unlike the original resolution, much more latitude was granted to the committees of jurisdiction in achieving these objectives. As a result, I believe we have achieved a much more progressive, forward-looking budget.

I strongly support the Ways and Means alternative. Unlike the original summit agreement, the new blueprint does away with the gas tax, the home heating oil tax, the 2-week delay in unemployment benefits, and the $19 billion of tax loopholes—including the oil company subsidy. To the extent that there are new revenues in the Democratic alternative, they are far more progressive in nature. The bubble would be eliminated and an explicit 33-percent rate bracket would be added to the Tax Code. In addition, a 10-percent surtax would be imposed on individuals with taxable incomes above $1 million.

In short, the Ways and Means alternative shifts the increased revenue burden to those who are more able to pay. The top 1 percent of income earning families in the United States would pay 3.3 percent more of their after-tax income while the lowest quintile of income earning families would pay 0.2 percent less of their after-tax income. By comparison, the original summit agreement would have more than reversed these figures. Americans making less than $10,000 would have paid 1.7 percent more of their after-tax income while Americans making more than $200,000 would have paid 15.3 percent less—according to the Joint Committee on Taxation. In short order, the new budget resolution went from regressive to progressive.

Building a consensus for making difficult cuts and raising taxes is no easy task, either in Washington or back home. But if ever there was a time for unity building, it is now.

In the past 10 weeks, we have witnessed the stationing of some 200,000 Americans in the Persian Gulf. World financial markets have plummeted while world oil prices have skyrocketed. The fear of war, threat of oil shortages coupled with a huge and growing Federal budget deficit have led to far-reaching cries of recession.

While our budget problems are real in my judgment, the fear of oil shortages and the precipitous impact it has had on world financial markets is unfounded. Public perceptions have been shaped by political rhetoric rather than factual information. For the record, I want it to be known that we are in no imminent threat of an oil shortage. The United States, Germany, and Japan have close to 1 billion barrels of oil in their combined strategic reserves. One billion barrels of oil in reserve. Most Americans do not even know that Japan and Germany possess oil reserves at all.

I do not believe we should lend credence to unfounded fears. An oil shortage is not imminent today and it won't be imminent tomorrow.

What is imminent is our budget quagmire. I urge my colleagues to support the Ways and Means alternative, it is a progressive approach to fiscal responsibility. And fiscal responsibility—by all accounts—is long overdue.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Chairman, today the House considers H.R. 5835, the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990. This bill is the revised version of the $500 billion deficit reduction package negotiated by Congress and the President.

While it requires that we bite the bullet and put our fiscal house in order, it does so in a less harsh manner than the failed summit agreement. I voted against the summit agreement October 4. This reconciliation bill is not perfect, but it is the best compromise we can hope for given the size of our task.

Specifically, the reconciliation bill addresses one of my chief concerns—the large and unfair Medicare cuts on the elderly. Under the summit agreement, these cuts would have been $60 billion, which was half of all domestic cuts.

The reconciliation bill reduces the out-of-pocket costs shouldered by the elderly by two-thirds. The deductible will increase only $100, rather than the $150 deductible contained in the failed agreement. Furthermore, the increase in the part B premium will be lower and slower than in the summit agreement.

Other inequities are corrected in this reconciliation bill. The 2-cent tax on heating oil is removed, as is the 2-week delay for receiving unemployment benefits.

This bill drops the 12-cent increase in the gasoline tax. It drops $4 billion in tax breaks for oil and gas companies provided by the summit agreement. It also drops the "growth incentives" proposed by the President—which only serve as wasteful tax shelters for the wealthy.

In reference to fairness of this budget bill and its impact on the taxpayers, H.R. 5835 makes improvements for the middle class and asks the wealthy to chip in more of their share.

The failed summit agreement would have increased taxes for those earning between $20,000 and $50,000 by 3 percent to 3.5 percent. The reconciliation bill will only increase the added tax burden by 1 percent.

As for wealthy taxpayers earning over $200,000, the summit pact would have only increased taxes by 0.3 percent. The reconciliation bill increases this to 7.4 percent. These taxpayers will pay their fair share in this budget reconciliation act.

Other budget process reforms are included in the bill. These include requirements that future revenue or spending legislation be made budget-neutral, that is, we will have pay-as-you-go procedures. In addition, the bill will remove the Social Security surplus from budget calculations. This practice has masked the true size of the Federal deficit.

Mr. Chairman, its high time we start putting our mountain of debt behind us. We owe it to the taxpayers. This 5-year, $500 billion deficit reduction measure will require sacrifices from all of us, but it is a credible plan to steer us back toward long-term economic stability. I urge my colleagues to support the budget reconciliation act.

The CHAIRMAN. All time for general debate has expired.

Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered as read. The amendments printed in part 1 of House Report 101-882 are adopted in the Committee of the Whole and in the House.

The text of the bill, H.R. 5835, as modified, is as follows:

H.R. 5835

SEC. 1101. TRIPLE BASE FOR DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Agriculture (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary", unless the context otherwise requires), in making available to producers deficiency payments otherwise authorized by law for each of the 1992 through 1995 crops of wheat, feed grains, upland cotton, and rice, shall compute the amount of such payments by multiplying—

(1) the payment rate; by

(2) the payment acres for the crop (as determined under subsection (b)); by

(3) the farm program payment yield for the crop for the farm.

(b) PAYMENT ACRES.—For purposes of subsection (a)(2), payment acres for a crop shall be—

(1) the number of acres planted to the crop for harvest within the number of acres obtained by multiplying—

(A) the crop acreage base for the crop for the farm; by

(B) the base reduction percentage (as determined under subsection (c)); less

(2) the quantity of reduced acreage (as determined under subsection (d)(1)).

(c) BASE REDUCTION PERCENTAGE.—For purposes of subsection (b)(1)(B), the base reduction percentage shall be—

(1) in the case of each of the 1992 and 1993 crops, 85 percent;

(2) in the case of the 1994 crop, 80 percent; and

(3) in the case of the 1995 crop, 75 percent.

(d) REDUCED AND PERMITTED ACREAGE.—

(1) REDUCED ACREAGE.—For purposes of subsection (b)(2), the quantity of reduced acreage for a crop shall be the number of acres devoted to conservation uses that is determined by multiplying—

(A) the crop acreage base; by

(B) the percentage reduction required by the Secretary under an acreage limitation program announced by the Secretary.

(2) PERMITTED ACREAGE.—The remaining acreage is hereafter in this section referred to as "permitted acreage".

(e) PLANTING COMMODITIES ON PERMITTED ACREAGE.—The Secretary shall permit producers on a farm to plant on permitted acreage for which the producers do not receive deficiency payments—

(1) program crops (wheat, feed grains, cotton, or rice);

(2) oilseeds (soybeans, sunflower, canola, rapeseed, safflower, flaxseed, mustard seed, or any other oilseeds the Secretary may designate);

(3) sweet sorghum, popcorn, guar, sesame, castor beans, crambe, plantago ovato, triticale, rye, guayule, milkweed, mung bean, meadowfoam, jojoba, or kenaf;

(4) commodities grown for experimental purposes, as determined by the Secretary;

(5) commodities for which no substantial domestic production or market exists, as determined by the Secretary; or

(6) any experimental crop, including annual herbaceous, or short-rotation woody crops, the production of which the Secretary determines is necessary to meet demand or anticipated demand for ethanol or other biofuels production.

(f) LOAN ELIGIBILITY.—

(1) PROGRAM CROPS.—Producers on a farm who devote permitted acreage (for which the producers do not receive deficiency payments) to program crops described in subsection (e)(1) shall be eligible for loans under the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1421 et seq.) with respect to the acreage.

(2) OILSEEDS.—Producers on a farm who devoted permitted acreage (for which the producers do not receive deficiency payments) to oilseeds described in subsection (e)(2) shall not be eligible for loans under such Act with respect to the acreage.

SEC. 1102. CALCULATION OF DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS BASED ON 12-MONTH AVERAGE.

For purposes of calculating deficiency payments for each of the 1991 through 1995 crops of wheat, feed grains, and rice, the payment rate for a crop shall be the amount by which the established price for the crop exceeds—

(1) in the case of wheat and feed grains, the higher of—

(A) the lesser of—

(i) the national weighted average market price received by producers during the marketing year for the crop, as determined by the Secretary; or

(ii) the national weighted average market price received by producers during the first 5 months of the marketing year for the crop, as determined by the Secretary, plus 10 cents per bushel; or

(B) the loan level determined for the crop; and

(2) in the case of rice, the higher of—

(A) the national average market price received by producers during the marketing year for the crop, as determined by the Secretary; or

(B) the loan level determined for the crop.

SEC. 1103. ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAM FOR 1991 CROP OF WHEAT.

As soon as practicable after the date of enactment of this section, the Secretary shall announce an acreage limitation program for the 1991 crop of wheat under which the acreage planted to wheat for harvest on a farm would be limited to the wheat crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by 15 percent.

SEC. 1104. ACREAGE REDUCTION PROGRAMS FOR 1992 THROUGH 1995 CROPS OF WHEAT, FEED GRAINS, UPLAND COTTON, AND RICE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), the Secretary shall announce an acreage limitation program for each of the 1992 through 1995 crops of—

(1) wheat under which the acreage planted to wheat for harvest on a farm would be limited to the wheat crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by—

(A) in the case of the 1992 crop of wheat, not less than 6 percent;

(B) in the case of the 1993 crop of wheat, not less than 5 percent;

(C) in the case of the 1994 crop of wheat, not less than 7 percent; and

(D) in the case of the 1995 crop of wheat, not less than 5 percent;

(2) corn, grain sorghum, barley, and oats under which the acreage planted to the respective feed grain for harvest on a farm would be limited to the respective feed grain crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by not less than 7½ percent;

(3) upland cotton under which the acreage planted to upland cotton for harvest on a farm would be limited to the upland cotton crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by—

(A) in the case of the 1992 crop of upland cotton, not less than 15 percent; and

(B) in the case of each of the 1993, 1994, and 1995 crops of upland cotton, not less than 20 percent; and

(4) rice under which the acreage planted to rice for harvest on a farm would be limited to the rice crop acreage base for the farm for the crop reduced by—

(A) in the case of the 1992 crop of rice, not less than 18½ percent;

(B) in the case of the 1993 crop of rice, not less than 15 percent;

(C) in the case of the 1994 crop of rice, not less than 14 percent; and

(D) in the case of the 1995 crop of rice, not less than 10 percent.

(b) STOCKS-TO-USE RATIO.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, subsection (a) shall not apply to a crop if the Secretary estimates for such crop that the stocks-to-use ratio will be less than—

(1) in the case of wheat, 34 percent;

(2) in the case of corn, grain sorghum, and barley, 20 percent;

(3) in the case of upland cotton, 30 percent; and

(4) in the case of rice, 16 percent.

SEC. 1105. SOYBEAN MARKETING LOAN.

(a) IN GENERAL.—In providing loans for soybeans otherwise authorized by law, the Secretary shall support the price of soybeans in each of the 1991 through 1995 marketing years at a level of not less than $5.25 per bushel.

(b) LOAN ORIGINATION FEES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary shall charge a producer a loan origination fee, in connection with making a loan under subsection (a), equal to not more 7 percent of the amount of the loan.

(2) LOAN DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS.—If the Secretary charges a loan origination fee for loans made for a crop of soybeans under paragraph (1) and makes loan deficiency payments for the crop, the Secretary shall reduce the amount of any such loan deficiency payment by an amount equal to the amount of the loan origination fee.

(c) EFFECTIVE LOAN RATE.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the effective loan rate for a crop of soybeans (calculated as the loan level for the crop less any loan origination fees) under this section shall not be more than $4.87 per bushel.

SEC. 1106. LOAN ORIGINATION AND PROGRAM SERVICE FEES.

(a) SUGAR, HONEY, PEANUTS, AND TOBACCO.—Effective for each of the 1991 through 1995 crops of sugarcane, sugar beets, honey, peanuts, and tobacco, the Secretary shall charge the producer a loan origination fee for a price support loan for such crops equal to not more 3 percent of the amount of the loan. The Secretary shall ensure that fees imposed for a loan for a crop of peanuts or tobacco under this subsection shall be shared equally between producers and purchasers.

(b) WOOL.—Effective for each of the 1991 through 1995 marketing years for wool and mohair, in connection with making price support available for such marketing years, the Secretary may charge producers of wool and mohair a program service fee equal to not more 1 percent of the amount of payments made under the National Wool Act of 1954 (7 U.S.C. 1781 et seq.) for wool and mohair for such marketing year.

SEC. 1107. PROVEN YIELDS FOR 1991 THROUGH 1995 CROPS OF FEED GRAINS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, effective for each of the 1991 through 1995 crops of feed grains, the Secretary shall not calculate farm program payment yields on the basis of actual yields of feed grains, as provided in section 505(a) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (as amended by section 1131 of S. 2830 (as passed by the House of Representatives on August 3, 1990)).

SEC. 1108. END ROWS TO MEET ACREAGE REDUCTION REQUIREMENTS.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, producers shall not be allowed to meet acreage limitation or set-aside requirements by idling end rows, as provided in section 1122 of S. 2830 (as passed by the House of Representatives on August 3, 1990).

SEC. 1109. SURFACE RESERVOIR ENCOURAGEMENT PROGRAM AND OTHER SAVINGS.

(a) SURFACE RESERVOIR.—The Secretary shall not establish a program to encourage surface reservoirs, as provided in subtitle C of title XI of S. 2830 (as passed by the House of Representatives on August 3, 1990).

(b) OTHER SAVINGS.—Section 201(d)(2)(B) of the Agricultural Act of 1949 (7 U.S.C. 1446(d)(2)(B)) is amended—

(1) in clause (i), by striking "the period beginning on April 1, 1986, and ending on December 31, 1986, 40 cents" and inserting "during calendar year 1991, 5 cents"; and

(2) in clause (ii), by striking "first 9 months of 1987, 25 cents" and inserting "calendar years 1992 through 1995, 11.25 cents".

Subtitle B—Other Agricultural Programs

SEC. 1201. AUTHORIZATION LEVELS FOR REA LOANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the other provisions of this section and notwithstanding any other provision of law, for each of fiscal years 1991 through 1995, loans may be insured in accordance with the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U.S.C. 901 et seq.) from the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund established under section 301 of such Act (7 U.S.C. 931) in amounts equal to the following levels:

(1) For fiscal year 1991, $896,000,000.

(2) For fiscal year 1992, $932,000,000.

(3) For fiscal year 1993, $969,000,000.

(4) For fiscal year 1994, $1,008,000,000.

(5) For fiscal year 1995, $1,048,000,000.

(b) REDUCTION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, for each of fiscal years 1991 through 1995, the Administrator of the Rural Electrification Administration shall reduce the amounts otherwise made available for insured loans made from the Rural Electrification and Telephone Revolving Fund by—

(1) $224,000,000 for fiscal year 1991;

(2) $234,000,000 for fiscal year 1992;

(3) $244,000,000 for fiscal year 1993;

(4) $256,000,000 for fiscal year 1994; and

(5) $267,000,000 for fiscal year 1995.

(c) MANDATORY LEVELS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Administrator shall insure loans at the levels authorized by this section for each of fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

(d) GUARANTEED LOANS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, in carrying out the Rural Electrification Act of 1936 (7 U.S.C. 901 et seq.), the Administrator shall increase the amounts otherwise made available to guarantee loans made by legally organized lending agencies. The loans shall be guaranteed at 90 percent of the principal amount of the loan.

SEC. 1202. AUTHORIZATION LEVELS FOR FmHA LOANS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the other provisions of this section and notwithstanding any other provision of law, for each of fiscal years 1991 through 1995, real estate and operating loans may be insured, made to be sold and insured, or guaranteed in accordance with subtitles A and B, respectively, of the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act (7 U.S.C. 1921 et seq.) from the Agricultural Credit Insurance Fund established under section 309 of such Act (7 U.S.C. 1929) in amounts equal to the following levels:

(1) For fiscal year 1991, $4,175,000,000, of which not less than $827,000,000 shall be for farm ownership loans under subtitle A of such Act.

(2) For fiscal year 1992, $4,343,000,000, of which not less than $861,000,000 shall be for farm ownership loans under subtitle A of such Act.

(3) For fiscal year 1993, $4,516,000,000, of which not less than $895,000,000 shall be for farm ownership loans under subtitle A of such Act.

(4) For fiscal year 1994, $4,697,000,000, of which not less than $931,000,000 shall be for farm ownership loans under subtitle A of such Act.

(5) For fiscal year 1995, $4,885,000,000, of which not less than $968,000,000 shall be for farm ownership loans under subtitle A of such Act.

(b) APPORTIONMENT OF INSURED AND GUARANTEED LOANS.—Subject to subsection (c), the amounts set forth in subsection (a) shall be apportioned as follows:

(1) For fiscal year 1991—

(A) $1,019,000,000 for insured loans, of which not less than $83,000,000 shall be for farm ownership loans; and

(B) $3,156,000,000 for guaranteed loans, of which not less than $744,000,000 shall be for guarantees of farm ownership loans.

(2) For fiscal year 1992—

(A) $1,060,000,000 for insured loans, of which not less than $87,000,000 shall be for farm ownership loans; and

(B) $3,283,000,000 for guaranteed loans, of which not less than $774,000,000 shall be for guarantees of farm ownership loans.

(3) For fiscal year 1993—

(A) $1,102,000,000 for insured loans, of which not less than $90,000,000 shall be for farm ownership loans; and

(B) $3,414,000,000 for guaranteed loans, of which not less than $805,000,000 shall be for guarantees of farm ownership loans.

(4) For fiscal year 1994—

(A) $1,147,000,000 for insured loans, of which not less than $94,000,000 shall be for farm ownership loans; and

(B) $3,550,000,000 for guaranteed loans, of which not less than $837,000,000 shall be for guarantees of farm ownership loans.

(5) For fiscal year 1995—

(A) $1,192,000,000 for insured loans, of which not less than $97,000,000 shall be for farm ownership loans; and

(B) $3,693,000,000 for guaranteed loans, of which not less than $871,000,000 shall be for guarantees of farm ownership loans.

(c) TRANSFER OF FUNDS FROM INSURED TO GUARANTEED LOANS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, for each of fiscal years 1991 through 1995, the Secretary shall—

(1) reduce the amounts otherwise made available for insured loans made from the Agricultural Credit Insurance Fund by—

(A) $432,000,000 for fiscal year 1991;

(B) $564,000,000 for fiscal year 1992;

(C) $710,000,000 for fiscal year 1993;

(D) $809,000,000 for fiscal year 1994; and

(E) $857,000,000 for fiscal year 1995; and

(2) use the funds made available from the reduction made in paragraph (1) in the available amount of insured loans in each of the fiscal years to guarantee loans made from the Fund.

(c) MANDATORY LEVELS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall make or insure loans at the levels authorized by this section for each of fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

SEC. 1203. APHIS INSPECTION USER FEE ON INTERNATIONAL PASSENGERS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may prescribe and collect fees to cover the cost of providing agricultural quarantine and inspection services in connection with the arrival at a port in the customs territory of the United States, or the preclearance or preinspection at a site outside the customs territory of the United States, of an international passenger.

(b) TREASURY.—Any person who collects a fee under this section shall remit the fee to the Treasury of the United States prior to the date that is 31 days after the close of the calendar quarter in which the fee is collected.

(c) AGRICULTURAL QUARANTINE INSPECTION USER FEE ACCOUNT.—

(1) ESTABLISHMENT.—There is established in the Treasury of the United States a no-year fund, to be known as the "Agricultural Quarantine Inspection User Fee Account" (hereafter in this section referred to as the "Account"), for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture for quarantine or inspection services under this section.

(2) AMOUNTS IN ACCOUNT.—

(A) DEPOSITS.—All fees collected under this subsection shall be deposited in the Account.

(B) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated amounts in the Fund for use by the Secretary of Agriculture for quarantine or inspection services.

(d) ADJUSTMENT IN FEE AMOUNTS.—The Secretary shall adjust the amount of the fees to be assessed under this section to reflect the cost to the Secretary in—

(1) administering this section;

(2) carrying out the activities at ports in the customs territory of the United States and preclearance and preinspection sites outside the customs territory of the United States in connection with the provision of agricultural quarantine inspection services; and

(3) maintaining a reasonable balance in the Account.

SEC. 1204. MARKET PROMOTION PROGRAM.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Commodity Credit Corporation shall not make available assistance to carry out the market promotion program established under section 202 of the Agricultural Trade Act of 1978 (as amended by section 1221(a) of S. 2830 (as passed by the House of Representatives on August 3, 1990)) at a level in excess of $200,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1995.

SEC. 1205. INTEGRATED FARM MANAGEMENT PROGRAM OPTION.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall only make such fair and equitable adjustments as the Secretary determines are appropriate in acreage limitation or set-aside requirements applicable to producers participating in the integrated farm management program option established under section 1611 of S. 2830 (as passed by the House of Representatives on August 3, 1990).

SEC. 1206. OTHER RURAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS.

(a) PROHIBITION ON IMPLEMENTATION.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary shall not expend any funds to implement the provisions of title XXV of S. 2830 (as passed by the House of Representatives on August 3, 1990).

(b) APPROPRIATIONS.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, titles XIX, XX, XXI, XXII, XXIII, XXIV, XXVI, XXVII, and XXVIII of S. 2830 (as passed by the House of Representatives on August 3, 1990), and the amendments made by such titles, shall be carried out only as provided in advance in appropriations Acts.

Subtitle C—Food Stamp and Related Provisions

SEC. 1301. FOOD STAMP PROGRAM.

(a) ALLOCATION FOR JOB TRAINING PROGRAM.—Effective October 1, 1990, paragraph (1) of section 16(h) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (7 U.S.C. 2025(h)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) The Secretary shall allocate among the State agencies in each fiscal year, from funds appropriated for such fiscal year under section 18(a)(1), the amount of $75,000,000 for each of the fiscal years 1991 through 1995 to carry out the employment and training program under section 6(d)(4), except as provided in paragraph (3), during the fiscal year.".

Subtitle D—Agriculture Committee Oversight of Credit

SEC. 1401. CREDIT ACTIVITIES OF GOVERNMENT AGENCIES AND INSTRUMENTALITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any provision of this Act and any amendment made by this Act to chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, or any other provision of law, that would have the effect of restricting the authority of any corporation owned in whole or in part by the Federal Government (such as the Commodity Credit Corporation, the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation, or the Farm Credit System Assistance Board, or any privately owned Government-sponsored entity, such as a Farm Credit Bank, the Federal Bank for Cooperatives, or the Federal Agricultural Mortgage Corporation) from borrowing from or issuing obligations to any person other than the Secretary of the Treasury or guaranteeing any obligation issued by any person shall not take effect.

(b) CERTAIN ACTION PROHIBITED.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act to any other provision of law, no officer or employee of the United States may take any action that would have the effect of implementing any provision of, or any amendment made by, this Act that is described in subsection (a).

(c) PENALTY.—Any person violating this section shall, on conviction, be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or to imprisonment for not more than 1 year, or both, and (if an officer or employee of the Federal Government) shall be removed from office.

SEC. 1402. REPORT ON FARM CREDIT AND THE ISSUANCE OF RELATED NOTES AND THE REDEMPTION THEREOF.

(a) REPORT REQUIRED.—In order to assist the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives in its oversight of, and legislative activities with respect to, farm credit and the issuance of related notes and the redemption thereof, and to reduce the costs associated with credit activities and the issuance and redemption of notes, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit an annual report to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives on the credit activities of the Secretary and the policies of the Secretary with respect to the issuance and redemption of notes.

(b) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—The annual report required to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury under subsection (a) shall—

(1) describe the policies with respect to the credit activities of the Department of the Treasury and their effect on availability and affordability of farm credit;

(2) describe the policies of the Secretary and the Department with respect to the issuance and redemption of notes and the effect of such policies on the availability, and affordability and delivery of farm credit;

(3) contain a report on the amount of the costs, as determined by the Secretary, of such credit activities and the issuance and redemption of notes;

(4) identify actions taken by the Secretary to reduce costs associated with such credit activities and the issuance and redemption of notes during the period covered by such report with special emphasis on the effect of such actions on the availability and affordability of farm credit; and

(5) any recommendations for legislative action which would reduce the costs associated with the credit activities of the Department of the Treasury and the issuance and redemption of notes with special emphasis as they relate to the availability, affordability, and delivery of farm credit.

(c) ANALYSIS OF EFFECT ON PRIVATE CREDIT ACTIVITIES.—The annual report required to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury under subsection (a) shall contain an analysis of the effect of—

(1) government credit activities; and

(2) government policies with respect to the issuance and redemption of notes, on private farm credit activities.

(d) METHODOLOGY FOR REPORTING ON DETERMINATIONS OF COST.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In determining the cost of, and in identifying methods for reducing the cost of, credit activities and the issuance and redemption of notes and their effect on farm credit, the Secretary of the Treasury shall quantify the cost associated with each type of credit activity and note.

(2) FACTORS TO BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—In quantifying the costs involved with each type of credit activity and note pursuant to paragraph (1), the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine—

(A) the volume of each type of credit activity and note; and

(B) the costs involved with each type of credit activity and the issuance and redemption of each type of note with respect to any relevant factor, including—

(i) credit cost;

(ii) interest cost;

(iii) management and operational costs; and

(iv) expenses incurred in connection with the issuance and redemption of notes.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) CREDIT ACTIVITY.—The term "credit activity" includes any borrowing or lending activity and any extension of credit by or to any person or governmental entity, including the issuance of notes in connection with such activity.

(2) NOTE.—The term "note" includes any obligation, including any bill, bond, or other instrument, issued in connection with any credit activity.

SEC. 1403. EFFECT OF CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT POLICY ON FARM CREDIT, AND AGRICULTURE.

(a) REPORTS REQUIRED.—The Comptroller General of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury shall each submit an annual report to the Committee on Agriculture of the United States House of Representatives on the effect of changes in Federal tax and revenue laws on—

(1) the cost and availability of farm credit;

(2) agriculture generally;

(3) agricultural production and marketing and stabilization of prices of agricultural products and commodities;

(4) the financial condition of banks extending farm credit;

(5) the animal and dairy industries;

(6) the forestry industry; and

(7) rural electrification and rural development.

(b) RECOMMENDATION.—Each report required under subsection (a) shall also contain the recommendations of the Comptroller General and the Secretary of the Treasury or changes in law or government policy to reduce Federal spending with special emphasis on potential savings that may be achieved in the operation and administration of the Department of the Treasury in order to enhance the activities described in subsection (a) (1), (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), and (7), and address the effect of the changes in tax and revenue laws of the subjects described in subsection (a).

(c) EFFECT OF CHANGES IN TAX LAWS ON CREDIT FACILITIES AND ACTIVITIES.—The first reports required under subsection (a) shall contain an analysis of the effect of changes in tax law during the period 1980 to 1990 and recommendations for changes in law or government policy to address the effect of the changes in tax and revenue laws during the period from 1980 to 1990 on the subjects described in subsection (a) and each subsequent report shall analyze the effect of changes in tax and revenue law during the immediately preceding year and contain recommendations to respond to changes in tax and revenue law during the immediately preceding year.

(d) TIMING OF REPORTS.—The first reports by the Comptroller General and the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to subsection (a) shall be submitted no later than July 1, 1991, and each subsequent report shall be submitted no later than February 1 of each subsequent year.

Subtitle B—FHA Mortgage Insurance

SEC. 2101. INCREASE IN MORTGAGE LIMIT.

Section 203(b)(2) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709(b)(2)) is amended by striking "150 percent (185 percent until October 31, 1990) of the dollar amount specified" and inserting the following: "185 percent of the dollar amount specified".

SEC. 2102. MORTGAGOR EQUITY.

Section 203(b)(2) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709(b)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following new undesignated paragraph:

"Notwithstanding any other provision of this paragraph, a mortgage may not involve a principal obligation (including such initial service charges, appraisal, inspection, and other fees as the Secretary shall approve) in excess of 98.75 percent of the appraised value of the property (97.75 percent, in the case of a mortgage with an appraised value in excess of $50,000), plus the amount of the mortgage insurance premium paid at the time the mortgage is insured. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the term 'appraised value' means the amount set forth in the written statement required under section 226, or a similar amount determined by the Secretary if section 226 does not apply.".

SEC. 2103. MORTGAGE INSURANCE PREMIUMS.

(a) PREMIUMS.—Section 203(c) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709(c)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" after "(c)";

(2) by striking the last sentence; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, each mortgage secured by a 1- to 4-family dwelling and insured on or after October 1, 1994, shall be subject to the following requirements:

"(A) The Secretary shall establish and collect, at the time of insurance, a single premium payment in an amount equal to 2.25 percent of the amount of the original insured principal obligation of the mortgage. Upon payment in full of the principal obligation of a mortgage prior to the maturity date of the mortgage, the Secretary shall refund all of the unearned premium charges paid on the mortgage pursuant to this subparagraph.

"(B) In addition to the premium under subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall establish and collect annual premium payments in an amount equal to 0.50 percent of the remaining insured principal balance for the following periods:

"(i) For any mortgage involving an original principal obligation that is less than 90 percent of the appraised value of the property (as of the date the mortgage is accepted for insurance), for the first 11 years of the mortgage term.

"(ii) For any mortgage involving an original principal obligation that is greater than or equal to 90 percent of such value, for the first 30 years of the mortgage term; except that notwithstanding the matter preceding clause (i), for any mortgage involving an original principal obligation that is greater than 95 percent of such value, the annual premium collected during the 30-year period under this clause shall be in an amount equal to 0.55 percent of the remaining insured principal balance.".

(b) TRANSITION PROVISIONS.—Notwithstanding section 203(c) of the National Housing Act (as amended by subsection (a)), mortgage insurance premiums on mortgages insured under section 203(b) of such Act during fiscal years 1991 through 1994 shall be subject to the following requirements:

(1) 1991 AND 1992.—For mortgages insured during fiscal years 1991 and 1992 (but after the date of the effectiveness of regulations issued under subsection (c)), the Secretary shall establish and collect the following premiums:

(A) UP-FRONT.—At the time of insurance, a single premium payment in an amount equal to 3.80 percent of the amount of the original insured principal obligation of the mortgage.

(B) ANNUAL.—In addition to the premium under subparagraph (A), annual premium payments in an amount equal to 0.50 percent of the remaining insured principal balance, for any mortgage involving an original principal obligation that is—

(i) less than 90 percent of the appraised value of the property (as of the date the mortgage is accepted for insurance), for the first 5 years of the mortgage term;

(ii) greater than or equal to 90 percent of such value but equal to or less than 95 percent of such value, for the first 8 years of the mortgage term; and

(iii) greater than 95 percent of such value, for the first 10 years of the mortgage term.

(2) 1993 AND 1994.—For mortgages insured during fiscal years 1993 and 1994, the Secretary shall establish and collect the following premiums:

(A) UP-FRONT.—At the time of insurance, a single premium payment in an amount equal to 3.00 percent of the amount of the original insured principal obligation of the mortgage.

(B) ANNUAL.—In addition to the premium under subparagraph (A), annual premium payments in an amount equal to 0.50 percent of the remaining insured principal balance, for any mortgage involving an original principal obligation that is—

(i) less than 90 percent of the appraised value of the property (as of the date the mortgage is accepted for insurance), for the first 7 years of the mortgage term;

(ii) greater than or equal to 90 percent of such value but equal to or less than 95 percent of such value, for the first 12 years of the mortgage term; and

(iii) greater than 95 percent of such value, for the first 30 years of the mortgage term.

(3) REFUNDS.—With respect to any mortgage subject to premiums under this subsection, the Secretary shall refund all of the unearned premium charges paid on a mortgage pursuant to paragraph (1)(A) or (2)(A) upon payment in full of the principal obligation of the mortgage prior to the maturity date.

(c) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary shall issue regulations to carry out this section and the amendments made by this section not later than the expiration of the 90-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 2104. MUTUAL MORTGAGE INSURANCE FUND DISTRIBUTIONS.

Section 205 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1711) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e) In determining whether there is a surplus for distribution to mortgagors under this section, the Secretary shall take into account the actuarial status of the entire Fund.".

SEC. 2105. ACTUARIAL SOUNDNESS OF MUTUAL MORTGAGE INSURANCE FUND.

Section 205 of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1711), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(f)(1) The Secretary shall ensure that the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund attains a capital ratio of not less than 1.25 percent within 24 months after the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(2) The Secretary shall ensure that the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund attains a capital ratio of not less than 2.0 percent within 10 years after the date of the enactment of this subsection, and shall ensure that the Fund maintains at least such capital ratio at all times thereafter.

"(3) Upon the expiration of the 24-month period beginning on the date of the enactment of this subsection, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report describing the actions the Secretary will take to ensure that the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund attains the capital ratio required under paragraph (2).

"(4) For purposes of this subsection:

"(A) The term 'capital' means the economic net worth of the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund, as determined by the Secretary under the annual audit required under section 538.

"(B) The term 'capital ratio' means the ratio of capital to unamortized insurance-in-force.

"(C) The term 'economic net worth' means the current cash available to the Fund, plus the net present value of all future cash inflows and outflows expected to result from the outstanding mortgages in the Fund.

"(D) The term 'unamortized insurance-in-force' means the remaining obligation on outstanding mortgages which are obligations of the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund, as estimated by the Secretary.

"(g) The Secretary shall provide for an independent actuarial study of the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund to be conducted annually and shall report annually to the Congress regarding the financial status of the Fund.

"(h)(1) If, pursuant to the independent annual actuarial study of the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund required under subsection (g), the Secretary determines that the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund is not meeting the operational goals under paragraph (2), the Secretary may not issue distributions, and may, by regulation, propose and implement any adjustments to the insurance premiums under section 203(c) or section 2103(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1990, or any other program requirements established by the Secretary necessary to achieve such goals. Upon determining that a premium or other change is appropriate under the preceding sentence, the Secretary shall immediately notify Congress of the proposed change and the reasons for the change. Any such premium change shall not take effect before the expiration of the 90-day period beginning upon such notification.

"(2) The operational goals referred to in paragraph (1) shall be—

"(A) maintaining an adequate capital ratio;

"(B) meeting the needs of homebuyers with low downpayments and first-time homebuyers by providing access to mortgage credit; and

"(C) minimizing the risk to the Fund and to homeowners from homeowner default.".

SEC. 2106. PERIODIC MORTGAGE INSURANCE SAFETY AND SOUNDNESS PREMIUM.

Section 203(c) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1709(c)), as amended by the preceding provisions of this Act, is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary may require payment on all mortgages that are obligations of the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund of an additional premium charge on a periodic basis as determined by the Secretary to be consistent with sound actuarial practice. Such determination shall be in accordance with the findings of the annual actuarial study of the Mutual Mortgage Insurance Fund required under section 205(g). The additional premium charge for each mortgage may not exceed an amount amount equal to 0.50 percent per year of the remaining insured principal balance of the mortgage.".

SEC. 2107. HOME EQUITY CONVERSION MORTGAGE INSURANCE DEMONSTRATION.

(a) TERMINATION DATE.—The first sentence of section 225(g) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1715z-20(g)) is amended by striking "September 30, 1991" and inserting "September 30, 1995".

(b) NUMBER OF MORTGAGES INSURED.—Section 255(g) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1715z-20(g)) is further amended by striking the second sentence and inserting the following new sentence: "The total number of mortgages insured under this section may not exceed 25,000.".

Subtitle C—Auction of Federally Insured Mortgages

SEC. 2201. AUCTION ALTERNATIVE TO ASSIGNMENT OF MORTGAGES.

(a) AUCTION.—Section 221(g)(4) of the National Housing Act (12 U.S.C. 1715*l*(g)(4)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C)(i) In lieu of accepting assignment of the original credit instrument and the mortgage securing the credit instrument under subparagraph (A) in exchange for receipt of debentures, the Secretary may provide for the sale under this subparagraph of the beneficial interests in the mortgage loan through auction and sale of the mortgage loan, participation certificates, or other mortgage-backed obligations in a form acceptable to the Secretary, unless the mortgagee can demonstrate to the satisfaction of the Secretary that such auction and sale will be less economically advantageous to the mortgagee than the receipt of debentures. The Secretary shall provide that any beneficial interest auctioned and sold under this subparagraph are sold at a price, to be paid to the mortgagee, of par plus accrued interest to the date of sale. The sale price shall also include the right to a subsidy payment described in clause (viii). The Secretary may, when appropriate, adjust the price paid to the mortgagee to equal the net present value of the debentures that the mortgagee would have received pursuant to assignment under subparagraph (A).

"(ii) The Government National Mortgage Association (in this subparagraph referred to as the 'Association') shall conduct public auctions under this subparagraph on behalf of the Secretary to determine the lowest interest rate necessary to carry out a sale of the beneficial interests in the original credit instrument and mortgage securing the credit instrument.

"(iii) Any mortgagee who elects to assign a mortgage shall provide to the Association and persons bidding at an auction under this subparagraph a description of the characteristics of the original credit instrument and the mortgage securing the credit instrument, which shall include statements of the principal mortgage balance, the original stated interest rate, any service fees, the real estate and tenant characteristics of the property secured by the mortgage, the level and duration of any applicable Federal subsidies, the status of the property with respect to eligibility to prepay the mortgage under to the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987, whether the owner has filed a notice of intent to prepay the mortgage under such Act or any other notice required under such Act, any incentives provided under such Act in lieu of prepayment, and any other information determined by the Association to be appropriate.

"(iv) Upon receipt of the information under clause (iii) regarding a mortgage, the Association shall promptly provide notice of any auction with respect to the mortgage ca and publish such information in advance of the auction. To promote administrative efficiency, the Association may conduct the auction at any time during the 6-month period beginning upon notice by the mortgagee of election to assign the mortgage. Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the Association may not conduct any auction before the expiration of the 2-month period beginning upon notice and publication under this clause.

"(v) In any auction under this subparagraph, the Association shall accept the lowest interest rate bid for purchase by any bidder determined by the Association to be acceptable. The Association shall cause the bid to be published in the Federal Register. Settlement for the sale of the credit instrument and the mortgage securing the credit instrument shall occur not later than 30 days (not including Saturdays, Sundays, and legal public holidays) after the date of the selection of the accepted bid.

"(vi) If no bids are received or the bids that are received are not accepted by the Association, the mortgagee shall retain all rights under this paragraph to assign the mortgage loan to the Secretary. The Association may determine that a bid is unacceptable if the Association determines that the bid is at a price that would result in costs to the Federal Government exceeding the costs incurred if the mortgage were to be assigned to the Secretary under subparagraph (A).

"(vii) The holder of a mortgage, representative of the holder of a mortgage, and entities affiliated with the holder of the mortgage may not participate in the auction under this subparagraph unless the holder, representative, or affiliate is also providing secondary financing for the project secured by the mortgage for the purpose of (I) resolving the physical and financial needs of the project, or (II) enabling a purchaser to acquire a project that is eligible low income housing (as such term is defined under the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987) and preserve its use as housing affordable for low- and moderate-income families.

"(viii) In carrying out an auction under this subparagraph, the Secretary shall agree to provide a monthly interest subsidy payment from the General Insurance Fund to the holder of the original credit instrument and the mortgage securing the credit instrument (and any assigns of the holder who are approved by the Secretary). The subsidy payment shall be paid on the first day of each month in an amount equal to the difference between the stated interest due on the mortgage loan (less any servicing fee) and the lowest interest rate necessary to provide for sale of the participation certificate for the remaining unpaid principal balance plus accrued interest on the mortgage loan. Each interest subsidy payment shall be treated by the holder of the mortgage as interest paid on the mortgage. The interest subsidy payment shall be provided until the earlier of—

"(I) the maturity date of the loan;

"(II) prepayment of the mortgage loan; or

"(III) default and full payment of insurance benefits on the mortgage loan by the Secretary.

"(ix) The Secretary, or the Association on behalf of the Secretary, may require that the loans auctioned under this subparagraph be sold together with servicing rights as whole loans if the Secretary determines that the inclusion of servicing rights will further the financial interests of the Federal Government. To further maximize the interest of the Federal Government, the Secretary may also acquire the servicing rights and hold a separate auction of the rights.

"(x) This subparagraph may not be construed to alter, limit, or impair any low income use restrictions applicable to any project under the original regulatory agreement for the project, any revised agreement entered into pursuant to the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987, or any other agreement for the provision of Federal assistance to the housing or its tenants. This subparagraph may not be construed to alter the affordability and low income use restrictions agreed to by owners of projects insured with mortgages under this Act.

"(xi) The provisions of this subparagraph shall not apply after September 30, 1995.".

(b) IMPLEMENTATION.—The Secretary shall implement the provisions under the amendment made by subsection (a) not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act. The provisions shall not be subject to prior issuance of regulations and notice in the Federal Register. The Secretary shall issue regulations to carry out the provisions under the amendment not later than 6 months of the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) REPORT.—The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall submit a report to the Congress, not later than the expiration of the 1-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, regarding any actions taken under section 221(g)(4)(C) of the National Housing Act (as amended by this section). The report shall include information regarding the number of mortgages auctioned and sold and their value, the amount of subsidies committed under this program, the number of mortgages transferred to preferred mortgagees, the ability of the Secretary to coordinate this program with the incentives provided under the Emergency Low Income Housing Preservation Act of 1987, and the costs and benefits derived from this program for the Federal Government.

Subtitle E—Banking Committee Oversight of Credit

SEC. 2401. CREDIT ACTIVITIES OF GOVERNMENT AGENCIES AND INSTRUMENTALITY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Any provision of this Act and any amendment made by this Act to chapter 31 of title 31, United States Code, or any other provision of law, which would have the effect of restricting the authority of any corporation owned in whole or in part by the Federal Government, such as Amtrak, the Tennessee Valley Authority or the Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation, or any privately owned Government-sponsored entity, such as a national bank, Federal savings association, or Federal credit union, from borrowing from or issuing obligations to any person other than the Secretary of the Treasury or guaranteeing any obligation issued by any person shall not take effect.

(b) CERTAIN ACTIONS PROHIBITED.—Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any amendment made by this Act to any other provision of law, no officer or employee of the United States may take any action which would have the effect of implementing any provision of, or any amendment made by, this Act which is described in subsection (a).

(c) VIOLATION TREATED AS VIOLATION OF ANTIDEFICIENCY ACT.—Any violation of subsection (b) shall be treated as a violation of section 1341(a) of title 31, United States Code.

SEC. 2402. REPORT ON CREDIT AND THE ISSUANCE OF NOTES AND THE REDEMPTION THEREOF.

(a) REPORT REQUIRED.—In order to assist the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives in its oversight of, and legislative activities with respect to, money and credit and the issuance of notes and the redemption thereof, and to reduce the costs associated with credit activities and the issuance and redemption of notes, the Secretary of the Treasury shall submit an annual report to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the House of Representatives on the credit activities of the Secretary and the policies of the Secretary with respect to the issuance and redemption of notes.

(b) CONTENTS OF REPORT.—The annual report required to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury under subsection (a) shall—

(1) describe the policies with respect to the credit activities of the Department of the Treasury;

(2) describe the policies of the Secretary and the Department with respect to the issuance and redemption of notes;

(3) contain a report on the amount of the costs, as determined by the Secretary, of such credit activities and the issuance and redemption of notes;

(4) identify actions taken by the Secretary to reduce costs associated with such credit activities and the issuance and redemption of notes during the period covered by such report; and

(5) any recommendations for legislative action which would reduce the costs associated with the credit activities of the Department of the Treasury and the issuance and redemption of notes.

(c) ANALYSIS OF EFFECT ON PRIVATE CREDIT ACTIVITIES.—The annual report required to be made by the Secretary of the Treasury under subsection (a) shall contain an analysis of the effect of—

(1) government credit activities; and

(2) government policies with respect to the issuance and redemption of notes, on private credit activities.

(d) METHODOLOGY FOR REPORTING ON DETERMINATION OF COSTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—In determining the cost of, and in identifying methods for reducing the cost of, credit activities and the issuance and redemption of notes, the Secretary of the Treasury shall quantify the cost associated with each type of credit activity and note.

(2) FACTORS TO BE TAKEN INTO ACCOUNT.—In quantifying the costs involved with each type of credit activity and note pursuant to paragraph (1), the Secretary of the Treasury shall determine—

(A) the volume of each type of credit activity and note; and

(B) the costs involved with each type of credit activity and the issuance and redemption of each type of note with respect to any relevant factor, including—

(i) credit cost;

(ii) interest cost;

(iii) management and operational costs; and

(iv) expenses incurred in connection with the issuance and redemption of notes.

(e) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section—

(1) CREDIT ACTIVITY.—The term "credit activity" includes any borrowing or lending activity and any extension of credit by or to any person or governmental entity, including the issuance of notes in connection with any such activity.

(2) NOTE.—The term "note" includes any obligation, including any bill, bond, or other instrument, issued in connection with any credit activity.

SEC. 2403. EFFECT OF CHANGES IN GOVERNMENT POLICY ON CREDIT, HOUSING, URBAN DEVELOPMENT, BANKS AND THE BANKING INDUSTRY, AND MONETARY POLICY.

(a) REPORTS REQUIRED.—The Comptroller General of the United States and the Secretary of the Treasury shall each submit an annual report to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs of the United States House of Representatives on the effect of changes in Federal tax and revenue laws on—

(1) the cost and availability of credit;

(2) the cost and availability of public and private housing;

(3) the progress of urban development;

(4) the financial condition of banks and the banking industry; and

(5) the conduct of Federal monetary policy and the operation of the Federal Reserve System.

(b) RECOMMENDATION.—Each report required under subsection (a) shall also contain the recommendations of the Comptroller General and the Secretary of the Treasury for changes in law or government policy to reduce Federal spending and address the effect of the changes in tax and revenue laws on the subjects described in subsection (a).

(c) EFFECT OF CHANGES IN TAX LAWS ON CREDIT FACILITIES AND ACTIVITIES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The first reports required under subsection (a) shall contain an analysis of the effect of changes in tax law during the period 1980 to 1990 and recommendations for changes in law or government policy to address the effect of the changes in tax and revenue laws during the period from 1980 to 1990 on the subjects described in subsection (a) and each subsequent report shall analyze the effect of changes in tax and revenue law during the immediately preceding year and contain recommendations to respond to changes in tax and revenue law during the immediately preceding year.

(2) ANALYSIS OF EFFECT OF 1986 AND 1981 TAX ACTS ON SAVINGS AND LOAN CRISIS.—In addition to the requirement of paragraph (1) relating to the first reports required under subsection (a), such reports shall contain a detailed analysis of the extent to which the abrupt changes in the tax consequences of various kinds of investment activities as a result of the enactment of the Tax Reform Act of 1986 and the Economic Recovery Tax Act of 1981, and the effect such changes had on real property values and institutions which provide credit with respect to such investment activities and property, contributed to the rapid escalation of the crisis in the savings and loan industry in 1987 and 1988.

(d) TIMING OF REPORTS.—The first reports by the Comptroller General and the Secretary of the Treasury pursuant to subsection (a) shall be submitted no later than July 1, 1991, and each subsequent report shall be submitted no later than February 1 of each subsequent year.

TITLE III—EDUCATION AND LABOR COMMITTEE

Subtitle A—Student Loan Program Savings

SEC. 3001. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Student Loan Default Prevention Initiative Act of 1990".

SEC. 3002. PRECLAIMS ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Section 428(f)(1)(A) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1078(f)(1)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking clause (iii); and

(2) by redesignating clauses (iv) and (v) as clauses (iii) and (iv), respectively.

SEC. 3003. INITIAL DISBURSEMENT AND ENDORSEMENT REQUIREMENTS.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Section 428G(b)(1) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1078-7(b)(1)) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) FIRST YEAR STUDENTS.—The first installment of the proceeds of any loan made, insured, or guaranteed under this part that is made to a student borrower who is entering the first year of program of postsecondary education, and who has not previously obtained a loan under this part, shall not (regardless of the amount of such loan or the duration of the period of enrollment) be presented by the institution to the student for endorsement until 30 days after the borrower begins a course of study, but may be delivered to the eligible institution prior to the end of that 30-day period.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by this section shall be effective for loans made on or after the date of enactment of this Act to cover the cost of instruction for periods of enrollment beginning on or after January 1, 1991.

SEC. 3004. INELIGIBILITY BASED ON HIGH DEFAULT RATES AND BANKRUPTCY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 435(a) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1088(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) INELIGIBILITY BASED ON HIGH DEFAULT RATES.—(A) An institution whose cohort default rate is equal to or greater than the threshold percentage specified in subparagraph (B) for each of the three most recent fiscal years for which data are available shall not be an eligible institution under this part unless, within 30 days of receiving notification from the Secretary of the loss of eligibility under this paragraph, the institution appeals the loss of its eligibility to the Secretary and—

"(i) the institution demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the Secretary's calculation of its cohort default rate is not accurate, and that recalculation would reduce its cohort default rate for any of the three fiscal years below the threshold percentage specified in subparagraph (B); or

"(ii) there are, in the judgment of the Secretary, exceptional mitigating circumstances that would make the application of this paragraph inequitable.

During the pendency of an appeal, the Secretary shall suspend the eligibility of the institution in accordance with his authority to take emergency actions under section 487(c)(1)(E).

"(B) For purposes of determinations under subparagraph (A) for academic year 1991-1992 and any succeeding academic year, the threshold percentage is 35 percent.

"(C) This paragraph shall not apply to any institution that is—

"(i) a part B institution within the meaning of section 322(2) of this Act;

"(ii) a tribally controlled community college within the meaning of section 2(a)(4) of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978; or

"(iii) a Navajo Community College under the Navajo Community College Act.".

"(4) INELIGIBILITY BASED ON BANKRUPTCY.—An institution shall cease to be an eligible institution under this part if that institution commences a voluntary case by filing a petition with a bankruptcy court under title 11, United States Code.".

(b) REFUSAL TO PROVIDE STATEMENT TO LENDER.—Section 428(a)(2)(F) of such Act

(20 U.S.C. 1078(a)(2)(F)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof the following: ", except in individual cases where the institution determines that the portion of the student's expenses to be covered by the loan can be met more appropriately, either by the institution or directly by the student, from other sources".

(c) EXTENSION OF DEFAULT RATE LIMITATIONS ON SLS LOANS.—Section 2003(a)(3) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 is amended by striking out "October 1, 1991" and inserting "October 1, 1996".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall be effective July 1, 1991.

SEC. 3005. SPECIAL ALLOWANCES.

(a) REDUCTION OF RATE.—Section 438(b)(2)(A)(iii) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1087-1(b)(2)(A)(iii)) is amended by striking "3.25 percent" and inserting "3.0 percent".

(b) ELIMINATION OF FLOOR ON ALLOWANCE FOR LOANS FROM TAX EXEMPT FUNDS.—Section 438(b)(2)(B) of such Act (20 U.S.C. 1087-1(b)(2)(B)) is amended—

(1) by striking division (ii); and

(2) by redesignating division (iii) as division (ii).

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to loans made on or after the date of enactment of this Act to cover periods of instruction beginning on or after November 1, 1990.

SEC. 3006. ABILITY TO BENEFIT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 484(d) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1091(d)) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) ABILITY TO BENEFIT.—In order for a student who is admitted on the basis of ability to benefit from the education or training offered to be eligible for any grant, loan, or work assistance under this title, the student shall, prior to enrollment, pass an independently administered examination approved by the Secretary.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 481(b) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1088(b)) is amended in the fourth sentence by inserting ", except in accordance with section 484(d) of this Act," after "shall not".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to any grant, loan, or work assistance to cover the cost of instruction for periods of enrollment beginning on or after January 1, 1991.

SEC. 3007. MAXIMUM SLS LOAN AMOUNTS.

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE EXTENSION.—Section 2003(b)(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 is amended by striking "1991" and inserting "1996".

(b) PERIOD FOR DETERMINATION OF MAXIMUM LOAN AMOUNTS.—Section 428A(b)(1) of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1078-1(b)) is amended by striking "9 consecutive" and inserting "7 consecutive".

SEC. 3008. COLLEGE FACILITIES.

(a) COLLEGE CONSTRUCTION LOAN INSURANCE ASSOCIATION REPORT.—The College Construction Loan Insurance Association shall prepare and submit to the Committee on Education and Labor of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate a plan for expanding the Association's operations and activities to provide direct insurance to institutions that do not have investment-grade rated debt instruments. Such plan shall also include an analysis of the impact of such expansion on the Association's ability to do business and recommendations as to the level of Federal investment that would be necessary to assist the Association with such an expansion. Such plan shall be submitted not later than August 1, 1991.

(b) ADDITIONAL AUTHORITY FOR HOUSING AND EDUCATION FACILITIES LOANS.—Section 761 of the Higher Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 1132g) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) ADDITIONAL AUTHORIZATION.—

"(1) In addition to the amounts authorized by subsection (f), there are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary such sums as may be necessary to provide loans, under terms and conditions consistent with this part, to private, 4-year, nonprofit institutions of higher education that serve primarily low-income and minority students and that have been in existence for at least 80 years.

"(2) Loans from funds appropriated under this subsection may be used—

"(A) to construct, reconstruct, or renovate any classroom facility, library, laboratory facility, dormitory (including dining facilities) or other facility customarily used by institutions of higher education for instructional or research purposes or for housing students, faculty and staff;

"(B) to purchase or lease instructional equipment, research instrumentation and any capital equipment or fixture related to facilities described in subparagraph (A);

"(C) to finance any other facility, equipment, or fixture the construction, acquisition, or renovation of which is essential to the maintaining of accreditation of the member institution by a nationally recognized accrediting agency or association; and

"(D) to purchase any real property or interest therein underlying facilities described in subparagraph (A) or (C).

"(3) Section 763(a) shall not apply to funds provided in the form of loans from amounts appropriated under this subsection.".

SEC. 3009. SUNSET PROVISION.

The amendments made by this subtitle shall cease to be effective on October 1, 1996.

Subtitle B—Amendments Relating to Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974

PART 1—TREATMENT OF REVERSIONS OF QUALIFIED PLAN ASSETS TO EMPLOYERS

SEC. 3101. INCREASE IN REVERSION TAX.

Section 4980(a) (relating to tax on reversion of qualified plan assets to employer) is amended by striking "15 percent" and inserting "20 percent".

SEC. 3102. ADDITIONAL TAX FOR FAILURE TO ESTABLISH REPLACEMENT PLAN OR TO INCREASE BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 4980 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) INCREASE IN TAX FOR FAILURE TO ESTABLISH REPLACEMENT PLAN OR INCREASE BENEFITS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (a) shall be applied by substituting '50 percent' for '20 percent' with respect to any employer reversion from a qualified plan unless—

"(A) the employer establishes or maintains a qualified replacement plan, or

"(B) the plan provides benefit increases meeting the requirements of paragraph (3).

"(2) QUALIFIED REPLACEMENT PLAN.—For purposes of this subsection, the term 'qualified replacement plan' means a qualified plan established or maintained by the employer in connection with a qualified plan termination (hereinafter referred to as the 'replacement plan') with respect to which the following requirements are met:

"(A) PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Substantially all of the active participants in the terminated plan who remain as employees of the employer after the termination are active participants in the replacement plan.

"(B) ASSET TRANSFER REQUIREMENT.—

"(i) 30 PERCENT CUSHION.—A direct transfer from the terminated plan to the replacement plan is made before any employer reversion, and the transfer is in an amount equal to the excess (if any) of—

"(I) 30 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, over

"(II) the amount determined under clause (ii).

"(ii) REDUCTION FOR INCREASE IN BENEFITS.—The amount determined under this clause is an amount equal to the present value of the aggregate increases in the nonforfeitable accrued benefits under the terminated plan of any participants (including nonactive participants) pursuant to a plan amendment which—

"(I) is adopted during the 60-day period ending on the date of termination of the qualified plan, and

"(II) takes effect immediately on the termination date.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF AMOUNT TRANSFERRED.—In the case of the transfer of any amount under clause (i)—

"(I) such amount shall not be includible in the gross income of the employer,

"(II) no deduction shall be allowable with respect to such transfer, and

"(III) such transfer shall not be treated as an employer reversion for purposes of this section.

"(C) ALLOCATION REQUIREMENTS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of any defined contribution plan, the portion of the amount transferred to the replacement plan under subparagraph (B)(i) is—

"(I) allocated under the plan to the accounts of participants in the plan year in which the transfer occurs, or

"(II) credited to a suspense account and allocated from such account to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the 7-plan-year period beginning with the year of the transfer.

"(ii) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 415 LIMITATION.—If, by reason of any limitation under section 415, any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) may not be allocated to a participant before the close of the 7-year period under such clause—

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants by reason of any such limitation, shall be allocated to the participant as provided in section 415.

"(iii) TREATMENT OF INCOME.—Any income on any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) shall be allocated to accounts of participants no less rapidly than ratably over the remainder of the period determined under such clause (after application of clause (ii)).

"(iv) UNALLOCATED AMOUNTS AT TERMINATION.—If any amount credited to a suspense account under clause (i)(II) is not allocated as of the termination date of the plan—

"(I) such amount shall be allocated to the accounts of participants as of such date, except that any amount which may not be allocated by reason of any limitation under section 415 shall be allocated to the accounts of other participants, and

"(II) if any portion of such amount may not be allocated to other participants under subclause (I) by reason of such limitation, such portion shall be treated as an employer reversion to which this section applies.

"(3) PRO RATA BENEFIT INCREASES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if a plan amendment to the terminated plan is adopted in connection with the termination of the plan which provides pro rata increases in the present values of the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of all participants (including nonactive participants) which—

"(i) have an aggregate present value not less than 25 percent of the maximum amount which the employer could receive as an employer reversion without regard to this subsection, and

"(ii) take effect immediately on the termination date.

"(B) PRO RATA INCREASE.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), a pro rata increase is an increase in the present value of the nonforfeitable accrued benefit of each participant (including nonactive participants) in an amount which bears the same ratio to the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) as—

"(i) the present value of such participant's nonforfeitable accrued benefit (determined without regard to this subsection), bears to

"(ii) the aggregate present value of nonforfeitable accrued benefits of the terminated plan (as so determined).

Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the aggregate increases in the present values of the nonforfeitable accrued benefits of nonactive participants shall not exceed 40 percent of the aggregate amount determined under subparagraph (A)(i) by substituting 'equal to' for 'not less then'.

"(4) COORDINATION WITH OTHER PROVISIONS.—

"(A) LIMITATIONS.—A benefit may not be increased under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), and an amount may not be allocated to a participant under paragraph (2)(C), if such increase or allocation would result in a failure to meet any requirement under section 401(a)(4) or 415.

"(B) TREATMENT AS EMPLOYER CONTRIBUTIONS.—Any increase in benefits under paragraph (2)(B)(ii) or (3)(A), or any allocation of any amount (or income allocable thereto) to any account under paragraph (2)(C), shall be treated as an annual benefit or annual addition for purposes of section 415.

"(C) 10-YEAR PARTICIPATION REQUIREMENT.—Except as provided by the Secretary, section 415(b)(5)(D) shall not apply to any increase in benefits by reason of this subsection to the extent that the application of this subparagraph does not discriminate in favor of highly compensated employees (as defined in section 414(q)).

"(5) DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) NONACTIVE PARTICIPANT.—The term 'nonactive participant' means an individual who—

"(i) is a participant in pay status as of the termination date,

"(ii) is a beneficiary who has a nonforfeitable right to an accrued benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, or

"(iii) is a participant not described in clause (i) or (ii)—

"(I) who has a nonforfeitable right to an accrued benefit under the terminated plan as of the termination date, and

"(II) whose service, which was creditable under the terminated plan, terminated during the period beginning 3 years before the termination date and ending with the date on which the final distribution of assets occurs.

"(B) PRESENT VALUE.—Present value shall be determined as of the termination date and on the same basis as liabilities of the plan are determined on termination.

"(C) REALLOCATION OF INCREASE.—Except as provided in paragraph (2)(C), if any benefit increase is reduced by reason of the last sentence of paragraph (3)(A)(ii) or paragraph (4), the amount of such reduction shall be allocated to the remaining participants on the same basis as other increases (and shall be treated as meeting any allocation requirement of this subsection).

"(D) AGGREGATION OF PLANS.—The Secretary may provide that 2 or more plans may be treated as 1 plan for purposes of determining whether there is a qualified replacement plan under paragraph (2).

"(6) SUBSECTION NOT TO APPLY TO EMPLOYER IN BANKRUPTCY.—This subsection shall not apply to an employer who, as of the termination date of the qualified plan, is in bankruptcy liquidation under chapter 7 of title 11 of the United States Code or in similar proceedings under State law."

(b) AMENDMENTS TO EMPLOYEE RETIREMENT INCOME SECURITY ACT.—

(1) FIDUCIARY RESPONSIBILITY.—Section 404 of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1104) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d)(1) If, in connection with the termination of a single-employer plan, an employer elects to establish or maintain a qualified replacement plan, or to increase benefits, as provided under section 4980(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, a fiduciary shall discharge the fiduciary's duties under this title and title IV in accordance with the following requirements:

"(A) In the case of a fiduciary of the terminated plan, any requirement—

"(i) under section 4980(d)(2)(B) of such Code with respect to the transfer of assets from the terminated plan to a qualified replacement plan, and

"(ii) under section 4980(d)(2)(B)(ii) or 4980(d)(3) of such Code with respect to any increase in benefits under the terminated plan.

"(B) In the case of a fiduciary of a qualified replacement plan, any requirement—

"(i) under section 4980(d)(2)(A) of such Code with respect to participation in the qualified replacement plan of active participants in the terminated plan,

"(ii) under section 4980(d)(2)(B) of such Code with respect to the receipt of assets from the terminated plan, and

"(iii) under section 4980(d)(2)(C) of such Code with respect to the allocation of assets to participants of the qualified replacement plan.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) any term used in this subsection which is also used in section 4980(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall have the same meaning as when used in such section, and

"(B) any reference in this subsection to the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 shall be a reference to such Code as in effect on January 1, 1991."

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(A) Section 404(a)(1)(D) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1104(a)(1)(D)) is amended by striking "or title IV" and inserting "and title IV".

(B) Section 4044(d)(1) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1344(d)(1)) is amended by inserting ", section 404(d) of this Act, and section 4980(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on January 1, 1991)" after "paragraph (3)".

(C) Section 3 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1002) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(41) The term 'single-employer plan' means a plan which is not a multiemployer plan.".

SEC. 3103. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subsection (b), the amendments made by this subpart shall apply to reversions occurring after September 30, 1990.

(b) EXCEPTION.—The amendments made by this subpart shall not apply to any reversion after September 30, 1990, if—

(1) in the case of plans subject to title IV of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974, a notice of intent to terminate under such title was provided to participants (or if no participants, to the Pension Benefit Guaranty Corporation) before October 1, 1990, or

(2) in the case of plans subject to title I (and not to title IV) of such Act, a notice of intent to reduce future accruals under section 204(h) of such Act was provided to participants in connection with the termination before October 1, 1990.

PART 2—TRANSFERS TO RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS

SEC. 3111. TRANSFER OF EXCESS PENSION ASSETS TO RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part I of subchapter D of chapter 1 (relating to pension, profit-sharing, and stock bonus plans) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subpart:

"Subpart E—Treatment of Transfers to Retiree Health Accounts

"Sec. 420. Transfers of excess pension assets to retiree health accounts.

"SEC. 420. TRANSFERS OF EXCESS PENSION ASSETS TO RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS.

"(a) GENERAL RULE.—If there is a qualified transfer of any excess pension assets of a defined benefit plan (other than a multiemployer plan) to a health benefits account which is part of such plan—

"(1) a trust which is part of such plan shall not be treated as failing to meet the requirements of subsection (a) or (h) of section 401 solely by reason of such transfer (or any other action authorized under this section),

"(2) no amount shall be includible in the gross income of the employer maintaining the plan solely by reason of such transfer,

"(3) such transfer shall not be treated—

"(A) as an employer reversion for purposes of section 4980, or

"(B) as a prohibited transaction for purposes of section 4975, and

"(4) the limitations of subsection (d) shall apply to such employer.

"(b) QUALIFIED TRANSFER.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified transfer' means a transfer—

"(A) of excess pension assets of a defined benefit plan to a health benefits account which is part of such plan in a taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990,

"(B) which does not contravene any other provision of law, and

"(C) with respect to which the plan meets—

"(i) the use requirements of subsection (c)(1),

"(ii) the vesting requirements of subsection (c)(2), and

"(iii) the minimum benefit requirements of subsection (c)(3).

"(2) ONLY 1 TRANSFER PER YEAR.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—No more than 1 transfer with respect to any plan during a taxable year may be treated as a qualified transfer for purposes of this section.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—A transfer described in paragraph (4) shall not be taken into account for purposes of subparagraph (A).

"(3) LIMITATION ON AMOUNT TRANSFERRED.—The amount of excess pension assets which may be transferred in a qualified transfer shall not exceed the amount which is reasonably estimated to be the amount the employer maintaining the plan will pay (whether directly or through reimbursement) out of such account during the taxable year of the transfer for qualified current retiree health liabilities.

"(4) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Subject to the provisions of subsection (c), a transfer shall be treated as a qualified transfer if such transfer—

"(i) is made after the close of the taxable year preceding the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990, and before the earlier of—

"(I) the due date (including extensions) for the filing of the return of tax for such preceding taxable year, or

"(II) the date such return is filed, and

"(ii) does not exceed the expenditures of the employer for qualified current retiree health liabilities for such preceding taxable year.

"(B) REDUCTION IN DEDUCTION.—The amount of the deductions otherwise allowable under this chapter to an employer for the taxable year preceding the employer's first taxable year beginning after December 31, 1990, shall be reduced by the amount of any qualified transfer to which this paragraph applies.

"(C) COORDINATION WITH REDUCTION RULE.—Subsection (e)(1)(B) shall not apply to a transfer described in subparagraph (A).

"(5) EXPIRATION.—No transfer in any taxable year beginning after December 31, 1995, shall be treated as a qualified transfer.

"(c) REQUIREMENTS OF PLANS TRANSFERRING ASSETS.—

"(1) USE OF TRANSFERRED ASSETS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Any assets transferred to a health benefits account in a qualified transfer (and any income allocable thereto) shall be used only to pay qualified current retiree health liabilities (other than liabilities of key employees not taken into account under subsection (e)(1)(D)) for the taxable year of the transfer (whether directly or through reimbursement).

"(B) AMOUNTS NOT USED TO PAY FOR HEALTH BENEFITS.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—Any assets transferred to a health benefits account in a qualified transfer (and any income allocable thereto) which are not used as provided in subparagraph (A) shall be transferred out of the account to the transferor plan.

"(ii) TAX TREATMENT OF AMOUNTS.—Any amount transferred out of an account under clause (i)—

"(I) shall not be includible in the gross income of the employer for such taxable year, but

"(II) shall be treated as an employer reversion for purposes of section 4980 (without regard to subsection (d) thereof).

"(C) ORDERING RULE.—For purposes of this section, any amount paid out of a health benefits account shall be treated as paid first out of the assets and income described in subparagraph (A).

"(2) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO PENSION BENEFITS ACCRUING BEFORE TRANSFER.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if the plan provides that the accrued pension benefits of any participant or beneficiary under the plan become nonforfeitable in the same manner which would be required if the plan had terminated immediately before the qualified transfer (or in the case of a participant who separated during the 1-year period ending on the date of the transfer, immediately before such separation).

"(B) SPECIAL RULE FOR 1990.—In the case of a qualified transfer described in subsection (b)(4), the requirements of this paragraph are met with respect to any participant who separated from service during the taxable year to which such transfer relates by recomputing such participant's benefits as if subparagraph (A) had applied immediately before such separation.

"(3) MINIMUM COST REQUIREMENTS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The requirements of this paragraph are met if each group health plan or arrangement under which applicable health benefits are provided provides that the applicable employer cost for each taxable year during the benefit maintenance period shall not be less than the higher of the applicable employer costs for each of the 2 taxable years immediately preceding the taxable year of the qualified transfer.

"(B) APPLICABLE EMPLOYER COST.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'applicable employer cost' means, with respect to any taxable year, the amount determined by dividing—

"(i) the qualified current retiree health liabilities of the employer for such taxable year determined—

"(I) without regard to any reduction under subsection (e)(1)(B), and

"(II) in the case of a taxable year in which there was no qualified transfer, in the same manner as if there had been such a transfer at the end of the taxable year, by

"(ii) the number of individuals to whom coverage for applicable health benefits was provided during such taxable year.

"(C) ELECTION TO COMPUTE COST SEPARATELY.—An employer may elect to have this paragraph applied separately with respect to individuals eligible for benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act at any time during the taxable year and with respect to individuals not so eligible.

"(D) BENEFIT MAINTENANCE PERIOD.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'benefit maintenance period' means the 5 taxable year period beginning with the taxable year in which the qualified transfer occurs. If a taxable year is in 2 or more overlapping benefit maintenance periods, this paragraph shall be applied by taking into account the highest applicable employer cost required to be provided under subparagraph (A) for such taxable year.

"(d) LIMITATIONS ON EMPLOYER.—For purposes of this title—

"(1) DEDUCTION LIMITATIONS.—No deduction shall be allowed—

"(A) for the transfer of any amount to a health benefits account in a qualified transfer (or any retransfer to the plan under subsection (c)(1)(B)),

"(B) for qualified current retiree health liabilities paid out of the assets (and income) described in subsection (c)(1), or

"(C) for any amounts to which subparagraph (B) does not apply and which are paid for qualified current retiree health liabilities for the taxable year to the extent such amounts are not greater than the excess (if any) of—

"(i) the amount determined under subparagraph (A) (and income allocable thereto), over

"(ii) the amount determined under subparagraph (B).

"(2) NO CONTRIBUTIONS ALLOWED.—An employer may not contribute after December 31, 1990, any amount to a health benefits account or welfare benefit fund (as defined in section 419(e)(1)) with respect to qualified current retiree health liabilities for which transferred assets are required to be used under subsection (c)(1).

"(e) DEFINITION AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED CURRENT RETIREE HEALTH LIABILITIES.—For purposes of this section—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'qualified current retiree health liabilities' means, with respect to any taxable year, the aggregate amounts (including administrative expenses) which would have been allowable as a deduction to the employer for such taxable year with respect to applicable health benefits provided during such taxable year if—

"(i) such benefits were provided directly by the employer, and

"(ii) the employer used the cash receipts and disbursements method of accounting.

For purposes of the preceding sentence, the rule of section 419(c)(3)(B) shall apply.

"(B) REDUCTIONS FOR AMOUNTS PREVIOUSLY SET ASIDE.—The amount determined under subparagraph (A) shall be reduced by any amount previously contributed to a health benefits account or welfare benefit fund (as defined in section 419(e)(1)) to pay for the qualified current retiree health liabilities. The portion of any reserves remaining as of the close of December 31, 1990, shall be allocated on a pro rata basis to qualified current retiree health liabilities.

"(C) APPLICABLE HEALTH BENEFITS.—The term 'applicable health benefits' mean health benefits or coverage which are provided to—

"(i) retired employees who, immediately before the qualified transfer, are entitled to receive such benefits upon retirement and who are entitled to pension benefits under the plan, and

"(ii) their spouses and dependents.

"(D) KEY EMPLOYEES EXCLUDED.—If an employee is a key employee (within the meaning of section 416(i)(1)) with respect to any plan year ending in a taxable year, such employee shall not be taken into account in computing qualified current retiree health liabilities for such taxable year or in calculating applicable employer cost under subsection (c)(3)(B).

"(2) EXCESS PENSION ASSETS.—The term 'excess pension assets' means the excess (if any) of—

"(A) the amount determined under section 412(c)(7)(A)(ii), over

"(B) the greater of—

"(i) the amount determined under section 412(c)(7)(A)(i), or

"(ii) 125 percent of current liability (as defined in section 412(c)(7)(B)).

The determination under this paragraph shall be made as of the most recent valuation date of the plan preceding the qualified transfer.

"(3) HEALTH BENEFITS ACCOUNT.—The term "health benefits account" means an account established and maintained under section 401(h).

"(4) COORDINATION WITH SECTION 412.—In the case of a qualified transfer to a health benefits account—

"(A) any assets transferred in a plan year after the valuation date for such year (and any income allocable thereto) shall, for purposes of section 412(c)(7), be treated as assets in the plan as of the valuation date for the following year, and

"(B) the plan shall be treated as having a net experience loss under section 412(b)(2)(B)(iv) for the first plan year after the plan year in which such transfer occurs in an amount equal to the amount of such transfer (reduced by any amounts transferred back to the pension plan under subsection (c)(1)(B)), except that such section shall be applied to such amount by substituting '10 plan years' for '5 plan years'."

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 401(h) is amended by inserting ", and subject to the provisions of section 420" after "Secretary".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to transfers in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1990.

SEC. 3112. APPLICATION OF ERISA TO TRANSFERS OF EXCESS PENSION ASSETS TO RETIREE HEALTH ACCOUNTS.

(a) EXCLUSIVE BENEFIT REQUIREMENT.—Section 403(c)(1) of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (29 U.S.C. 1103(c)(1)) is amended by inserting ", or under section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on January 1, 1991)" after "insured plans)".

(b) FIDUCIARY DUTIES.—Section 404(a)(1)(A) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1104(a)(1)(A)) is amended by inserting "subject to section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on January 1, 1991)," after "(A)".

(c) EXEMPTIONS FROM PROHIBITED TRANSACTIONS.—Section 408(b) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1108(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(13) Any transfer in a taxable year beginning before January 1, 1996, of excess pension assets from a single-employer plan which is a defined benefit plan to a retiree health account in a qualified transfer permitted under section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on January 1, 1991)."

(d) FUNDING LIMITATIONS.—Section 302 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1082) is amended by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (h) and by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(g) QUALIFIED TRANSFERS TO HEALTH BENEFITS ACCOUNTS.—For purposes of this section, in the case of a qualified transfer (as defined in section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986)—

"(1) any assets transferred in a plan year after the valuation date for such year (and any income allocable thereto) shall, for purposes of subsection (c)(7), be treated as assets in the plan as of the valuation date for the following year, and

"(2) the plan shall be treated as having a net experience loss under subsection (b)(2)(B)(iv) for the first plan year after the plan year in which such transfer occurs in an amount equal to the amount of such transfer (reduced by any amounts transferred back to the plan under section 420(c)(1)(B) of such Code), except that such subsection shall be applied to such amount by substituting '10 plan years' for '5 plan years'."

(e) NOTICE REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 101 of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1021) is amended by redesignating subsection (e) as subsection (f) and by inserting after subsection (d) the following new subsection:

"(e) NOTICE OF TRANSFER OF EXCESS PENSION ASSETS TO HEALTH BENEFITS ACCOUNTS.—

"(1) NOTICE TO PARTICIPANTS.—Not later than 60 days before the date of a qualified transfer by an employee pension benefit plan of excess pension assets to a health benefits account, the administrator of the plan shall notify (in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe) each participant and beneficiary under the plan of such transfer. Such notice shall include information with respect to the amount of excess pension assets, the portion to be transferred, the amount of health benefits liabilities to be funded with the assets transferred, and the amount of pension benefits of the participant which will be vested immediately after the transfer.

"(2) NOTICE TO SECRETARIES, ADMINISTRATOR, AND EMPLOYEE ORGANIZATIONS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Not later than 60 days before the date of any qualified transfer by an employee pension benefit plan of excess pension assets to a health benefits account, the employer maintaining the plan from which the transfer is made shall provide the Secretary, the Secretary of the Treasury, the administrator, and each employee organization representing participants in the plan a written notice of such transfer. A copy of any such notice shall be available for inspection in the principal office of the administrator.

"(B) INFORMATION RELATING TO TRANSFER.—Such notice shall identify the plan from which the transfer is made, the amount of the transfer, a detailed accounting of assets projected to be held by the plan immediately before and immediately after the transfer, and the current liabilities under the plan at the time of the transfer.

"(C) AUTHORITY FOR ADDITIONAL REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary may prescribe such additional reporting requirements as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(3) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of paragraph (1), any term used in such paragraph which is also used in section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (as in effect on January 1, 1991) shall have the same meaning as when used in such section."

(2) PENALTIES.—

(A) Section 502(c)(1) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1132(c)(1)) is amended by inserting "or section 101(e)(1)" after "section 606".

(B) Section 502(c)(3) of such Act (29 U.S.C. 1132(c)(3)) is amended—

(i) by inserting "or who fails to meet the requirements of section 101(e)(2) with respect to any person" after "beneficiary" the first place it appears, and

(ii) by inserting "or to such person" after "beneficiary" the second place it appears.

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to qualified transfers under section 420 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

Subtitle D—Early Childhood Education and Development

SEC. 3301. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990".

SEC. 3302. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this subtitle are—

(1) to build on and to strengthen the role of the family by seeking to ensure that parents are not forced by lack of available programs or financial resources to place a child in an unsafe or unhealthy child care facility or arrangement;

(2) to promote the availability and diversity of quality child care services and early childhood development programs to expand child care options available to all families who need such services;

(3) to assist States and Indian tribes to work with businesses to find innovative ways to provide employee child care services through the workplace;

(4) to provide assistance to families whose financial resources are not sufficient to enable such families to pay the full cost of necessary child care services and early childhood development;

(5) to lessen the chances that children will be left to fend for themselves for significant parts of the day;

(6) to improve the productivity of parents in the labor force by lessening the stresses related to the absence of adequate child care services;

(7) to provide assistance to States and Indian tribes to improve the quality of, and coordination among, child care programs and early childhood development programs;

(8) to increase the opportunities for attracting and retaining qualified staff in the field of child care and early childhood development to provide high quality child care services to children; and

(9) to strengthen the competitiveness of the United States by providing young children with a sound early childhood development experience.

SEC. 3303. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—There are authorized to be appropriated for the purposes specified in subsection (b) $1,300,000,000 for fiscal year 1991 and such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1992, 1993, 1994, and 1995.

(b) AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Of the aggregate amount appropriated under subsection (a) for a fiscal year—

(1) 47 percent shall be available to provide developmentally appropriate child care services under the Head Start Act, as amended by part 1 of this subtitle;

(2) 33 percent shall be available to carry out title VIII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965, as added by part 2 of this subtitle; and

(3) 20 percent shall be available to carry out the Child Care Quality Improvement Act, as added by part 3 of this subtitle.

"(1) are intended to provide an environment which enhances the educational, social, cultural, emotional, and recreational development of children; and

"(2) in the case of before- and after-school child care—

"(A) are provided Monday through Friday, including school holidays and vacation periods other than legal public holidays, to children attending half-day early childhood development programs, kindergarten, or elementary or secondary school classes during such times of the day and on such days that regular instructional services are not in session; and

"(B) are not intended to extend or replace the regular academic program.

"(b) AVAILABILITY OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Amounts shall be available to carry out this title as provided in section 3303(b)(2) of the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990.

"SEC. 8002. AMOUNTS OF GRANTS.

"(a) GRANTS FOR TERRITORIES.—

"(1) The Secretary shall reserve 1 percent of the amount made available for purposes of carrying out this title in each fiscal year for payments to—

"(A) Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands according to their respective needs for grants under this title; and

"(B) the Secretary of the Interior in the amount necessary—

"(i) to make payments to local educational agencies, upon such terms as the Secretary determines will best carry out the purposes of this title with respect to out-of-State Indian children in the elementary and secondary schools of such agencies under special contracts with the Department of the Interior, in amounts determined by the Secretary in accordance with the provisions of section 1005(d)(1); and

"(ii) to meet the needs of Indian children on reservations serviced by elementary and secondary schools for Indian children operated with Federal assistance or operated by the Department of the Interior, pursuant to an agreement between the Secretary and the Secretary of the Interior made in accordance with the provisions of section 1005(d)(2).

"(2) The grant which a local educational agency in Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands is eligible to receive shall be determined pursuant to such criteria as the Secretary determines will best carry out the purposes of this title.

"(b) GRANTS FOR LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES AND THE COMMONWEALTH OF PUERTO RICO.—

"(1)(A) In each fiscal year, the Secretary shall determine which local educational agencies in a State are eligible to receive a grant under subparagraph (B) and the amount of the grant each such local educational agency is eligible to receive in accordance with the provisions of subsections (a) through (c) of section 1005, section 1403(b), and subparagraph (B).

"(B) Except as provided in paragraph (2), and subject to the availability of appropriations, in any fiscal year a local educational agency shall receive a grant under this subsection only if the amount of the grant which such local educational agency is eligible to receive, as determined under subsections (a) through (c) of section 1005 and section 1403(b)—

"(i) is not less than $15,000; or

"(ii) is not less than $5,000, in the case of a local educational agency which has under its jurisdiction children at least 30 percent of whom are eligible to be counted under section 1005(c).

"(2)(A) In each fiscal year, amounts remaining from amounts appropriated for the purpose of making grants under this title after carrying out subsection (a) and paragraph (1) shall be allocated to the States for the purpose of making grants to local educational agencies that did not receive a grant under paragraph (1) for such fiscal year. Each State shall receive under this paragraph an amount that bears the same relationship to such remaining amounts as the amount received by all local educational agencies in such State under chapter 1 of title I in the preceding fiscal year bears to the amount made available to carry out such chapter in such fiscal year, except that in any fiscal year no State may receive any amount under this paragraph that, when added to the amount received under paragraph (1) in such fiscal year by all local educational agencies in such State, would total more than an amount that bears the same relationship to the amount made available for purposes of carrying out this title for such fiscal year as the amount received by all local educational agencies in such State in the preceding fiscal year under chapter 1 of title I bears to the amount made available to carry out such chapter in such fiscal year.

"(B) Subject to subparagraphs (C) and (D), in each fiscal year each State shall, from amounts made available to it under this paragraph, make grants to local educational agencies that did not receive a grant under paragraph (1) for such fiscal year, for the purposes specified in section 8001.

"(C) Each State shall give priority for grants under subparagraph (B) to local educational agencies—

"(i) that have under their jurisdiction the greatest concentrations of children whose families have very low income;

"(ii) that will use amounts made available under the grant to supplement, not supplant, non-Federal funds being used before the grant is received for the purposes for which the grant is provided; and

"(iii) that are located in areas in greatest need of child care and early childhood development services, taking into consideration the needs and resources assessment conducted under section 659F of Public Law 97-35.

"(D) The State may not make a grant under this paragraph for an amount that is less than $5,000.

"(3) For purposes of determining the amount that a local educational agency in a State would be eligible to receive under this title, the Secretary shall include children aged 4 in the count conducted under section 1005(c).

"(4) For purposes of this subsection, the term 'State' does not include Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

"(c) LIMITATION.—Notwithstanding the provisions of this section, the amount paid to any State under this title for any fiscal year shall not exceed 150 percent of—

"(1) the amount received by such State under this title in the preceding fiscal year; or

"(2) an amount that bears the same relationship to the amount made available to carry out this title as the amount received by all local educational agencies in such State under chapter 1 of title I in the preceding fiscal year bears to the amount made available to carry out such chapter in such fiscal year.

"SEC. 8003. LOCAL PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) APPLICATION.—A local educational agency that desires to receive funds under this title shall submit an application to the State that includes a 2-year plan describing how the local educational agency will use such funds to carry out the purposes of this title.

"(b) USE OF FUNDS.—Each local educational agency that receives funds under this title shall use such funds to expand, establish, or operate an early childhood development program or before- and after-school child care program, or both, in accordance with the application and plan approved by the State. Each such program shall meet the following requirements:

"(1)(A) An early childhood development program shall be provided at the costs described in subparagraph (C) for children described in subparagraph (B).

"(B) Children described in this subparagraph are children from families—

"(i) within the area served by the local educational agency; and

"(ii) in which the parent or parents work or are in education or training programs.

"(C) The program described in subparagraph (A)—

"(i) shall be provided at no cost for 4-year-old children from families within the area served by the local educational agency with income of not more than 100 percent of the poverty level (to the extent such services are not available under the Head Start Act); and

"(ii) may be provided, from not more than 25 percent of the funds provided under this title that will be used to provide such program—

"(I) on a sliding fee scale for 4-year-old children from families within the area served by the local educational agency with income of more than 100 percent of the poverty level but not more than 160 percent of the lower living standard income level; and

"(II) on a full-fee basis for children from families within the area served by the local educational agency with income of more than 160 percent of the lower living standard income level.

"(2) At the option of the local educational agency, an early childhood development program may be provided for 3-year-old children under the terms described in paragraph (1).

"(3)(A) A before- and after-school child care program shall provide such care at the costs described in subparagraph (C) for children described in subparagraph (B). Such program shall consist of services that—"(i) are provided during such times of the day when regular instructional services are not in session; and

"(ii) are not intended as an extension of or replacement for the regular academic program, but are intended to provide an environment that enhances the social, educational, cultural, emotional, and recreational development of school-age children.

"(B) Children described in this subparagraph are children from families within the area served by the local educational agency and in which—

"(i) the parent or parents work or are in education or training programs; and

"(ii) the children are attending early childhood development programs, kindergarten, or elementary or secondary school classes.

"(C) The care described in subparagraph (A)—

"(i) shall be provided at no cost for children from families within the area served by the local educational agency with income of not more than 100 percent of the poverty level; and

"(ii) may be provided, from not more than 25 percent of the funds provided under this title that will be used to provide such care—

"(I) on a sliding fee scale for children from families within the area served by the local educational agency with income of more than 100 percent of the poverty level but not more than 160 percent of the lower living standard income level; and

"(II) on a full-fee basis for children from families within the area served by the local educational agency with income of more than 160 percent of the lower living standard income level.

"(4)(A) Services shall be available during the full working day for 4-year-olds (and for 3-year-olds, where offered). Such services may only include an early childhood development program or before- and after-school care, or both.

"(B) Before- and after-school care shall be available for the calendar year, Monday through Friday, excluding legal public holidays.

"(5) The local educational agency shall provide for the inclusion in each program of eligible children enrolled in private early childhood development programs and in private kindergarten and elementary and secondary schools in accordance with the provisions of chapter 1 of title I relating to the participation of children enrolled in private schools.

"(6) Each early childhood development program shall be in compliance with—

"(A) applicable State regulatory standards for health and safety; and

"(B) applicable State standards for program quality.

"(7) With respect to early childhood development programs, norm-referenced and criterion-referenced standardized tests shall not be administered.

"(8) With respect to before- and after-school child care programs—

"(A) each such program provided shall be developmentally appropriate and meet the diverse recreational, social, emotional, cultural, and educational needs of school-aged children; and

"(B) each such program shall be in compliance with—

"(i) applicable State regulatory standards for health and safety; and

"(ii) applicable State standards for program quality.

"(9) A smooth transition of children shall be encouraged—

"(A) from early childhood development programs to kindergarten; and

"(B) from kindergarten to grade 1.

"(10) Services shall include—

"(A) adequate and nutritious meals and snacks;

"(B) if practicable, social services; and

"(C) in the case of early childhood development programs—

"(i) coordination of such health and nutrition services as are available from other agencies for children in such programs; and

"(ii) referrals to health and social services for which an enrolled child and the family of such child are eligible under Federal, State, or local law.

"(11) Information, programs, and activities for parents shall be provided, to the extent practicable, in a language and form the parents understand.

"(c) FEES.—Payments received by local educational agencies from parents of children who receive early childhood development services under the authority of subsection (b)(1)(C)(ii) or before- and after-school child care services under the authority of subsection (b)(3)(C)(ii) shall be retained by such agencies and shall be expended by such agencies only to carry out this title.

"(d) COORDINATION WITH EXISTING PROVIDERS.—Each local educational agency that receives funds under this title shall coordinate the program carried out with such funds with other public entities and private nonprofit community-based organizations that provide before- and after-school child care and early childhood development programs in the area served by the local educational agency, including entities and organizations that provide programs with assistance received under section 619 of the Education of the Handicapped Act.

"(e) CONTRACTING AUTHORITY.—

"(1) A local educational agency may provide a before- and after-school child care program or early childhood development program in accordance with the provisions of this title through grants to or contracts with other public entities and eligible private nonprofit community-based organizations that provide before- and after-school child care programs or early childhood development programs, as appropriate. In making a grant or entering into a contract under the authority of the preceding sentence, a local educational agency shall give priority to a program offered in a public school building, if the cost of such program is comparable to the costs of programs offered in other facilities.

"(2) To be eligible for a grant or contract under this subsection, a private nonprofit community-based organization shall provide assurances that—

"(A) the organization is able to and willing to enroll in the program, or has a history of enrolling, racially, ethnically, linguistically, and economically diverse children and children with disabilities;

"(B) the organization will ensure that the program is in compliance with section 654 of the Head Start Act; and

"(C) the organization will comply with other reasonable requirements established by the local educational agency consistent with the purposes of this title.

"(3) Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972 shall apply to any program or activity provided with assistance under this title to the same extent and in the same manner as any program or activity included within the meaning of such term under such title IX. References in this title to section 654 of the Head Start Act shall be construed so as to be consistent with such title IX.

"SEC. 8004. STATE PROGRAM REQUIREMENTS.

"(a) STATE EDUCATIONAL AGENCY ASSURANCES.—In order for a State to participate under this title, the State shall submit to the Secretary, through its State educational agency, assurances that the State educational agency—

"(1) will meet the requirements in paragraphs (2) and (5) of section 435 of the General Education Provisions Act, relating to fiscal control and fund accounting procedures;

"(2) will establish, before the expiration of the 3-year period beginning on the date of the enactment of the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990—

"(A) standards for early childhood development programs for which funds are received under this title, which shall include standards relating to—

"(i) group size limits in terms of the number of staff members and the number and ages of children;

"(ii) the maximum appropriate child-staff ratios;

"(iii) qualifications and background of staff members;

"(iv) health, nutrition, and safety requirements for children and staff members; and

"(v) parental involvement; and

"(B) standards for before- and after-school child care programs for which funds are received under this title, which shall include standards relating to—

"(i) inservice training for staff members;

"(ii) health, nutrition, and safety requirements for children and staff members; and

"(iii) parental involvement;

"(3) will ensure that its local educational agencies and State agencies receiving funds under this title comply with any applicable statutory and regulatory provisions pertaining to this title; and

"(4) will require any local educational agency that desires to receive assistance under this title to submit an application for such assistance that includes a 2-year plan describing how the local educational agency will carry out the objectives of this title.

"(b) LIMITATION ON STATE PROGRAM COSTS.—The State educational agency may, from the amounts paid to it pursuant to section 8006, use not more than 3 percent of such amounts for costs of administration related to carrying out this title.

"SEC. 8005. ESTABLISHMENT AND REVISION OF SLIDING FEE SCALE.

"The State shall establish and periodically revise, by rule, a sliding fee scale that provides for cost sharing between the Federal Government (acting indirectly through the State and local educational agencies) and the families that receive child care or early childhood development services for which assistance is provided under this title. Such fee scale shall be based on the services provided to, and the income of the families (adjusted for family size and extraordinary medical expenses paid by the family as a result of a disability of a family member) of, eligible children who receive such services, except that it shall apply only to services received by children from families with income of more than 100 percent of the poverty level but not more than 160 percent of the lower living standard income level.

"SEC. 8006. PAYMENTS TO STATES.

"The Secretary shall pay to each State on a timely basis, in advance or otherwise, the amount which it and the local educational agencies of such State are eligible to receive under this title.

"SEC. 8007. PAYMENTS TO LOCAL EDUCATIONAL AGENCIES.

"Each State educational agency shall distribute not less than 97 percent of the amounts paid to it pursuant to section 8006 to the local educational agencies of the State which are eligible to receive grants under this title and which have applications and plans approved by the State.

"SEC. 8008. DEFINITIONS.

"For purposes of this title:

"(1) The term 'community-based organization' means an organization that—

"(A) is representative of the community or significant segments of the community; and

"(B) provides child care, preschool programs, or early childhood development programs.

"(2) The term 'early childhood development program' means a program to provide educational services that are appropriate for the child's age and all areas of the individual child's development, including physical, emotional, social, cultural, cognitive, and communication, and including services appropriate to meet the needs of children with disabilities.

"(3) The term 'full working day' means at least 10 hours per day.

"(4) The term 'lower living standard income level' means that income level (adjusted for regional, metropolitan, urban, and rural differences and family size) determined annually by the Secretary of Labor and based on the most recent lower living family budget issued by the Secretary of Labor.

"(5) The term 'poverty level' means the criteria of poverty used by the Bureau of the Census in compiling the most recent decennial census for a family of 4 in such form as those criteria have been updated by increases in the Consumer Price Index For All Urban Consumers.

"(6) The term 'sliding fee scale' means the sliding fee scale established and revised under section 8005.".

SEC. 3322. TECHNICAL AMENDMENT.

The first sentence of section 1005(c)(2)(B) of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 (20 U.S.C. 2711(c)(2)(B)) is amended by inserting after "Consumer Price Index" the following: "For All Urban Consumers".

PART 3—CHILD CARE QUALITY IMPROVEMENT

SEC. 3331. QUALITY IMPROVEMENT.

Chapter 8 of subtitle A of title VI of Public Law 97-35 (42 U.S.C. 9871-9877) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subchapters C, D, and E, as subchapters D, E, and F, respectively; and

(2) by inserting after subchapter B the following:

"SUBCHAPTER C—CHILD CARE QUALITY IMPROVEMENT

"SEC. 658A. SHORT TITLE.

"This subchapter may be cited as the 'Child Care Quality Improvement Act'.

"SEC. 658B. AUTHORITY TO PROVIDE FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.

"The Secretary may provide financial assistance to eligible States, and to Indian tribes and tribal organizations, to carry out this subchapter.

"SEC. 658C. AMOUNTS RESERVED; ALLOTMENTS.

"(a) AMOUNTS RESERVED.—

"(1) TERRITORIES AND POSSESSIONS.—The Secretary shall reserve not to exceed one half of 1 percent of the amount made available under section 3303(b)(3) of the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990 in each fiscal year for payments to Guam, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands of the United States, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Republic of the Marshall Islands, the Federated States of Micronesia, and Palau, to be allotted in accordance with their respective needs.

"(2) INDIANS.—The Secretary shall reserve an amount, not less than 1.5 percent and not more than 3 percent of the amount made available under section 3303(b)(3) of the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990 in each fiscal year, to carry out subsection (c) regarding Indian children.

"(b) STATE ALLOTMENT.—

"(1) GENERAL RULE.—From the remainder of the amount made available under section 3303(b)(3) of the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990 for each fiscal year, the Secretary shall allot to each State (excluding jurisdictions referred to in subsection (a)(1)) an amount equal to the sum of the following:

"(A) Fifty percent of the amount that bears the same ratio to such remainder as the product of the young child factor of the State and the allotment factor bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all States.

"(B) Fifty percent of the amount that bears the same ratio to such remainder as the product of the school lunch factor of the State and the allotment factor bears to the sum of the corresponding products for all the States.

"(2) LIMITATIONS.—If a sum determined under paragraph (1)—

"(A) exceeds 1.2, then the allotment factor of that State shall be considered to be 1.2; and

"(B) is less than 0.8, then the allotment percentage of the State shall be considered to be 0.8.

"(3) DETERMINATION OF ALLOTMENT FACTOR.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The allotment factor for a State means—

"(i) the per capita income of all individuals in the United States; divided by

"(ii) the per capita income of all individuals in the State.

"(B) PER CAPITA INCOME.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), per capita income shall be—

"(i) determined at 4-year intervals;

"(ii) applied for the 4-year period beginning on October 1 of the first fiscal year beginning on the date such determination is made; and

"(iii) equal to the average of the annual per capita incomes for the most recent period of 3 consecutive years for which satisfactory data are available from the Department of Commerce at the time such determination is made.

"(c) PAYMENTS FOR THE BENEFIT OF INDIAN CHILDREN.—

"(1) INDIAN TRIBES AND TRIBAL ORGANIZATIONS.—From the funds reserved under subsection (a)(2), the Secretary may, upon the application of an Indian tribe or tribal organization, enter into a contract with or make a grant to such Indian tribe or tribal organization for a period of 2 years, subject to satisfactory performance, to plan and carry out programs and activities that are consistent with this subchapter. Such contract or grant shall be subject to the terms and conditions of section 102 of the Indian Self-Determination Act (25 U.S.C. 450f) and shall be conducted in accordance with sections 4, 5, and 6 of the Act of April 16, 1934 (48 Stat. 596; 25 U.S.C. 655-657), that are relevant to such programs and activities.

"(2) INDIAN RESERVATIONS.—In the case of an Indian tribe in a State other than the States of Oklahoma, Alaska, and California, such programs and activities shall be carried out on the Indian reservation for the benefit of Indian children.

"(d) REALLOTMENTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—Any portion of the allotment under subsection (b) to a State that the Secretary determines is not required to carry out a State plan approved under section 658E, in the period for which the allotment is made available, shall be reallotted by the Secretary to other States in proportion to the original allotments to the other States.

"(2) LIMITATIONS.—(A) The amount of any reallotment to which a State is entitled to under paragraph (1) shall be reduced to the extent that it exceeds the amount that the Secretary estimates will be used in the State to carry out a State plan approved under section 658E.

"(B) The amount of such reduction shall be similarly reallotted among States for which no reduction in an allotment or reallotment is required by this subsection.

"(3) AMOUNTS REALLOTTED.—For purposes of any other section of this subchapter, any amount reallotted to a State under this subsection shall be deemed to be part of the allotment made under subsection (b) to the State.

"(e) DEFINITION.—For the purposes of this section, the term 'State' means any of the several States, the District of Columbia, or the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"SEC. 658D. LEAD AGENCY.

"The chief executive officer of a State that desires to receive funds under this subchapter shall designate, in an application submitted to the Secretary under section 658E(a), a State agency to act as the lead agency to perform administrative functions to carry out this subchapter. The State agency so designated shall be the State agency that has primary responsibility for child care in the State.

"SEC. 658E. APPLICATION AND PLAN.

"(a) APPLICATION.—To be eligible to receive funds under this subchapter, a State shall submit an application to the Secretary at such time, in such manner, and containing such information as the Secretary may require by rule.

"(b) PLAN.—(1) The application of a State submitted under subsection (a) shall include an assurance that the State will comply with the requirements of this subchapter and a State plan that is designed to be implemented during a 5-year period and that meets the requirements of subsection (c).

"(2) A State that receives funds for this subchapter after the expiration of the three-year period beginning on the date of enactment of this subchapter shall have in effect minimum child care standards that apply to child care services provided in the State by child care providers that receive public financial assistance and that are required to be licensed and regulated by the State. The standards shall consist of the following:

"(A) CENTER-BASED CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards submitted with respect to child care services provided by center-based child care providers shall be limited to—

"(i) group size limits in terms of the number of caregivers and the number and ages of children;

"(ii) the maximum appropriate child-staff rations;

"(iii) qualifications and background of child care personnel;

"(iv) health, nutrition, and safety requirements for children and caregivers; and

"(v) parental involvement in licensed and regulated child care services.

"(B) FAMILY CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards submitted with respect to child care services provided by family child care providers shall be limited to—

"(i) the maximum number of children for which child care services may be provided and the total number of infants for which child care services may be provided;

"(ii) the minimum age for caregivers; and

"(iii) health, nutrition, and safety requirements for children and caregivers.

"(C) GROUP HOME CHILD CARE SERVICES.—Such standards submitted with respect to child care services provided by group home child care providers shall be limited to the matters specified in subparagraphs (A) and (B).

"(c) REQUIREMENTS OF THE PLAN.—

"(1) LEAD AGENCY.—(A) The plan shall identify the lead agency designated in accordance with section 658D and contain assurances that—

"(i) funds received under this subchapter by the State will be administered by the lead agency; and

"(ii) the lead agency will comply with the requirements of subparagraph (B).

"(B)(i) The lead agency shall review the law applicable to, and the licensing requirements and the policies of, each licensing agency that regulates child care services and programs in the State unless the State has reviewed such law, requirements, and policies in the 3-year period ending on the date of the enactment of the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990.

"(ii) Not later than 18 months after the date of the enactment of the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990, the lead agency shall prepare and submit a report to the chief executive officer of the State. Such report shall contain—

"(I) a statement of the findings and recommendations that result from the review carried out under clause (i), including a description of the current status, and recommendations for improvement, of child care licensing, regulating, monitoring, and enforcement in the State; and

"(II) recommendations regarding standards that should apply to local educational agencies that receive funds under title VIII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965 to provide child care services.

"(2) ACTIVITIES TO IMPROVE THE QUALITY OF CHILD CARE.—The plan shall provide that the State shall use funds received under this subchapter to do 1 or more of the following:

"(A) Provide financial assistance to establish or expand local resource and referral programs under section 658F.

"(B) Improve the quality of child care services and early childhood development programs in the State by providing training in accordance with the requirements of section 658G.

"(C) Improve the quality of child care services by improving the monitoring of compliance with, and enforcement of, the licensing and regulatory requirements (including registration requirements) of the State.

"(D) Improve salaries and other compensation paid to full- and part-time staff who provide child care services—

"(i) for which assistance is provided under the Head Start Act or title VIII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; and

"(ii) to the extent practicable, in other major Federal and State child care programs, except programs conducted pursuant to part A of title IV of the Social Security Act; to the extent that such salaries and other compensation are inadequate.

"(3) OTHER ALLOWABLE ACTIVITIES.—The plan shall provide that the State may use not more than 5 percent of the funds received under this subchapter to do 1 or more of the following:

"(i) Make low-interest loans to eligible child care providers that are nonprofit child care providers and family child care providers to make renovations and improvements in existing facilities to be used to carry out child care programs.

"(ii) Make grants or low-interest loans to child care providers to assist such providers to meet Federal, State, and local child care standards, giving priority to such providers that serve children of families that have very low income.

"(iii) Make grants to local public libraries (and elementary and secondary school libraries, as appropriate) to improve the quality of early childhood learning resources and to expand the availability of such resources to eligible child care providers (particularly family child care providers) that provide child care services to preschool children, and to the preschool children and their families served by such providers.

"(iv) If funds are not appropriated to carry out title V of the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990 in a fiscal year, make grants in such fiscal year to businesses for the purpose, and under the terms and conditions, specified in such title.

Amounts (including interest) received by the State for the repayment of loans made under this paragraph shall be used by the State to carry out this subchapter.

"(4) ENFORCEMENT OF LICENSING AND OTHER REGULATORY REQUIREMENTS (INCLUDING REGISTRATION REQUIREMENTS).—The plan shall provide that the State, not later than 3 years after the date of enactment of the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990, shall have in effect enforcement policies and practices that will be applicable to all licensed or regulated child care providers (including child care providers required to register) in the State, including policies and practices that—

"(A) require personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to receive training in child development, health and safety, child abuse prevention and detection, the needs of children with a disability, program management, and relevant law enforcement;

"(B) impose personnel requirements to ensure that individuals who are hired as licensing inspectors are qualified to inspect and, to the maximum extent feasible, have inspection responsibility exclusively for children's services;

"(C) require—

"(i) personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to make not less than 1 unannounced inspection of each center-based child care provider in the State annually;

"(ii) personnel who perform inspection functions with respect to licensed or regulated child care services to make unannounced inspections periodically, and during normal hours of operation, of licensed and regulated family child care providers in the State; and

"(D) require the ratio of licensing personnel to child care providers in the State to be maintained at a level sufficient to enable the State to conduct inspections of child care facilities and providers on a timely basis and otherwise to comply with the enforcement requirements of this section;

"(E) require licensed or regulated child care providers (including registered child care providers) in the State—

"(i) to have written policies and program goals and to make a copy of such policies and goals available to parents; and

"(ii) to provide parents with unlimited access to their children whenever children of such parents are in the care of such providers;

"(F) implement a procedure to address complaints of parents and child care providers;

"(G) prohibit the operator of a child care facility to take any action against an employee of such operator that would adversely affect the employment, or terms or conditions of employment, of such employee because such employee communicates a failure of such operator to comply with any applicable licensing or regulatory requirement;

"(H) make consumer education information available to inform parents and the general public about licensing requirements, complaint procedures, and policies and practices required by this paragraph;

"(I) require a child care provider to post, on the premises where child care services are provided, the telephone number of the appropriate licensing or regulatory agency that parents may call regarding a failure of such provider to comply with any applicable licensing or regulatory requirement; and

"(J) require the State to maintain a record of parental complaints and to make information regarding substantiated parental complaints available to the public on request.

"(5) LIMITATION ON ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES.—The plan shall provide that not more than 2 percent of the funds received under this subchapter will be used to pay administrative costs incurred by the lead agency to carry out this subchapter.

"(6) REPORT.—The plan shall provide that not later than December 31, 1992, and at 2-year intervals thereafter, the State will submit to the Secretary a report—

"(A) specifying—

"(i) the uses for which the State expended under paragraph (2) funds received by the State; and

"(ii) with respect to each use specified under clause (i), the amount of such funds expended;

"(B) stating the reasons supporting the selection of each such use and the amount of such funds expended for each such use;

"(C) identifying the extent to which other resources of the State were expended for each of the activities described in subparagraphs (A) through (D) of such paragraph; and

"(D) containing data designed to show—

"(i) how the child care needs of families in the State are being fulfilled, including information on—

"(I) the number of children being assisted with funds provided under this subchapter, and under other State and Federal child care programs, except programs conducted pursuant to part A of title IV of the Social Security Act;

"(II) the type and number of child care programs, child care providers, caregivers, and support personnel located in the State; and

"(III) salaries and other compensation paid to full- and part-time staff who provide child care services; and

"(ii) the extent to which the availability of child care services has increased; during the 2-year period for which such report is required to be submitted.

"SEC. 658F. RESOURCE AND REFERRAL PROGRAMS.

"(a) RECOGNITION.—Each State that desires to provide assistance under subsection (b) shall recognize a community-based organization, a public organization, a unit of general purpose local government, or a public agency that represents a combination of units of general purpose local government as the resource and referral agency for a particular geographical area in the State.

"(b) FUNDING.—Each State that receives funds under this subchapter fr a fiscal year may provide assistance, in such fiscal year, to the organizations recognized under subsection (a) to enable such organizations to carry out resource and referral programs—

"(1) to identify existing child care services;

"(2) to provide to interested parents information and referral regarding such services;

"(3) to provide or arrange for the provision of information and training to existing and potential child care providers and to others (including businesses) concerned with the availability of child care services; and

"(4) to provide information on the demand for and supply of child care services located in a community.

"(c) REQUIREMENTS.—To be eligible for recognition as a resource and referral agency for a designated geographical area in a State, an organization shall—

"(1) have or acquire a database of information on child care services in the geographical area that the organization continually updates, including child care services provided in centers, nursery schools, and family child care settings;

"(2) have the capability to provide resource and referral services in the designated geographical area;

"(3) be able to respond in a timely fashion to requests for information or assistance;

"(4) be a public agency, or a community-based organization, located in the geographical area to be served; and

"(5) be able to provide parents with a checklist to identify quality child care services.

"(d) DUTY.—An organization recognized under subsection (a) as a resource and referral agency shall gather, update, and provide information concerning child care services available from eligible child care providers in the geographical area served by such organization.

"(e) LIMITATION ON INFORMATION.—An organization recognized under subsection (a) as a resource and referral agency shall not provide information concerning any child care program or services which are not licensed or regulated, and not exempted from licensing and regulation, by the State.

"SEC. 658G. TRAINING AND RELATED ACTIVITIES.

"(a) GRANTS AND CONTRACTS FOR TRAINING.—A State may make grants to and enter into contracts with public agencies, nonprofit organizations, and institutions of higher education to develop and carry out child care training programs under which preservice and continuing inservice training is provided to—

"(1) staff who provide child care services for which assistance is provided under the Head Start Act or title VIII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; and

"(2) staff of eligible child care providers and staff of resource and referral programs involved in providing child care services in the State.

"(b) TRAINING AND OTHER ACTIVITIES RELATING TO FAMILY CHILD CARE ENHANCEMENT.—

"(1) AUTHORITY TO MAKE GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.—A State may make grants to and enter into contracts with public agencies and nonprofit organizations (including resource and referral organizations, child care food program sponsors, and family child care associations) to enable such organizations to develop and carry out child care training programs under which preservice and inservice training is provided to eligible child care providers that are family child care providers.

"(2) ELIGIBILITY REQUIREMENTS FOR GRANTS AND CONTRACTS.—To be eligible to receive a grant or enter into a contract under paragraph (1), a nonprofit organization shall—

"(A) recruit and train individuals to become family child care providers, including providers with the capacity to provide night-time child care services and emergency child care services at irregular hours (as well as emergency care for sick children);

"(B) provide ongoing training to individuals who are family child care providers, including specialized training in working with infants;

"(C) operate resource centers to make developmentally appropriate curriculum materials available to family child care providers;

"(D) provide grants to family child care providers for the purchase of moderate cost equipment to be used to provide child care services; and

"(E) provide such other services to family child care providers in the communities of such organization as the lead agency determines to be appropriate.

"SEC. 658H. LIMITATIONS ON USE OF FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE.

"(a) SUBSTITUTION OF FUNDS.—Funds received under—

"(1) the amendments to the Head Start Act made by the Early Childhood Education and Development Act of 1990;

"(2) title VIII of the Elementary and Secondary Education Act of 1965; or

"(3) this subchapter;

by the State may be used only to supplement, not to supplant, the amount of Federal, State, and local funds expended for the support of the activities for which such funds are received.

"(b) EXISTING FACILITIES.—No financial assistance provided under the provisions of law specified in subsection (a) may be expended to renovate or repair any facility unless—

"(1) the child care provider that receives such financial assistance agrees—

"(A) in the case of a grant, to repay to the Secretary or the State, as the case may be, the amount that bears the same ratio to the amount of such grant as the value of the renovation or repair, as of the date such provider ceases to provide child care services in such facility in accordance with this subchapter, bears to the original value of the renovation or repair; and

"(B) in the case of a loan, to repay immediately to the Secretary or the State, as the case may be, the principal amount of such loan outstanding and any interest accrued, as of the date such provider ceases to provide child care services in such facility in accordance with this subchapter;

if such provider does not provide child care services in such facility in accordance with this subchapter throughout the useful life of the renovation or repair; and

"(2) if such provider is a sectarian agency or organization, the renovation or repair is necessary to bring such facility into compliance with health and safety requirements imposed as a result of such provisions of law.

"SEC. 658I. FEDERAL ENFORCEMENT.

"(a) REVIEW OF COMPLIANCE WITH STATE PLAN.—The Secretary shall review and monitor State compliance with this subchapter and the plan approved under section 658E for the State.

"(b) NONCOMPLIANCE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If the Secretary, after reasonable notice and opportunity for a hearing to a State, finds that—

"(A) there has been a failure by the State to comply substantially with any provision or any requirements set forth in the plan approved under section 658E for the State; or

"(B) in the operation of any program or project for which assistance is provided under this subchapter there is a failure by the State to comply substantially with any provision of this subchapter;

the Secretary shall notify the State of the finding and that no further payments may be made to such State under this subchapter (or, in the case of noncompliance in the operation of a program or activity, that no further payments to the State will be made with respect to such program or activity) until the Secretary is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply or that the noncompliance will be promptly corrected.

"(2) ADDITIONAL SANCTIONS.—In the case of a finding of noncompliance made pursuant to paragraph (1), the Secretary may, in addition to imposing the sanctions described in such paragraph, impose other appropriate sanctions, including recoupment of money improperly expended for purposes prohibited or not authorized by this subchapter, and disqualification from the receipt of financial assistance under this sub- chapter.

"(3) NOTICE.—The notice required under paragraph (1) shall include a specific identification of any additional sanction being imposed under paragraph (2).

"(c) ISSUANCE OF RULES.—The Secretary shall establish by rule procedures for—

"(1) receiving, processing, and determining the validity of complaints concerning any failure of a State to comply with the State plan or any requirement of this subchapter; and

"(2) imposing sanctions under this section.

"SEC. 658J. NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON RECOMMENDED CHILD CARE STANDARDS.

Subtitle A—Provisions Relating to Medicare Program and Regulation of Medicare Supplemental Insurance Policies

PART 1—PROVISIONS RELATING TO PART B

Subpart A—Payment for Physicians' Services

SEC. 4001. CERTAIN OVERVALUED PROCEDURES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1842(b)(14) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(14)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(i)" after "(14)(A)";

(2) by adding at the end of subparagraph (A) the following new clause:

"(ii) In determining the reasonable charge for a physicians' service specified in subparagraph (C)(i) and furnished during 1991, the prevailing charge for such service shall not exceed the prevailing charge otherwise recognized for such service for the period during 1990 beginning on April 1, reduced by 15 percent or, if less, ⅓ of the percent (if any) by which the prevailing charge otherwise recognized for the locality in that year exceeds the locally-adjusted reduced prevailing amount (as determined under subparagraph (B)(i)) for the service.";

(3) in subparagraph (B)(i)(II), by inserting "or (iv)" after "clause (iii)";

(4) in subparagraph (B)(iii), by inserting "for services furnished during the 9-month period beginning on April 1, 1990" after "locality" the first place it appears;

(5) by adding at the end of subparagraph (B) the following new clause:

"(iv) The 'adjustment factor', for a physicians' service for a locality furnished in 1991, is the sum of—

"(I) the practice component percent (referred to as practice expense ratio), divided by 100, specified in appendix A (pages 187 through 194) of the Report of the Medicare and Medicaid Health Budget Reconciliation Amendments of 1989, prepared by the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, House of Representatives, (Committee Print 101-M, 101st Congress, 1st Session) for the service, multiplied by the geographic practice cost index (specified in subparagraph (C)(v)) for the locality, and

"(II) 1 minus the practice component percent, multiplied by the geographic physician work adjustment index value (specified in subparagraph (C)(vi)) for the locality.";

(6) by adding at the end of subparagraph (C)(ii), the following new sentence: "In computing the national weighted average in the previous sentence in applying this paragraph to services furnished in 1991, the prevailing charge in each locality shall first be deflated by the adjustment factor specified in subparagraph (B)(iv).."; and

(7) by adding at the end of subparagraph (C) the following new clauses:

"(v) The geographic practice cost index value specified in this clause for a locality is the Geographic Overhead Costs Index specified for the locality in table 1 of the August 1990 Supplement to the Geographic Medicare Economic Index: Alternative Approaches (prepared by the Urban Institute and the Center for Health Economics Research).

SEC. 4002. RADIOLOGY SERVICES.

(a) REDUCTION IN FEE SCHEDULE.—Section 1834(b)(4) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(b)(4)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subparagraphs (D) and (E) as subparagraphs (E) and (F), respectively, and

(2) by inserting after subparagraph (C) the following new subparagraph:

"(D) 1991 FEE SCHEDULES.—For radiologist services (other than portable X-ray services) furnished under this part during 1991, the conversion factors used in a locality under this subsection shall be determined as follows:

"(i) NATIONAL WEIGHTED AVERAGE CONVERSION FACTOR.—The Secretary shall estimate the national weighted average of the conversion factors used under this subsection for services furnished during 1990 beginning on April 1, using the best available data. In computing the national weighted average in the previous sentence, the conversion factor in each locality shall first be deflated by the sum specified in clause (iv).

"(ii) REDUCED NATIONAL WEIGHTED AVERAGE.—The national weighted average estimated under clause (i) shall be reduced by 11 percent.

"(iii) GEOGRAPHIC INDICES.—

"(I) 1990 LOCALITY INDEX RELATIVE TO NATIONAL AVERAGE.—The Secretary shall establish an index which reflects, for each locality, the ratio of the conversion factor used in the locality under this subsection to the national weighted average estimated under clause (i).

"(II) FEE SCHEDULE GEOGRAPHIC INDEX.—The Secretary shall establish an index value, for each locality, equal to the geographic adjustment factor which would be established for the locality under section 1848(e)(2) if—

"(a) the work, overhead, and malpractice geographic practice cost indices contained in Addendum C to the Model Fee Schedule for Physicians' Services (published on September 4, 1990, 55 Federal Register pp. 36238.-36243) were used as the geographic physician work adjustment factor value, the geographic cost-of-practice index value, and the geographic malpractice index value, respectively, and

"(b) the proportions of the total relative value for the work component, practice expense component, and the malpractice component were the work, overhead, and malpractice percents, respectively, specified for the specialty of radiology in Table 2.1 of such Model Fee Schedule (55 F.R. 36188).

"(iv) LOCAL ADJUSTMENT.—Subject to clause (v), the conversion factor to be applied in a locality is the national weighted average conversion factor (estimated under clause (i)), reduced under clause (ii), multiplied by the sum of—

"(I) ¾ of the index value established under clause (iii)(I) for the locality, and

"(II) ¼ of the index value established under clause (iii)(II) for the locality.

"(v) MAXIMUM REDUCTION.—The conversion factor to be applied to a locality under this subparagraph shall not be less than 92 percent of the conversion factor applied in the locality under subparagraph (C).".

(b) CONTINUING PHASE-IN OF GEOGRAPHIC ADJUSTMENT.—Section 1848(e)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395w-4(e)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "In the case of radiology services described in subsection (b)(2)(A), the geographic adjustment factor for—

"(A) 1992, shall be ½ of the index value established under section 1834(b)(4)(D)(iii)(I) for the locality plus ½ of the geographic adjustment factor determined under the previous sentence, and

"(B) 1993, shall be ¼ of the index value established under section 1834(b)(4)(D)(iii)(I) for the locality plus ¾ of the geographic adjustment factor determined under the previous sentence.".

(c) NONAPPLICATION OF COMPARABILITY PROVISIONS.—Section 1834(b)(3) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(b)(3)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (A),

(2) by striking the period at the end of subparagraph (B) and inserting ", and", and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C) shall not apply section 1842(b)(3)(B) insofar as it relates to requiring carriers to restrict payment to the charge applicable, for a comparable service and under comparable circumstances, to policyholders and subscribers of the carrier.".

(d) USE OF LOCALITIES.—Section 1834(b)(1)(B) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(b)(1)(B)) is amended by inserting "locality," after "statewide,".

(e) CONTINUATION OF SPECIAL RULE FOR NUCLEAR MEDICINE PHYSICIANS.—Section 6105(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 is amended by striking all that follows "Social Security Act" the second place it appears and inserting the following: "beginning April 1, 1990, and ending December 31, 1991, there shall be substituted for the fee schedule otherwise applicable a fee schedule based ⅓ on the fee schedule computed under such section (without regard to this subsection) and ⅔ on 101 percent of the 1988 prevailing charge for such services.".

(f) EXTENSION OF SPLIT BILLING RULE FOR INTERVENTIONAL RADIOLOGISTS.—Section 6105(c) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989 is amended by inserting "or 1991" after "1990" each place it appears.

(g) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) by inserting "(A)" after "(q)(1)", and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(B) For physician anesthesia services furnished under this part during 1991, the conversion factor used in a locality under this subsection shall be determined as follows:

"(i) The Secretary shall estimate the national weighted average of the conversion factors used under this subsection for services furnished during 1990 beginning on April 1, using the best available data. In computing the national weighted average in the previous sentence, the conversion factor in each locality shall first be deflated by the sum specified in clause (iv).

"(ii) The national weighted average estimated under clause (i) shall be reduced by 7 percent.

"(iii)(I) The Secretary shall establish an index which reflects, for each locality, the ratio of the conversion factor used in the locality under this subsection for services furnished under this part during 1990 beginning on April 1 to the national weighted average estimated under clause (i).

"(II) The Secretary shall establish an index value, for each locality, equal to the geographic adjustment factor which would be established for the locality under section 1848(e)(2) if—

"(a) the work, overhead, and malpractice geographic practice cost indices contained in Addendum C to the Model Fee Schedule for Physicians' Services (published on September 4, 1990, 55 Federal Register pp. 36238-36243) were used as the geographic physician work adjustment factor value, the geographic cost-of-practice index value, and the geographic malpractice index value, respectively, and

"(b) the proportions of the total relative value for the work component, practice expense component, and the malpractice component were 55.9 percent, 33.4 percent, and 10.7 percent, respectively.

"(iv) Subject to clause (v), the conversion factor to be applied in a locality is the national weighted average conversion factor (estimated under clause (i)) reduced under clause (ii) multiplied by the sum of—

"(I) ½ of the index value established under clause (iii)(I) for the locality, and

"(II) ½ of the index value established under clause (iii)(II).

"(v) The conversion factor to be applied to a locality under this subparagraph shall not be less than 85 percent of the conversion factor applied in the locality during 1990 beginning on April 1.".

(c) EXTENSION OF REDUCTION FOR SUPERVISION OF CONCURRENT SERVICES.—Section 1842(b)(13) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395u(b)(13)) is amended by striking "1991" each place it appears and inserting "1996".

(a) CONTINUATION OF REDUCTION IN PAYMENTS FOR CAPITAL-RELATED COSTS.—Section 1861(v)(1)(S)(ii)(I) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395x(v)(1)(S)(ii)(I)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: ", by 10 percent for payments attributable to portions of cost reporting periods occurring during fiscal year 1991 or 1992, by 7.5 percent for payments attributable to portions of cost reporting periods occurring during fiscal year 1993 or 1994, and by 5 percent for payments attributable to portions of cost reporting periods occurring during fiscal year 1995".

(b) REDUCTION IN AMOUNT OF PAYMENTS OTHERWISE DETERMINED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1833(a)(2)(B)(i)(I) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(a)(2)(B)(i)(I)) is amended by striking "services," and inserting "services (or, in the case of services furnished during portions of cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1990, other than services furnished by a hospital receiving an additional payment under section 1886(d)(5)(F) during such cost reporting period, 95 percent of the reasonable cost of such services),".

(2) STANDARD OVERHEAD AMOUNTS FOR AMBULATORY SURGICAL CENTERS.—Section 1833(i)(3)(B) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(i)(3)(B)) is amended by inserting after clause (ii) the following new clause:

"(iii) In determining the amount described in clause (i)(II) with respect to facility services furnished during portions of cost reporting periods beginning on or after October 1, 1990 (other than services furnished by a hospital receiving an additional payment under section 1886(d)(5)(F) during such cost reporting period), the Secretary shall reduce the standard overhead amount by 2.5 percent.".

(c) PAYMENTS FOR AMBULATORY SURGICAL PROCEDURES.—

(1) 2-YEAR FREEZE IN ALLOWANCE FOR INTRAOCULAR LENSES.—Notwithstanding section 1833(i)(2)(A)(iii) of the Social Security Act, the amount of payment determined under such section for an intraocular lens inserted during or subsequent to cataract surgery furnished to an individual in an ambulatory surgical center on or after January 1, 1991, and on or before December 31, 1992, shall be equal to $200.

(2) DETERMINATION OF FEE SCHEDULES ON BASIS OF SURVEY OF COSTS.—Section 1833(i)(2)(A)(i) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(i)(2)(A)(i)) is amended by striking the comma at the end and inserting the following: ", as determined in accordance with a survey (based upon a representative sample of procedures) taken not later than July 1, 1992, and every 5 years thereafter, of the actual audited costs incurred by such centers in providing such services,".

(3) PROVIDING FOR REGULAR UPDATES TO FEE SCHEDULES.—Section 1833(i)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(i)(2)) is amended—

(A) in the second sentence of subparagraph (A) and the second sentence of subparagraph (B), by striking "and may be adjusted by the Secretary, when appropriate,"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C) Notwithstanding the second sentence of subparagraph (A) or the second sentence of subparagraph (B), if the Secretary has not updated amounts established under such subparagraphs with respect to facility services furnished in a year, such amounts shall be increased by the percentage increase in the consumer price index for a'l urban consumers (U.S. city average) for the 12-month period ending with June of the preceding year.".

(4) EXPANSION OF PROCEDURES IN CONSULTATION WITH TRADE ORGANIZATIONS.—The second sentence of section 1833(i)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l(i)(1)) is amended by striking the period and inserting the following: ", in consultation with appropriate trade and professional organizations.".

(5) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by paragraph (2) shall take effect July 1, 1991.

SEC. 4022. DURABLE MEDICAL EQUIPMENT.

(a) ADDITIONAL 15 PERCENT REDUCTION IN PAYMENTS FOR SEAT-LIFT CHAIRS AND TRANSCUTANEOUS ELECTRICAL NERVE STIMULATORS.—Section 1834(a)(1)(D) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(a)(1)(D)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: ", and, if furnished on or after January 1, 1991, the Secretary shall further reduce such payment amount (as previously reduced) by 15 percent".

(b) DEVELOPMENT AND APPLICATION OF NATIONAL LIMITS ON FEES.—

(1) INEXPENSIVE AND ROUTINELY PURCHASED DURABLE MEDICAL EQUIPMENT AND ITEMS REQUIRING FREQUENT AND SUBSTANTIAL SERVICING.—Paragraphs (2) and (3) of section 1834(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(a)) are each amended—

(A) in subparagraph (B)(i), by striking "or" at the end;

(B) by striking clause (ii) of subparagraph (B) and inserting the following:

"(ii) in 1991 is the sum of (I) 67 percent of the local payment amount for the item or device computed under subparagraph (C)(i)(I) for 1991, and (II) 33 percent of the national limited payment amount for the item or device computed under subparagraph (C)(ii) for 1991;

"(iii) in 1992 is the sum of (I) 33 percent of the local payment amount for the item or device computed under subparagraph (C)(i)(II) for 1992, and (II) 67 percent of the national limited payment amount for the item or device computed under subparagraph (C)(ii) for 1992; and

"(iv) in 1993 and each subsequent year is the national limited payment amount for the item or device computed under subparagraph (C)(ii) for that year."; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C) COMPUTATION OF LOCAL PAYMENT AMOUNT AND NATIONAL LIMITED PAYMENT AMOUNT.—For purposes of subparagraph (B)—

"(i) the local payment amount for an item or device for a year is equal to—

"(I) for 1991, the amount specified in subparagraph (B)(i) for 1990 increased by the covered item increase for 1991, and

"(II) for 1992, the amount determined under this clause for the preceding year increased by the covered item increase for 1992; and

"(ii) the national limited payment amount for an item or device for a year is equal to—

"(I) for 1991 and 1992, the local payment amount determined under clause (i) for such item or device for that year, except that the national limited payment amount may not exceed 100 percent of the weighted average of all local payment amounts determined under such clause for such item for that year and may not be less than 85 percent of the weighted average of all local payment amounts determined under such clause for such item, and

"(II) for each subsequent year, the amount determined under this clause for the preceding year increased by the covered item increase for such subsequent year.".

(2) MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS AND OTHER COVERED ITEMS.—Section 1834(a)(8) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(a)(8)) is amended—of the remaining months of such period is 7.5 percent of such purchase price;".

(2) OFFER OF OPTION TO PURCHASE FOR MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS; ESTABLISHMENT OF REASONABLE LIFETIME.—Section 1834(a)(7) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(a)(7)(A)) is amended—

(A) in subparagraph (A)(i), by striking "15 months" and inserting "15 months, or, in the case of an item for which a purchase agreement has been entered into under clause (ii), a period of continuous use of longer than 13 months";

(B) in subparagraph (A)(ii)—

(i) by striking "(ii) during the succeeding 6-month period of medical need," and inserting "(iii) in the case of an item for which a purchase agreement has not been entered into under clause (ii), during the first 6-month period of medical need that follows the period of medical need during which payment is made under clause (i),", and

(ii) by striking "and" at the end;

(C) in subparagraph (A)(iii)—

(i) by striking "(iii)" and inserting "(iv) in the case of an item for which a purchase agreement has not been entered into under clause (ii),", and

(ii) by striking the period at the end and inserting "; and";

(D) by inserting after clause (i) of subparagraph (A) the following new clause:

"(ii) during the 9th continuous month during which payment is made for the rental of an item under clause (i), the supplier of such item shall offer the individual patient the option to enter into a purchase agreement under which, if the patient notifies the supplier not later than 1 month after the supplier makes such offer that the patient agrees to accept such offer and exercise such option—

"(I) the supplier shall transfer title to the item to the individual patient on the first day that begins after the 13th continuous month during which payment is made for the rental of the item under clause (i), and

"(II) after the supplier transfers title to the item under subclause (I), maintenance and servicing payments shall be made in accordance with clause (v);";

(E) by adding at the end of subparagraph (A) the following new clause:

"(v) in the case of an item for which a purchase agreement has been entered into under clause (ii), after the expiration of the 6-month period beginning on the day the supplier transfers title to the item to the patient under clause (ii)(I), a maintenance and servicing payment may be made (for parts and labor not covered by the supplier's or manufacturer's warranty, as determined by the Secretary to be appropriate for the particular type of durable medical equipment) during the first month of each succeeding 6-month period, and the amount recognized for each such period is the amount recognized for the item for such period under clause (iv).";" and

(F) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(C) REPLACEMENT OF ITEMS.—

"(i) ESTABLISHMENT OF REASONABLE USEFUL LIFETIME.—The Secretary shall determine and establish a reasonable useful lifetime for items of durable medical equipment for which payment may be made under this paragraph.

"(ii) PAYMENT FOR REPLACEMENT ITEMS.—If the reasonable lifetime of such an item, as so established, has been reached during a continuous period of medical need, or the carrier determines that the item is lost or irreparably damaged, payment for an item serving as a replacement for such item may be made on a monthly basis for the rental of the replacement item in accordance with subparagraph (A).".

(4) TREATMENT OF POWER-DRIVEN WHEELCHAIRS AS MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS OF DURABLE MEDICAL EQUIPMENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 1834(a)(2)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(a)(2)(A)) is amended—

(ii) in clause (ii), by striking "or" at the end; and

(iii) by striking clause (iii).

(B) OPTIONAL TREATMENT AS CUSTOMIZED ITEM.—Section 1834(a)(4) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(a)(4)) is amended by striking "patient," and inserting "patient (including a customized wheelchair classified as a customized item under this paragraph pursuant to criteria specified by the Secretary),".

(d) FREEZE IN REASONABLE CHARGES FOR PARENTERAL AND ENTERAL NUTRIENTS, SUPPLIES, AND EQUIPMENT DURING 1991.—In determining the amount of payment under part B of title XVIII of the Social Security Act for enteral and parenteral nutrients, supplies, and equipment furnished during 1991, the charges determined to be reasonable with respect to such nutrients, supplies, and equipment may not exceed the charges determined to be reasonable with respect to such items for 1990.

(e) REQUIRING PRIOR APPROVAL FOR POTENTIALLY OVERUSED ITEMS.—Section 1834(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(a)), as amended by subsection (b)(4), is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(15) CARRIER DETERMINATIONS OF POTENTIALLY OVERUSED ITEMS IN ADVANCE.—

"(A) DEVELOPMENT OF LIST OF ITEMS BY SECRETARY.—The Secretary shall develop and periodically update a list of items for which payment may be made under this subsection that the Secretary determines, on the basis of prior payment experience, are frequently subject to unnecessary utilization, and shall include in such list seat-lift chairs, trancutaneous electrical nerve stimulators, and motorized scooters.

"(B) DETERMINATIONS OF COVERAGE IN ADVANCE.—A carrier shall determine in advance whether payment for an item included on the list developed by the Secretary under subparagraph (A) may not be made because of the application of section 1862(a)(1).".

(f) PROHIBITION AGAINST DISTRIBUTION OF MEDICAL NECESSITY FORMS BY SUPPLIERS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1834(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(a)), as amended by subsections (b)(4) and (e), is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(16) PROHIBITION AGAINST DISTRIBUTION BY SUPPLIERS OF FORMS DOCUMENTING MEDICAL NECESSITY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A supplier of a covered item under this subsection may not distribute to physicians or to individuals entitled to benefits under this part for commercial purposes any completed or partially completed forms or other documents required by the Secretary to be submitted to show that a covered item is reasonable and necessary for the diagnosis or treatment of illness or injury or to improve the functioning of a malformed body member.

"(B) PENALTY.—Any supplier of a covered item who knowingly and willfully distributes a form or other document in violation of subparagraph (A) is subject to a civil money penalty in an amount not to exceed $1,000 for each such form or document so distributed. The provisions of section 1128A (other than subsections (a) and (b)) shall apply to civil money penalties under this subparagraph in the same manner as they apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a).".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) shall apply to forms and documents distributed on or after January 1, 1991.

(g) LIMITING CHARGES OF NONPARTICIPATING SUPPLIERS.—Section 1834(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(a)), as amended by subsections (b)(4), (e), and (f), is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(17) LIMITING CHARGES FOR NONPARTICIPATING SUPPLIERS.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In the case of covered items for which payment may be made under this subsection furnished on or after January 1, 1991, if a nonparticipating supplier furnishes the item to an individual entitled to benefits under this part, the supplier may not charge the individual more than the limiting charge (as defined in subparagraph (B)).

"(B) LIMITING CHARGE DEFINED.—In subparagraph (A), the term 'limiting charge' means, with respect to an item furnished—

"(i) in 1991, 125 percent of the payment amount specified for the item under this subsection,

"(ii) in 1992, 120 percent of the payment amount specified for the item under this subsection, and

"(iii) in a subsequent year, 115 percent of the payment amount specified for the item under this subsection.

"(C) ENFORCEMENT.—If a supplier knowingly and willfully bills in violation of subparagraph (A), the Secretary may apply sanctions against such supplier in accordance with section 1842(j)(2) in the same manner as such sanctions may apply to a physician.".

(h) RECERTIFICATION FOR CERTAIN PATIENTS RECEIVING HOME OXYGEN THERAPY SERVICES.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1834(a)(5) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395m(a)(5)) is amended—

(A) in subparagraph (A), by striking "(B) and (C)" and inserting "(B), (C), and (E)"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(E) RECERTIFICATION FOR PATIENTS RECEIVING HOME OXYGEN THERAPY.—In the case of a patient receiving home oxygen therapy services who, at the time such services are initiated, has an initial arterial blood gas value at or above a partial pressure of 55 or an arterial oxygen saturation at or above 89 percent, no payment may be made under this part for such services after the expiration of the 60-day period that begins on the date the patient first receives such services unless the patient's attending physician certifies that, on the basis of a follow-up test of the patient's arterial blood gas value or arterial oxygen saturation conducted during the final 15 days of such 60-day period, there is a medical need for the patient to continue to receive such services.".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by paragraph (1) shall apply to patients who first receive home oxygen therapy services on or after January 1, 1991.

(i) STUDY OF SEPARATE FEE SCHEDULES FOR CERTAIN SUPPLIERS OF PROSTHETIC DEVICES, ORTHOTICS, AND PROSTHETICS.—

(1) STUDY.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall conduct a study of the feasibility and desirability of establishing a separate fee schedule for use in determining the amount of payments for covered items under section 1834(a) of the Social Security Act with respect to suppliers of prosthetic devices, orthotics, and prosthetics who provide professional services that would take into account the costs to such providers of providing such services.

(2) REPORT.—By not later than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the study conducted under paragraph (1).

(j) TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS.—Effective as if included in the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987, section 4062(e) of such Act is amended—

(1) by inserting "(other than oxygen and oxygen equipment)" after "covered items", and

(2) by inserting before the period at the end the following: "and to oxygen and oxygen equipment furnished on or after June 1, 1989".

(k) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Except as provided in subsections (f)(2), (h)(2), and (j), the amendments made by this section shall apply to items furnished on or after January 1, 1991.

(A) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (K); and

(B) by inserting after subparagraph (L) the following new subparagraph: "(M) with respect to services described in section 1861(s)(2)(K)(iii) (relating to nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist services provided in a rural area), the amounts paid shall be 80 percent of the lesser of the actual charge or the prevailing charge that would be recognized (or, for services furnished on or after January 1, 1992, the fee schedule amount provided under section 1848, as the case may be) if the services had been performed by a physician (subject to the limitation described in subsection (r)(2)), and".

(3) CAP ON PREVAILING CHARGE; BILLING ONLY ON ASSIGNMENT-RELATED BASIS.—Section 1833 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(r)(1) With respect to services described in section 1861(s)(2)(K)(iii) (relating to nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist services provided in a rural area), payment may be made on the basis of a claim or request for payment presented by the nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist furnishing such services, or by a hospital, rural primary care hospital, physician, group practice, ambulatory surgical center, or rural health clinic with which the nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist has an employment or contractual relationship that provides for payment to be made under this part for such services to such hospital, physician, group practice, ambulatory surgical center, or rural health clinic.

"(2)(A) For purposes of subsection (a)(1)(M), the prevailing charge for services described in section 1861(s)(2)(K)(iii) may not exceed the applicable percentage (as defined in subparagraph (B)) of the prevailing charge rate determined for such services performed by physicians who are not specialists.

"(B) In subparagraph (A), the term 'applicable percentage' means—

"(i) 75 percent in the case of services performed in a hospital, and

"(ii) 85 percent in the case of other services.

"(3)(A) Payment under this part for services described in section 1861(s)(2)(K)(iii) may be made only on an assignment-related basis, and any such assignment agreed to by a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist shall be binding upon any other person presenting a claim or request for payment for such services.

"(B) Except for deductible and coinsurance amounts applicable under this section, any person who knowingly and willfully presents, or causes to be presented, to an individual enrolled under this part a bill or request for payment for services described in section 1861(s)(2)(K)(iii) in violation of subparagraph (A) is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $2,000 for each such bill or request. The provisions of section 1128A (other than subsections (a) and (b)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under the previous sentence in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a).

"(4) No hospital or rural primary care hospital that presents a claim or request for payment under this part for services described in section 1861(s)(2)(K)(iii) may treat any uncollected coinsurance amount imposed under this part with respect to such services as a bad debt of such hospital for purposes of this title.".

"(8) A contract under this section shall provide that the eligible organization shall meet the requirement of subsection (k) (relating to maintaining written policies and procedures respecting advance directives).", and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(k)(1) For purposes of subsection (c)(8), the requirement of this subsection is that an eligible organization maintain written policies and procedures with respect to all adult individuals receiving medical care by or through the organization—

"(A) to provide written information to each such individual concerning—

"(i) an individual's rights under State law (whether statutory or as recognized by the courts of the State) to make decisions concerning such medical care, including the right to accept or refuse medical or surgical treatment and the right to formulate advance directives (as defined in paragraph (3)), and

"(ii) the written policies of the organization respecting the implementation of such rights;

"(B) to document in the individual's medical record whether or not the individual has executed an advance directive;

"(C) not to condition the provision of care or otherwise discriminate against an individual based on whether or not the individual has executed an advance directive;

"(D) to ensure compliance with requirements of State law respecting advance directives at facilities of the organization; and

"(E) to provide (individually or with others) for education for staff and the community on issues concerning advance directives.

Subparagraph (C) shall not be construed as requiring the provision of care which conflicts with an advance directive.

"(2) The written information described in paragraph (1)(A) shall be provided to an adult individual at the time of enrollment of the individual with the organization.

"(3) In this subsection, the term 'advance directive' means a written instruction, such as a living will or durable power of attorney for health care, recognized under State law and relating to the provision of such care when the individual is incapacitated.".

(2) APPLICATION TO OTHER PREPAID ORGANIZATIONS.—Section 1833 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(r) The Secretary may not provide for payment under subsection (a)(1)(A) with respect to an organization unless the organization provides assurances satisfactory to the Secretary that the organization meets the requirement of section 1876(k) (relating to maintaining written policies and procedures respecting advance directives).".

(3) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall apply to contracts under section 1876 of the Social Security Act and payments under section 1833(a)(1)(A) of such Act as of first day of the first month beginning more than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4123. DEMONSTRATION PROJECT FOR PROVIDING STAFF ASSISTANTS TO HOME DIALYSIS PATIENTS.

(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—Not later than 6 months after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall establish and carry out a demonstration project to determine whether the services of a home dialysis aide providing medical assistance to a patient during hemodialysis treatment at the patient's home may be covered under the medicare program in a cost-effective manner that ensures patient safety.

(b) PAYMENTS TO PARTICIPATING PROVIDERS AND FACILITIES.—

(1) SERVICES FOR WHICH PAYMENT MAY BE MADE.—Under the demonstration project established under subsection (a), the Secretary shall make payments for 2 years under title XVIII of the Social Security Act to a provider of services (other than a skilled nursing facility) or a renal dialysis facility located in an urban area and to a provider of services (other than a skilled nursing facility) or a renal dialysis facility located in a rural area for services of a qualified home dialysis aide providing medical assistance to an individual described in subsection (c) during hemodialysis treatment at the individual's home in an amount determined under paragraph (2).

(2) AMOUNT OF PAYMENT.—(A) Subject to subparagraph (B), payment to a provider of services or renal dialysis facility participating in the demonstration project established under subsection (a) for the services described in paragraph (1) shall be equal to a rate prospectively determined by the Secretary and shall be made on a per treatment basis.

(B) The per treatment amount of payment made under the demonstration project for services provided to a patient may not exceed the amount of payment that would be made under title XVIII of the Social Security Act for ambulance service provided to the patient for transportation to and from the provider of services or renal dialysis facility.

(c) INDIVIDUALS ELIGIBLE TO RECEIVE SERVICES UNDER PROJECT.—An individual may receive services from a provider of services or renal dialysis facility participating in the demonstration project if—

(1) the individual is an end stage renal disease patient entitled to benefits under title XVIII of the Social Security Act;

(2) the individual's attending physician certifies that the individual suffers from a permanent, serious medical condition (as specified by the Secretary) that precludes travel to and from a provider of services or renal dialysis facility; and

(3) no family member or other individual is available or able to provide such assistance to the individual.

(d) QUALIFICATIONS FOR HOME DIALYSIS AIDES.—For purposes of subsection (b), a home dialysis aide is qualified if the aide—

(1) meets requirements developed by the Secretary for home dialysis aides providing medical assistance during hemodialysis treatment at an individual patient's home; or

(2) meets any applicable standards established by the State in which the aide is providing such assistance.

(e) REPORT.—Not later than 6 months after the expiration of the demonstration project established under subsection (a), the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the results of the project, and shall include in such report recommendations regarding appropriate eligibility criteria and cost-control mechanisms for medicare coverage of the services of a home dialysis aide providing medical assistance to a patient during hemodialysis treatment at the patient's home.

(f) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There are authorized to be appropriated not more than $2,000,000 to carry out the demonstration project established under subsection (a).

Effective beginning with 1991, section 1833(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395l) is amended by striking "$75" and inserting "$100".

PART 4—STANDARDS FOR MEDICARE SUPPLEMENTAL INSURANCE POLICIES

SEC. 4301. SIMPLIFICATION OF MEDICARE SUPPLEMENTAL POLICIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1882 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss) is amended—

(1) in subsection (b)(1)(B), by striking "through (4)" and inserting "through (5)";

(2) in subsection (c)—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (3),

(B) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting "; and", and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) meets the requirements of subsection (o).";

(3) by adding at the end the following new subsections:

"(o) The requirements of this subsection are as follows:

"(1)(A) Each medicare supplemental policy shall provide for coverage of a group of benefits consistent with subsection (p)(1).

"(B) If the medicare supplemental policy provides for coverage of a group of benefits other than the core group of basic benefits described in subsection (p)(2)(B), the issuer of the policy must make available to the individual a medicare supplemental policy with only such core group of basic benefits.

"(C) The issuer of the policy has provided, before the sale of the policy, a summary information sheet which describes—

"(i) the benefits and premium under the policy, and

"(ii) the average ratio of benefits provided to premiums collected for the most recent 3-year period in which the policy is in effect (or, for a policy that has not been in effect for 3 years, the average ratio of benefits provided to premiums collected that is expected during the 3rd year of the policy).

Such summary information shall be on a standard form approved by the State (in consultation with the Secretary) consistent with the subsection (d)(3)(D).

"(2)(A) Each medicare supplemental policy shall be guaranteed renewable and—

"(i) the issuer may not cancel or nonrenew the policy solely on the ground of health status of the individual; and

"(ii) the issuer shall not cancel or nonrenew the policy for any reason other than nonpayment of premium or material misrepresentation.

"(B) If the medicare supplemental policy is terminated by the group policyholder and is not replaced as provided under subparagraph (D), the issuer shall offer certificateholders an individual medicare supplemental policy which (at the option of the certificateholder)—

"(i) provides for continuation of the benefits contained in the group policy, or

"(ii) provides for such benefits as otherwise meets the requirements of this section.

"(C) If an individual is a certificateholder in a group medicare supplemental policy and the individual terminates membership in the group, the issuer shall—

"(i) offer the certificateholder the conversion opportunity described in subparagraph (B), or

"(ii) at the option of the group policyholder, offer the certificateholder continuation of coverage under the group policy.

"(D) If a group medicare supplemental policy is replaced by another group medicare supplemental policy purchased by the same policyholder, the succeeding issuer shall offer coverage to all persons covered under the old group policy on its date of termination. Coverage under the new group policy shall not result in any exclusion for preexisting conditions that would have been covered under the group policy being replaced.

"(3)(A) Each medicare supplemental policy shall provide that benefits and premiums under the policy shall be suspended for any period in which the policyholder has applied for and is determined to be entitled to medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act, but only if the policyholder notifies the issuer of such policy within 90 days after the date the individual becomes entitled to such assistance. If such suspension occurs and if the policyholder loses entitlement to such medical assistance, such policy shall be automatically reinstated as of the termination of such entitlement if the policyholder provides notice of loss of such entitlement within 90 days after the date of such loss.

"(B) Nothing in this section shall be construed as affecting the authority of a State, under title XIX of the Social Security Act, to purchase a medicare supplemental policy for an individual otherwise entitled to assistance under such title.

"(p)(1)(A) If, within 9 months after the date of the enactment of this subsection, the National Association of Insurance Commissioners (in this subsection referred to as the 'Association') promulgates—

"(i) limitations on the groups or packages of benefits that may be offered under a medicare supplemental policy consistent with paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection,

"(ii) uniform language and definitions to be used with respect to such benefits,

"(iii) uniform format to be used in the policy with respect to such benefits, and

"(iv) transitional requirements consistent with paragraph (4),

(such limitations, language, definitions, format, and requirements referred to collectively in this subsection as 'NAIC simplification standards'), subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in each State, effective for policies issued to policyholders on and after the date specified in subparagraph (C), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, included a reference to the NAIC simplification standards.

"(B) If the Association does not promulgate NAIC simplification standards within the 9-month period specified in subparagraph (A), the Secretary shall promulgate, not later than 9 months after the end of such period, limitations, language, definitions, format, and requirements described in clauses (i) through (iv) of such subparagraph (in this subsection referred to collectively as 'Federal simplification standards') and subsection (g)(2)(A) shall be applied in each State, effective for policies issued to policyholders on and after the date specified in subparagraph (C), as if the reference to the Model Regulation adopted on June 6, 1979, included a reference to the Federal simplification standards.

"(C)(i) Subject to clause (ii), the date specified in this subparagraph for a State is the date the State adopts the NAIC simplification standards or the Federal simplification standards or 1 year after the date the Association or the Secretary first adopts such standards, whichever is earlier.

"(ii) In the case of a State which the Secretary identifies, in consultation with the Association, as—

"(I) requiring State legislation (other than legislation appropriating funds) in order for medicare supplemental policies to meet the NAIC or Federal simplification standards, but

"(II) having a legislature which is not scheduled to meet in 1992 in a legislative session in which such legislation may be considered, the date specified in this subparagraph is the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first legislative session of the State legislature that begins on or after January 1, 1992. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

"(D) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, no medicare supplemental policy may be sold, issued, or renewed in a State unless—

"(i) the State's regulatory program under subsection (b)(1) provides for the application and enforcement of the standards and requirements set forth in such subsection (including the NAIC simplification standards or the Federal simplification standards (as the case may be)) by the date specified in subparagraph (C); or

"(ii) if the State's program does not provide for the application and enforcement of such standards and requirements, the Secretary has determined that the policy meets the standards and requirements set forth in subsection (c) (including such applicable simplification standards) by such date.

Any person who issues or sells a medicare supplemental policy, after the effective date of the NAIC or Federal simplification standards with respect to the policy, in violation of this subparagraph is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $25,000 for each such violation. The provisions of section 1128A (other than the first sentence of subsection (a) and other than subsection (b)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under the previous sentence in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a).

"(E) In promulgating simplification standards under this paragraph, the Association or Secretary shall consult with a working group composed of representatives of issuers of medicare supplemental policies, consumer groups, medicare beneficiaries, and other qualified individuals. Such representatives shall be selected in a manner so as to assure balanced representation among the interested groups.

"(F) If benefits (including deductibles and coinsurance) under this title are changed and the Secretary determines, in consultation with the Association, that changes in the NAIC or Federal simplification standards are needed to reflect such changes, the preceding provisions of this paragraph shall apply to the modification of simplification standards previously established in the same manner as they applied to the original establishment of such standards.

"(2) The benefits under the NAIC or Federal simplification standards shall provide—

"(A) for such groups or packages of benefits as may be appropriate taking into account the considerations specified in paragraph (4) and the requirements of the succeeding subparagraphs;

"(B)(i) for identification of a core group of basic benefits (not including payment of any deductibles), common to all policies, and

"(ii) for identification of a group of benefits including the core group of basic benefits and common additional benefits; and

"(C) that, subject to paragraph (5), the total number of different benefit packages (counting the core group of basic benefits described in subparagraph (B)(i), the group of benefits identified in subparagraph (B)(ii), and each other combination of benefits that may be offered as a separate benefit package) that may be established in all the States and by all issuers shall not exceed 10.

"(3) The benefits under paragraph (2) shall, to the extent possible—

"(A) provide for benefits that offer consumers the ability to purchase the benefits that are available in the market as of the date of the enactment of this subsection; and

"(B) balance the objectives of (i) simplifying the market to facilitate comparisons among policies, (ii) avoiding adverse selection, (iii) providing consumer choice, (iv) providing market stability, and (v) promoting competition.

"(4) For purposes of paragraph (1)(A)(iv), the transitional requirements of this paragraph are that, in the case of a medicare supplemental policy which was issued to a policyholder before the effective date of the NAIC or Federal simplification standards and which do not meet such standards, any renewal of such policy shall be deemed to be the issuance of a policy in violation of this subsection unless the issuer offers to the policyholder, not later than 60 days before the effective date of the renewal, 2 medicare supplemental policies each of which—

"(A) complies with such standards,

"(B) waives any time periods applicable to preexisting conditions, waiting period, elimination periods and probationary periods in the policy for similar benefits to the extent such time was spent under the policy being replaced, and

"(C) provides for classification of premiums on terms that are at least as favorable to the policyholder as the premium classification terms that applied to the policyholder as of such effective date, and one of which provides for the core group of basic benefits described in paragraph (2)(B)(i) and the other of which provides benefits described in paragraph (2)(B)(ii).

"(5)(A) The Secretary may, upon application by a State, waive the requirements of this subsection to permit the issuance and sale of a medicare supplemental policy which does not comply with the respective NAIC or Federal simplification standards for a period of up to 3 years in order to demonstrate the offering of new or innovative benefits as part of the policy. Such new or innovative benefits may include managed care features.

"(B) In the case of any such waiver, the Secretary shall evaluate the appropriateness of the new or innovative benefits offered and determine if the addition of a new group of such benefits to the NAIC or Federal simplification standards previously established would further the purposes of this subsection. If such determination is made, subject to subparagraph (C), the Secretary shall request the Association to modify the NAIC simplification standards or to recommend modification of the Federal simplification standards to include such an additional group of benefits (and accompanying language, definitions, and format with respect to such benefits) as may be appropriate. If the Association fails to make such a modification in a timely manner, the Secretary may make such a modification.

"(C) Not more than 3 additional groups of benefits may be added under subparagraph (B).

"(6)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), this subsection shall not be construed as preventing a State from restricting the groups or packages of benefits (of those meeting the standards) that may be offered in medicare supplemental policies in the State.

"(B) A State may not restrict under subparagraph (A) the offering of a medicare supplemental policy in which the benefits consist only of the core group of basic benefits described in paragraph (2)(B)(i) or the group of benefits described in paragraph (2)(B)(ii).

"(C) This subsection shall not be construed as preventing an issuer of a medicare supplemental policy from providing, through an arrangement with a vendor, for discounts from that vendor to policyholder or certificateholders for the purchase of items or services not covered under its medicare supplemental policies.

"(8) The Secretary shall request the Association to establish an educational program in order to educate consumers on the simplification standards developed and applied under this subsection.

"(9) The Comptroller General shall examine the effectiveness of the medicare supplemental policy simplification program established under this subsection and the impact of the program on consumer protection, health benefit innovation, consumer choice, and health care costs. By not later than 4 years after the date of the enactment of this subsection, the Comptroller General shall submit to Congress a report on such examination and shall include in the report such recommendations on the appropriate roles of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, States, and the Secretary in carrying out such a program as he deems appropriate.".

(b) PERIODIC REVIEW OF STATE REGULATORY PROGRAMS.—Section 1882(b) of such Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1), by striking "Supplemental Health Insurance Panel (established under paragraph (2))" and inserting "the Secretary",

(2) in paragraph (1), by striking "the Panel" and inserting "the Secretary",

(3) in subparagraphs (A) and (D) of paragraph (1), by inserting "and enforcement" after "application", and

(4) by amending paragraph (2) to read as follows:

"(2) The Secretary periodically shall review State regulatory programs to determine if they continue to meet the standards and requirements specified in paragraph (1). If the Secretary finds that a State regulatory program no longer meets the standards and requirements, before making a final determination, the Secretary shall provide the State an opportunity to adopt such a plan of correction as would permit the State regulatory program to continue to meet such standards and requirements. If the Secretary makes a final determination that the State regulatory program, after such an opportunity, fails to meet such standards and requirements, the program shall no longer be considered to have in operation a program meeting such standards and requirements.".

SEC. 4302. REQUIRING APPROVAL OF STATE FOR SALE IN THE STATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1882(d)(4)(B) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss(d)(4)(B)) is amended—

(1) in the first sentence, by inserting before the period at the end the following: "(in the case of a State with an approved regulatory program) or (in the case of a State without such a program) has not been approved by the Secretary", and

(2) by amending the second sentence to read as follows: "Nothing in this section shall be construed as to affect the right of any State to regulate medicare supplemental policies which, under the provisions of this section, are considered to be issued in another State.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to policies mailed, or caused to be mailed, on and after July 1, 1991.

SEC. 4303. PREVENTING DUPLICATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subsection (d)(3) of section 1882 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (A)—

(A) by striking "Whoever knowingly sells" and inserting "It is unlawful for a person to sell or issue",

(B) by striking "substantially",

(C) by striking ", shall be fined" and inserting ". Whoever violates the previous sentence shall be fined",

(D) in subparagraph (A), by inserting "or title XIX" after "other than this title",

(E) in subparagraph (A), by striking "$5,000" and inserting "$25,000", and

(F) in subparagraph (A), by adding at the end the following: "Any person aggrieved by a violation of this subsection may in a civil action recover threefold the damages such person sustained as a result of such violation, any other appropriate relief (including punitive damages), and the costs of the suit (including reasonable attorney's fees).";

(2) by amending subparagraph (B) to read as follows:

"(B)(i) It is unlawful for a person to issue or sell a medicare supplemental policy to an individual entitled to benefits under part A or enrolled under part B, whether directly, through the mail, or otherwise, unless—

"(I) the person obtains from the individual, as part of the application for the issuance or purchase and on a form described in subclause (II), a written statement signed by the individual stating, to the best of the individual's knowledge, what health insurance policies the individual has, from what source, and whether the individual is entitled to any medical assistance under title XIX, whether as a qualified medicare beneficiary or otherwise, and

"(II) the written statement is accompanied by a written acknowledgment, signed by the seller of the policy, of the request for and receipt of such statement.

"(ii) The statement required by clause (i) shall be made on a form that—

"(I) states (in a prominent manner described by the Secretary) the following: 'A medicare beneficiary does not need more than one medicare supplemental policy. If you are 65 years of age or older, you may be eligible for benefits under your State medicaid program. If you are eligible for medicaid benefits, you do not need a medicare supplemental policy. If you are enrolled with the medicaid program and have a medicare supplemental policy, you can suspend your medicare supplemental policy (including premium payments) while receiving medicaid benefits if you provide notice to the insurer within 90 days of becoming eligible for medicaid. If you lose medicaid benefits, you may resume coverage under your medicare supplemental policy by providing notice to the insurer within 90 days of the date you lost medicaid benefits.'; and

"(II) states that counseling services may be available in the State to provide advice concerning the purchase of medicare supplemental policies and enrollment under the medicaid program, and may provide the telephone number for such services.

"(iii)(I) Except as provided in subclause (II), if the statement required by clause (i) is not obtained or indicates that the individual has another medicare supplemental policy or indicates that the individual is entitled to any medical assistance under title XIX, it is unlawful to sell or issue such a policy.

"(II) Subclause (I) shall not apply in the case of an individual who has another medicare supplemental policy and who is not entitled to medicaid benefits, if the individual indicates in writing, as part of the application for purchase, that the policy being purchased replaces such other policy and indicates an intent to terminate the policy being replaced when the new policy becomes effective.

"(iv) Whoever issues or sells a medicare supplemental policy in violation of this subparagraph shall be fined under title 18, United States Code, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, and, in addition to or in lieu of such a criminal penalty, is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $25,000 for each such failure."; and

(3) by adding at the end the following:

"(D)(i) Anyone who sells a medicare supplemental policy to an individual shall make available for sale to the individual both a medicare supplemental policy with only the core group of basic benefits (described in subsection (p)(2)(B)(i)) and a medicare supplemental policy with the benefits described in subsection (p)(2)(B)(ii).

"(ii) Anyone who sells a medicare supplemental policy to an individual shall provide the individual, before the sale of the policy, a summary information sheet which describes the benefits under the policy. Such summary information shall be on a standard form approved by the State regulatory program or the Secretary (as the case may be) consistent with the NAIC or Federal simplification standards under subsection (p)(1).

"(iii) Whoever sells a medicare supplemental policy in violation of this subparagraph is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $25,000 for each such violation.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1882(d)(5) of such Act is amended by inserting "(3)(B), (3)(D)," after "(3)(A),".

(c) INCREASE IN OTHER CIVIL MONEY PENALTIES.—Paragraphs (1) and (4)(A) of section 1882(d) of such Act are amended by striking "$5,000" and inserting "$25,000".

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to policies issued or sold more than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4304. LOSS RATIOS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1882 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss) is amended—

(1) in subsection (c), by amending paragraph (2) to read as follows:

"(2) meets the requirements of subsection (q);";

(2) by striking the last sentence of subsection (c); and

(3) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(q)(1) A medicare supplemental policy or health insurance policy that is an indemnity policy or a dread disease policy (as defined by the Secretary in consultation with the National Association of Insurance Commissioners) may not be issued or sold in any State unless—

"(A) the policy has returned (as determined for the most recent 3-year period ending with the year in which the policy is issued or renewed, on the basis of incurred claims experience and earned premiums for such periods and in accordance with accepted actuarial principles and practices and standards developed by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners) to policyholders in the form of aggregate benefits provided under the policy, at least 75 percent of the aggregate amount of premiums collected in the case of group medicare supplemental policies, at least 70 percent in the case of individual medicare supplemental policies, and 60 percent in the case of group and individual health insurance policies that are indemnity policies or dread disease policies;

"(B) any premium increase (or the initial establishment of the premium) is made in a manner consistent with paragraph (2); and

"(C) the issuer of the policy (i) annually submits to the State information with respect to the actual ratio of aggregate benefits provided to aggregate premiums on forms conforming to those developed by the National Association of Insurance Commissioners for such purpose, and (ii) annually provides a proportional credit, based on the premium paid and in accordance with paragraph (3), of the amount of premiums received necessary to assure that the ratio of aggregate benefits to the aggregate premiums collected (net of such credits) complies with the requirement of subparagraph (A).

"(2)(A) It is unlawful for an insurer to increase the premiums charged for a medicare supplemental policy (or to issue a policy and charge premiums) unless—

"(B) the issuer has submitted to the State (at such time as the State may specify, but not earlier than 90 days in advance of such proposed effective date) the proposed premium amounts in advance of the proposed effective date of the premiums; and

"(C) the issuer has included, as part of the submission under subparagraph (B), information, certified as accurate by an actuary, that establishes that the premium amounts are reasonable in relation to the benefits and that the resulting ratio of benefits to premiums will meet the requirement specified in paragraph (1)(A).

"(3)(A) Paragraph (1)(C) shall be applied with respect to each type of policy by policy number. Paragraph (1)(C) shall not apply to a policy with respect to the first 2 years in which it is in effect. The National Association of Insurance Commissioners is requested to submit to Congress a report containing recommendations on adjustments in the percentages under paragraph (1)(A) that may be appropriate in order to apply paragraph (1)(C) to the first 2 years in which policies are effective.

"(B) A credit required under paragraph (1)(C) shall be made to each individual who continues to be a policyholder or certificateholder not later than the first premium charged more than 6 months after the close of the year involved. The total amount of such credits shall be sufficient to meet the requirement of paragraph (1)(A).

"(C) Such a credit shall include interest from the end of the policy year involved until the date of the credit at a rate, specified by the Secretary for this purpose from time to time, that is not less than the average rate of interest for 13-week Treasury notes.

"(4) The provisions of this subsection do not preempt a State from—

"(A) requiring a higher percentage than that specified in paragraph (1)(A), or

"(B) requiring the review or approval of premiums not otherwise required to be reviewed or approved under paragraph (2) or providing additional requirements for the approval of premiums.

"(5)(A) The Comptroller General shall periodically, not less often than once every 3 years, perform audits with respect to the compliance of medicare supplemental policies with the requirements of paragraph (1) and shall report the results of such audits to the State involved and to the Secretary.

"(B) The Secretary may independently perform such compliance audits.

"(6)(A) A person who issues or sells a policy in violation of paragraph (1) is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $25,000 for each such violation. The provisions of section 1128A (other than the first sentence of subsection (a) and other than subsection (b)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under the previous sentence in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a).

"(B) Each issuer of a policy subject to the requirements of paragraph (1)(C) shall be liable to policyholders for credits required under such paragraph.".

(b) ASSURING ACCESS TO LOSS RATIO INFORMATION.—Section 1882(b)(1)(C) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395ss(b)(1)(C)) is amended by striking the semicolon at the end and inserting a comma and the following:

"and that a copy of each such policy, the most recent premium for each such policy, and a listing of the ratio of benefits provided to premiums collected for the most recent 3-year period for each such policy issued or sold in the State is maintained and made available to interested persons;".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to policies sold or issued more than 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4305. LIMITATIONS ON CERTAIN SALES COMMISSIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1882(d) of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) in paragraph (5)—

(A) by striking "and (4)(A)" and inserting "(4)(A), and (5)(A)", and

(B) by redesignating such paragraph as paragraph (6); and

(2) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5)(A) It is unlawful for a person who provides for a commission or other compensation to an agent or other representative with respect to the sale of a medicare supplemental policy (or certificate)—

"(i) to provide for a first year commission or other first year compensation that exceeds 200 percent of the commission or other compensation for the selling or servicing of the policy or certificate in a second or subsequent year, or

"(ii) to provide for compensation with respect to replacement of such a policy or certificate that is greater than the compensation that would apply to the renewal of the policy or certificate.

Whoever violates the previous sentence shall be fined under title 18, United States Code, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, and, in addition to or in lieu of such a criminal penalty, is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $25,000 for each such prohibited act.

"(B) In this paragraph the term 'compensation' includes pecuniary and nonpecuniary compensation of any kind relating to the sale or renewal of a policy or certificate and specifically includes bonuses, gifts, prizes, awards, and finders' fees.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply to compensation provided on or after 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4306. CLARIFICATION OF TREATMENT OF PLANS OFFERED BY HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The first sentence of section 1882(g)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: "and does not include a policy or plan of a health maintenance organization or other direct service organization which offers benefits under this title, including such services under a contract under section 1833 or 1876".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4307. PROHIBITION OF CERTAIN DISCRIMINATORY PRACTICES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1882(o) of the Social Security Act, as added by section 4111(a)(2) of this Act, is amended by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5)(A) Except as provided in this paragraph, an entity that issues medicare supplemental policies in a State shall offer any individual who is 65 years of age or older and who resides in the State, upon request of the individual made during the 6-month period beginning with the first month in which the individual has attained such age and is enrolled under part B, the opportunity of enrolling in a medicare supplemental policy which provides for a core group of basic benefits (described in subsection (p)(2)(B)(i)) and a medicare supplemental policy which offers the group of benefits described in subsection (p)(2)(B)(ii), without conditioning the issuance or effectiveness of such a policy on, and without discriminating in the price of such a policy based on, the medical or health status or the receipt of health care by the individual.

"(B)(i) Subject to clause (ii), paragraph (1) shall not be construed as preventing the exclusion of benefits under a policy, during its first 6 months, based on a pre-existing condition for which the policyholder received treatment or was otherwise diagnosed during the 6 months before it became effective.

"(ii) If a medicare supplemental policy or certificate replaces another such policy or certificate which has been in effect for 6 months or longer, the replacing policy may not provide any time period applicable to pre-existing conditions, waiting periods, elimination periods, and probationary periods in the new policy or certificate for similar benefits.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect 1 year after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4308. HEALTH INSURANCE ADVISORY SERVICE FOR MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall establish a health insurance advisory service program (in this section referred to as the "beneficiary assistance program") to assist medicare-eligible individuals with the receipt of services under the medicare and medicaid programs and other health insurance programs.

(b) OUTREACH ELEMENTS.—The beneficiary assistance program shall provide assistance—

(1) through operation using local Federal offices that provide information on the medicare program,

(2) using community outreach programs, and

(3) using a toll-free telephone information service.

(c) ASSISTANCE PROVIDED.—The beneficiary assistance program shall provide for information, counseling, and assistance for medicare-eligible individuals with respect to at least the following:

(1) With respect to the medicare program—

(A) eligibility,

(B) benefits (both covered and not covered),

(C) the process of payment for services,

(D) rights and process for appeals of determinations,

(E) other medicare-related entities (such as peer review organizations, fiscal intermediaries, and carriers), and

(F) recent legislative and administrative changes in the medicare program.

(2) With respect to the medicaid program—

(A) eligibility, benefits, and the application process,

(B) linkages between the medicaid and medicare programs, and

(C) referral to appropriate State and local agencies involved in the medicaid program.

(3) With respect to medicare supplemental policies—

(A) the program under section 1882 of the Social Security Act and standards required under such program,

(B) how to make informed decisions on whether to purchase such policies and on what criteria to use in evaluating different policies,

(C) appropriate Federal, State, and private agencies that provide information and assistance in obtaining benefits under such policies, and

(D) other issues deemed appropriate by the Secretary.

The beneficiary assistance program also shall provide such other services as the Secretary deems appropriate to increase beneficiary understanding of, and confidence in, the medicare program and to improve the relationship between beneficiaries and the program.

(d) EDUCATIONAL MATERIAL.—The Secretary, through the Administrator of the Health Care Financing Administration, shall develop appropriate educational materials and other appropriate techniques to assist employees in carrying out this section.

(e) NOTICE TO BENEFICIARIES.—The Secretary shall take such steps as are necessary to assure that medicare-eligible beneficiaries and the general public are made aware of the beneficiary assistance program.

(f) REPORT.—The Secretary shall include, in an annual report transmitted to the Congress, a report on the beneficiary assistance program and on other health insurance informational and counseling services made available to medicare-eligible individuals. The Secretary shall include in the report recommendations for such changes as may be desirable to improve the relationship between the medicare program and medicare-eligible individuals.

SEC. 4309. ADDITIONAL ENFORCEMENT THROUGH PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE ACT.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) is amended—

(1) by redesignating title XXVII as title XXVIII;

(2) by redesignating sections 2701 through 2714 as sections 2801 through 2814, respectively; and

(3) by inserting after title XXV the following new title:

"TITLE XXVII—ENFORCEMENT OF CERTAIN HEALTH INSURANCE STANDARDS

"SEC. 2701. ENFORCEMENT OF CERTAIN HEALTH INSURANCE STANDARDS.

"(a) ENFORCEMENT OF UNDERWRITING.—A person that fails to meet the requirements of section 1882(o)(5) of the Social Security Act (relating to discriminatory practices) is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $25,000 for each such violation. The provisions of section 1128A of the Social Security Act (other than the first sentence of subsection (a) and other than subsection (b)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under the previous sentence in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a) of such Act.

"(b) ENFORCEMENT OF LOSS-RATIO REQUIREMENTS.—A person who issues or sells a medicare supplemental policy or a health insurance policy that is an indemnity or dread disease policy (as defined by the Secretary of Health and Human Services under section 1882(q)(1) of the Social Security Act) in violation of such section is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $25,000 for each such violation. The provisions of section 1128A of the Social Security Act (other than the first sentence of subsection (a) and other than subsection (b)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under the previous sentence in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a) of such Act.

"(c) ENFORCEMENT OF LIMITATIONS ON SALES COMMISSIONS.—Whoever violates section 1882(o)(5)(A) of the Social Security Act (relating to sales commissions) shall be fined under title 18, United States Code, or imprisoned not more than 5 years, or both, and, in addition to or in lieu of such a criminal penalty, is subject to a civil money penalty of not to exceed $25,000 for each prohibited act under such section.".

(b) TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—The Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) is further amended—

(1) in section 406(a)(2), by striking "2701" and inserting "2801";

(2) in section 465(f), by striking "2701" and inserting "2801";

(3) in section 480(a)(2), by striking "2701" and inserting "2801";

(4) in section 485(a)(2), by striking "2701" and inserting "2801";

(5) in section 497, by striking "2701" and inserting "2801";

(6) in section 505(a)(2), by striking "2701" and inserting "2801"; and

(7) in section 926(b), by striking "2711" each place such term appears and inserting "2811".

Subtitle B—Medicaid Program

PART 1—REDUCTIONS IN SPENDING

SEC. 4401. REIMBURSEMENT FOR PRESCRIBED DRUGS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—

(1) DENIAL OF FEDERAL FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION UNLESS REBATE AGREEMENTS AND DRUG USE REVIEW IN EFFECT.—Section 1903(i) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396b(i)) is amended—

(A) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (9) and inserting "; or", and

(B) by inserting after paragraph (9) the following new paragraph:

"(10) with respect to covered outpatient drugs of a manufacturer dispensed in any of the 50 States or the District of Columbia unless, except as provided in section 1927(a)(3), the manufacturer complies in all such States and District with the rebate requirements of section 1927(a) with respect to the drugs so dispensed.".

(2) STATE PLAN DRUG ACCESS LIMITATIONS FOR DRUGS COVERED UNDER A REBATE AGREEMENT.—Section 1902(a) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)) is amended—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (52),

(B) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (53) and inserting "; and", and

(C) by inserting after paragraph (53) the following new paragraph:

"(54)(A) provide that, in the case of a manufacturer which has entered into and complies with an agreement under section 1927(a), the plan shall permit the coverage of covered outpatient drugs of the manufacturer which are prescribed (on or after April 1, 1991) for a medically accepted indication (as defined in section 1927(f)(6)),

"(B) comply with the reporting requirements of section 1927(b)(2)(A) and the requirements of section 1927(d), and

"(C) effective January 1, 1993, provide for drug use review in accordance with section 1927(d). ".

"PAYMENT FOR PRESCRIBED DRUGS

"SEC. 1927. (a) REQUIREMENT FOR REBATE AGREEMENT.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In order for payment to be available under section 1903(a) for covered outpatient drugs of a manufacturer, the manufacturer must have entered into and have in effect a rebate agreement described in subsection (b) with the Secretary, on behalf of all the States. If a manufacturer has not entered into such an agreement before February 1, 1991, such an agreement, subsequently entered into, shall not be effective until the first day of the calendar quarter that begins more than 60 days after the date the agreement is entered into.

"(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—Paragraph (1) shall first apply to drugs dispensed under this title on or after February 1, 1991, except that and any agreement entered into under this section on or before February 1, 1991, shall be effective with respect to drugs dispensed on or after January 1, 1991.

"(3) EFFECT ON EXISTING AGREEMENTS.—In the case of a rebate agreement in effect between a State and a manufacturer on October 1, 1990, such agreement may remain in effect, and shall be considered to be a rebate agreement in compliance with this section with respect to that State, if the State establishes to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the agreement can reasonably be expected to provide in any 12-month period for rebates that are at least as large as the rebates otherwise required under this section.

"(4) APPLICATION IN CERTAIN STATES AND TERRITORIES.—

"(A) APPLICATION IN STATES OPERATING UNDER DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS.—In the case of any State which is providing medical assistance to its residents under a waiver granted under section 1115, the Secretary shall require the State to meet the requirements of section 1902(a)(54) and of this section in the same manner as the State would be required to meet such requirement if the State had in effect a plan approved under this title.

"(B) NO APPLICATION IN COMMONWEALTHS AND TERRITORIES.—This section, and sections 1902(a)(54) and 1903(i)(10), shall only apply to a State that is one of the 50 States or the District of Columbia.

"(b) TERMS OF REBATE AGREEMENT.—

"(1) QUARTERLY REBATES.—

"(A) TIMING.—

"(i) IN GENERAL.—A rebate agreement under this subsection shall require the manufacturer to provide, to each State plan approved under this title, a rebate each calendar quarter in the amount specified in subsection (c) for covered outpatient drugs of the manufacturer dispensed under the plan during the quarter. Except as provided in clause (ii), such a rebate shall be paid to each State by the manufacturer not later than 30 days after the date of receipt of the information described in paragraph (2) for that quarter.

"(ii) SPECIAL PAYMENT RULE FOR THE CALENDAR QUARTER BEGINNING JULY 1, 1991.—With respect to the calendar quarter beginning July 1, 1991, such a rebate shall be paid to each State by the manufacturer by not later than September 30, 1991, based on the amount of the rebate payable by the manufacturer for the previous quarter. The amount of the rebate payment for the quarter beginning October 1, 1991, shall be increased or decreased to the extent that the rebate payment for the quarter beginning July 1, 1991, was less than, or exceeded, the amount of the rebate otherwise required to be made under the agreement without regard to this clause.

"(B) OFFSET AGAINST MEDICAL ASSISTANCE.—Amounts received by a State as rebates under this section in any quarter shall be considered to be a reduction in the amount expended under the State plan in the quarter for medical assistance for purposes of section 1903(a)(1).

"(2) STATE PROVISION OF INFORMATION.—

"(A) STATE RESPONSIBILITY.—Each State agency under this title shall report to the Secretary, not later than 60 days after the end of each calendar quarter and in a form consistent with a standard reporting format established by the Secretary, information on the total number of units of each dosage form and strength of each covered outpatient drug of a manufacturer dispensed under the plan during the quarter, and shall promptly transmit such information to the manufacturer.

"(B) AUDIT BY MANUFACTURERS.—A manufacturer has the right to audit only such data of the States as are reasonably necessary to verify information provided (or required to be provided) under subparagraph (A). Adjustments to rebates shall be made to the extent that information indicates that utilization was greater or less than the amount previously specified.

"(C) NOTICE TO SECRETARY.—Each State agency shall notify the Secretary within 30 days after the date each rebate is received under this section.

"(3) MANUFACTURER PROVISION OF PRICE INFORMATION.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Each manufacturer with an agreement in effect under this section shall report to the Secretary (and make available upon request to each State agency)—

"(i) not later than 30 days after the last day of each quarter (beginning on or after April 1, 1991), on the average manufacturer price (as defined in subsection (f)(1)) and (for single source drugs and innovator multiple source drugs) the manufacturer's best price (as defined in subsection (c)(3)(A)) for covered outpatient drugs for the quarter, and

"(ii) not later than 30 days after the date of entering into an agreement under this section on the best price (as defined in subsection (c)(3)(B)) as of September 1, 1990 for each of the manufacturer's covered outpatient drugs.

"(B) VERIFICATION SURVEYS OF AVERAGE MANUFACTURER PRICE.—The Secretary may survey wholesalers and manufacturers that directly distribute their covered outpatient drugs, when necessary to verify average manufacturer prices reported under subparagraph (A). The Secretary may impose a civil monetary penalty in an amount not to exceed $10,000 on a wholesaler, manufacturer, or direct seller, if the wholesaler, manufacturer, or direct seller of a covered outpatient drug refuses a written request for information about charges or prices by the Secretary in connection with a survey authorized under this subparagraph or knowingly provides false information in response to such a request. The provisions of section 1128A (other than subsections (a) and (b)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under this subparagraph in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a).

"(C) PENALTIES.—

"(i) FAILURE TO PROVIDE TIMELY INFORMATION.—If a manufacturer with an agreement under this section fails to provide information required under subparagraph (A) on a timely basis, the amount of the rebates next required to be paid for a calendar quarter under the agreement shall be increased by 2 percent, and, if such information is not reported within 90 days of the deadline imposed, the agreement shall be suspended for services furnished after the end of such 90-day period and until the date such information is reported (but in no case shall such suspension be for a period of less than 30 days).

"(ii) FALSE INFORMATION.—Any manufacturer with an agreement under this section that knowingly provides false information to the Secretary under this paragraph is subject to a civil money penalty in an amount not to exceed $100,000 for each item of false information. Such civil money penalties are in addition to other penalties as may be prescribed by law (including exclusion under section 1128(b)(11)). The provisions of section 1128A (other than subsections (a) and (b)) shall apply to a civil money penalty under this subparagraph in the same manner as such provisions apply to a penalty or proceeding under section 1128A(a).

"(D) CONFIDENTIALITY OF INFORMATION.—Information disclosed by manufacturers or wholesalers under subparagraph (A) or (B) is confidential and shall not be disclosed by the Secretary or a State agency (or contractor therewith) in a form which discloses the identity of a specific manufacturer, wholesaler, or product, except as the Secretary determines to be necessary to carry out this section and to permit the Comptroller General and the Inspector General of the Department to review the information provided.

"(4) LENGTH OF AGREEMENT.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A rebate agreement shall be effective for an initial period of 1 year and shall be automatically renewed for an additional 1-year period unless terminated under subparagraph (B).

"(B) TERMINATION.—

"(i) BY THE SECRETARY.—The Secretary may provide for termination of a rebate agreement for violation of the requirements of the agreement. Such termination shall not be effective earlier than 60 days after the date of notice of such termination. The Secretary shall provide, upon request, a manufacturer with a hearing concerning such a termination, but such hearing shall not delay the effective date of the termination.

"(ii) BY A MANUFACTURER.—A manufacturer may terminate a rebate agreement under this section for any reason. Any such termination shall not be effective until such period (of not more than 1 year, specified by the Secretary in regulation) after the date of the manufacturer provides notice of such termination to the Secretary.

"(iii) EFFECTIVENESS OF TERMINATION.—Any termination under this subparagraph shall not affect rebates due under the agreement before the effective date of its termination.

"(C) DELAY BEFORE REENTRY.—In the case of any rebate agreement with a manufacturer under this section which is terminated, a new such agreement with the manufacturer (or a successor manufacturer) may not be entered into until a period of 1 year has elapsed since the date of the termination, unless the Secretary finds good cause for an earlier reinstatement of such an agreement.

"(c) AMOUNT OF REBATE.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—

"(A) SINGLE SOURCE DRUGS AND INNOVATOR MULTIPLE SOURCE DRUGS.—Except as provided in this subsection and subsection (b)(3)(C)(i), the amount of the rebate to a State during a calendar quarter with respect to single source drugs and innovator multiple source drugs shall be equal to the product of—

"(i) the amount by which (I) the average manufacturer price to wholesalers during the quarter for each dosage form and strength of a covered outpatient drug, exceeds (II) the manufacturer's best price (as defined in paragraph (3)) for such form and strength; and

"(ii) the number of units of such form and strength dispensed under the plan under this title in the State in the quarter (as reported by the State under subsection (b)(2)).

"(B) OTHER DRUGS.—Except as provided in subsection (b)(3)(C)(i), the amount of the rebate to a State during a calendar quarter with respect to covered outpatient drugs (other than single source drugs and innovator multiple source drugs) shall be equal to the product of—

"(i) 10 percent of the average manufacturer price to wholesalers during the quarter for each dosage form and strength of a covered outpatient drug (after deducting customary prompt payment discounts); and

"(ii) the number of units of such form and dosage dispensed under the plan under this title in the State in the quarter (as reported by the State under subsection (b)(2).

"(2) MINIMUM AND MAXIMUM REBATE RATES FOR SINGLE SOURCE DRUGS AND INNOVATOR MULTIPLE SOURCE DRUGS.—In no case shall the amount of the rebate described in paragraph (1)(A) for a manufacturer for a calendar quarter with respect to single source drugs and innovator multiple source drugs—

"(A) be less than 10 percent, or

"(B) for calendar quarters beginning before April 1, 1995, be more than—

"(i) 25 percent (for each quarter during the 8-calendar-quarter period beginning April 1, 1991), or

"(ii)) 50 percent (for each quarter during the 8-calendar-quarter period beginning April 1, 1993), of the product of the price described in paragraph (1)(A)(i)(I) and the number of units described in paragraph (1)(A)(ii) for the quarter.

"(3) BEST PRICE DEFINED.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—In this subsection, the term 'best price' means, for a covered outpatient drug of a manufacturer dispensed in a calendar quarter—

"(i) the lowest price available for the drug from the manufacturer to any wholesaler, retailer, provider, nonprofit entity, or governmental entity within the United States during the quarter, or

"(ii) the lowest price in effect for the drug from the manufacturer to any wholesaler, retailer, provider, nonprofit entity, or governmental entity within the United States in effect on September 1, 1990, increased (for calendar quarters beginning on or after January 1, 1991) by the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers (all items; U.S. city average) from September 1990 to the month before the beginning of the calendar quarter involved, whichever is lower.

"(B) TREATMENT OF NEW DRUGS.—In the case of a covered outpatient drug approved for marketing after September 1, 1990, any reference in subparagraph (A)(ii) to 'September 1, 1990' or 'September 1990' shall be a reference to the first day of the first month, and the first month, respectively, during which the drug was marketed and any reference in subsection (b)(3)(A)(ii) to '30 days after the date of entering into an agreement under this section on the best price described in paragraph (3)(B) as of September 1, 1990' shall be a reference to '30 days after the date the drug is first marketed in the United States'.

"(C) COMPUTATION OF LOWEST PRICE.—The lowest price described in this paragraph shall be inclusive of cash discounts, free goods, volume discounts, and rebates, shall be determined without regard to special packaging, labeling, or identifiers on the dosage form or product or package, and shall not take into account prices that are merely nominal in amount.

"(d) DRUG USE REVIEW.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In order to meet the requirement of section 1902(a)(54)(C), a State shall provide, by not later than January 1, 1993, for a drug use review program described in paragraph (2) for covered outpatient drugs (other than psychopharmacologic drugs described in section 1919(c)(2)(D) dispensed to residents of nursing facilities) in order to assure, in accordance with any guidelines developed by the Agency for Health Care Policy and Research, that prescriptions (A) are appropriate and (B) are medically necessary.

"(2) DESCRIPTION OF PROGRAM.—Each drug use review program shall meet the following requirements for covered outpatient drugs and other prescription drugs for which payment may be made under this title:

"(A) PROSPECTIVE DRUG REVIEW.—The State plan shall provide for a review of drug therapy before each prescription is filled or delivered to the patient, typically at the point-of-sale or point-of-distribution. Each pharmacist shall use the compendia (referred to in subsection (f)(6)) as the pharmacist's source of standards for such review.

"(B) RETROSPECTIVE DRUG USE REVIEW.—The program shall provide, through its mechanized drug claims processing and information retrieval systems (approved by the Secretary under section 1903(r)) or otherwise, for the periodic examination of claims data and other records in order to identify patterns of fraud, abuse, gross overuse or underuse, or inappropriate or medically unnecessary care, among physicians, pharmacies, and patients, or associated with specific drugs or groups of drugs.

"(C) EDUCATIONAL PROGRAM.—The program shall educate physicians and pharmacists to identify and reduce the frequency of patterns of fraud, abuse, gross overuse or underuse, or inappropriate or medically unnecessary care, among physicians, pharmacies, and patients, or associated with specific drugs or groups of drugs, as well as potential and actual severe adverse reactions to drugs.

"(e) MISCELLANEOUS.—

"(1) LIMITATIONS ON COVERAGE OF OUTPATIENT DRUGS.—Nothing in section 1902(a)(54)(A) shall be construed as preventing a State from restricting the amount, duration, and scope of coverage of covered outpatient drugs consistent with section 1902(a)(30).

"(2) RELATION TO MAXIMUM ALLOWABLE COST LIMITATIONS.—This section shall not supercede or affect provisions relating to maximum allowable cost limitations for payment by States for covered outpatient drugs, and rebates under this section shall be made without regard to whether or not payment by the State for such drugs are subject to such limitations or the amount of such cost limitations.

"(3) EXCLUSION OF CERTAIN DRUG ASSOCIATED WITH EXCLUSIVE PATIENT MONITORING SERVICES.—Nothing in this title shall be construed as requiring a State to provide medical assistance for covered outpatient drugs of a manufacturer which requires, as a condition for the purchase of the drugs, that the manufacturer be paid for associated services or tests (such as patient monitoring systems) provided only by the manufacturer or its designee.

"(f) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

"(1) AVERAGE MANUFACTURER PRICE.—The term 'average manufacturer price' means, with respect to a covered outpatient drug of a manufacturer for a calendar quarter, the average price paid (taking into account customary prompt payment discounts) to the manufacturer for the drug by retail pharmacies or by wholesalers for drugs distributed to the retail pharmacy class of trade.

"(2) COVERED OUTPATIENT DRUG.—Subject to the exceptions in paragraph (3), the term 'covered outpatient drug' means—

"(A) of those drugs which are treated as prescribed drugs for purposes of section 1905(a)(12), a drug which may be dispensed only upon prescription (except as provided in paragraph (4)), and—

"(i) which is approved as a prescription drug under sections 505 or 507 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act;

"(ii)(I) which was commercially used or sold in the United States before the date of the enactment of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act and if at such time its labeling contained the same representations concerning its conditions of use as in its current labeling, or which is identical, similar, or related (within the meaning of section 310.6(b)(1) of title 21 of the Code of Federal Regulations) to such a drug, and (II) which has not been the subject of a final determination by the Secretary that it is a 'new drug' (within the meaning of section 201(p) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act) or an action brought by the Secretary under sections 301, 302(a), or 304(a) of such Act to enforce sections 502(f) or 505(a) of such Act; or

"(iii)(I) which is described in section 107(c)(3) of the Drug Amendments of 1962 and for which the Secretary has determined there is a compelling justification for its medical need, or is identical, similar, or related (within the meaning of section 310.6(b)(1) of title 21 of the Code of Federal Regulations) to such a drug, and (II) for which the Secretary has not issued a notice of an opportunity for a hearing under section 505(e) of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act on a proposed order of the Secretary to withdraw approval of an application for such drug under such section because the Secretary has determined that the drug is less than effective for all conditions of use prescribed, recommended, or suggested in its labeling;

"(B) a biological product which—

"(i) may only be dispensed upon prescription,

"(ii) is licensed under section 351 of the Public Health Service Act, and

"(iii) is produced at an establishment licensed under such section to produce such product; and

"(C) insulin certified under section 506 of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act.

"(3) LIMITING DEFINITION.—The term 'covered outpatient drug' does not include any drug, biological product, or insulin provided as part of, or as incident to, and in the same setting as, any of the following (and for which payment is made under this title as part of payment for the following and not as direct reimbursement for the drug):

"(A) Inpatient hospital services.

"(B) Hospice services.

"(C) Dental services, except that drugs for which the State plan authorizes direct reimbursement to the dispensing dentist are covered outpatient drugs.

"(D) Physician office visits.

"(E) Outpatient hospital emergency room visits.

"(F) Outpatient surgical procedures.

"(4) NONPRESCRIPTION DRUGS.—If a State plan for medical assistance under this title includes coverage of prescribed drugs as described in section 1905(a)(12) and permits coverage of drugs which may be sold without a prescription (commonly referred to as 'over-the-counter' drugs), if they are prescribed by a physician (or other person authorized to prescribe under State law), such a drug may be regarded as a covered outpatient drug.

"(5) MANUFACTURER.—The term 'manufacturer' means, with respect to a covered outpatient drug,—

"(A) the entity (if any) that both manufactures and distributes the drug, or

"(B) if no such entity exists, the entity that distributes the drug.

Such term does not include a wholesale distributor of the drug or a retail pharmacy licensed under State law.

"(6) MEDICALLY ACCEPTED INDICATION.—The term 'medically accepted indication' means any use for a covered outpatient drug which is approved under the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act or which is accepted by one or more of the following compendia: the American Hospital Formulary Service-Drug Information, the American Medical Association Drug Evaluations, and the United States Pharmacopeia-Drug Information.

"(7) MULTIPLE SOURCE DRUG; INNOVATOR MULTIPLE SOURCE DRUG; NONINNOVATOR MULTIPLE SOURCE DRUG; SINGLE SOURCE DRUG.—

"(A) DEFINITIONS.—

"(i) MULTIPLE SOURCE DRUG.—The term 'multiple source drug' means, with respect to a calendar quarter, a covered outpatient drug (not including any drug described in paragraph (4)) for which there are 2 or more drug products which—

"(I) are rated as therapeutically equivalent (under the Food and Drug Administration's most recent publication of 'Approved Drug Products with Therapeutic Equivalence Evaluations'),

"(II) except as provided in subparagraph (B), are pharmaceutically equivalent and bioequivalent, as defined in subparagraph (C) and as determined by the Food and Drug Administration, and

"(III) are sold or marketed in the State during the period.

"(ii) INNOVATOR MULTIPLE SOURCE DRUG.—The term 'innovator multiple source drug' means a multiple source drug that was originally marketed under an original new drug application approved by the Food and Drug Administration.

"(iii) NONINNOVATOR MULTIPLE SOURCE DRUG.—The term 'noninnovator multiple source drug' means a multiple source drug that is not an innovator multiple source drug.

"(iv) SINGLE SOURCE DRUG.—The term 'single source drug' means a covered outpatient drug which is not a multiple source drug.

"(B) EXCEPTION.—Subparagraph (A)(i)(II) shall not apply if the Food and Drug Administration changes by regulation (after an opportunity for public comment of 90 days) the requirement that, for purposes of the publication described in subparagraph (A)(i)(I), in order for drug products to be rated as therapeutically equivalent, they must be pharmaceutically equivalent and bioequivalent, as defined in subparagraph (C).

"(C) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this paragraph—

"(i) drug products are pharmaceutically equivalent if the products contain identical amounts of the same active drug ingredient in the same dosage form and meet compendial or other applicable standards of strength, quality, purity, and identity;

"(ii) drugs are bioequivalent if they do not present a known or potential bioequivalence problem, or, if they do present such a problem, they are shown to meet an appropriate standard of bioequivalence; and

"(iii) a drug product is considered to be sold or marketed in a State if it appears in a published national listing of average wholesale prices selected by the Secretary, provided that the listed product is generally available to the public through retail pharmacies in that State.

"(8) STATE AGENCY.—The term 'State agency' means the agency designated under section 1902(a)(5) to administer or supervise the administration of the State plan for medical assistance.".

(c) FUNDING.—

(1) DRUG USE REVIEW PROGRAMS.—Section 1903(a)(3) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396b(a)(3)) is amended—

(A) by striking "plus" at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting "and", and

(B) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(D) 75 percent of so much of the sums expended by the State plan during a quarter in 1991, 1992, or 1993, as the Secretary determines is attributable to the statewide adoption of a drug use review program which conforms to the requirements of section 1927(e); plus".

(2) TEMPORARY INCREASE IN FEDERAL MATCH FOR ADMINISTRATIVE COSTS.—The per centum to be applied under section 1903(a)(7) of the Social Security Act for amounts expended during calendar quarters in fiscal year 1991 which are attributable to administrative activities necessary to carry out section 1927 (other than subsection (d)) of such Act shall be 75 percent, rather than 50 per centum.

SEC. 4402. REQUIRING MEDICAID PAYMENT OF PREMIUMS AND COST-SHARING FOR ENROLLMENT UNDER GROUP HEALTH PLANS WHERE COST-EFFECTIVE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Title XIX of the Social Security Act is amended—

(1) in section 1902(a)(25) (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(25))—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (E),

(B) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (F), and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(G) that the State plan shall meet the requirements of section 1906 (relating to enrollment of individuals under group health plans in certain cases);"; and

(2) by inserting after section 1905 the following new section:

"ENROLLMENT OF INDIVIDUALS UNDER GROUP HEALTH PLANS

"SEC. 1906. (a) For purposes of section 1902(a)(25)(G) and subject to subsection (d), each State plan—

"(1) shall establish guidelines, consistent with subsection (b), to identify those cases in which enrollment of an individual otherwise entitled to medical assistance under this title in a group health plan (in which the individual is otherwise eligible to be enrolled) is cost-effective (as defined in subsection (e)(2));

"(2) shall require, in case of an individual so identified and as a condition of the individual being or remaining eligible for medical assistance under this title and subject to subsection (b)(2), notwithstanding any other provision of this title, that the individual (or in the case of a child, the child's parent) apply for enrollment in the group health plan; and

"(3) in the case of such enrollment, shall provide for payment of all enrollee premiums for such enrollment and all deductibles, coinsurance, and similar costs for items and services otherwise covered under the State plan under this title (exceeding the amount otherwise permitted under section 1916), and shall treat coverage under the group health plan as a third party liability (under section 1902(a)(25)).

"(b)(1) In establishing guidelines under subsection (a)(1), each State shall take into account that an individual may only be eligible to enroll in group health plans at limited times and only if other individuals (not entitled to medical assistance under the plan) are also enrolled in the plan simultaneously.

"(2) If a parent of a child fails to enroll the child in a group health plan in accordance with subsection (a)(2), such failure shall not affect the child's eligibility for benefits under this title.

"(c)(1)(A) In the case of payments of premiums, deductibles, coinsurance, and similar expenses under this section shall be considered, for purposes of section 1903(a), to be payments for medical assistance.

"(B) If all members of a family are not eligible for medical assistance under this title and enrollment of the members so eligible in a group health plan is not possible without also enrolling members not so eligible—

"(i) payment of premiums for enrollment of such other members shall be treated as payments for medical assistance for eligible individuals, if it would be cost-effective (taking into account payment of all such premiums), but

"(ii) payment of deductibles, coinsurance, and similar expenses for such other members shall not be treated as payments for medical assistance for eligible individuals.

"(2) In the case of a hospital, physician, or other provider that provides care covered under the State plan under a group health plan in which an individual entitled to medical assistance for such care is enrolled under this section, the provider is deemed to have agreed—

"(A) to accept as payment in full the payment amount recognized under the State plan (or, if greater, the payment amount provided under the plan), and

"(B) not to charge the individual or the State any amounts that would result in aggregate payment (including payments under the plan) exceeding the payment amount so recognized under the State plan.

"(3) The fact that an individual is enrolled in a group health plan under this section shall not change the individual's eligibility for benefits under the State plan, except insofar as section 1902(a)(25) provides that payment for such benefits shall first be made by such plan.

"(d)(1) Any different benefits made available, through enrollment under this section, to eligible individuals shall not, by reason of section 1902(a)(10), require such benefits be made available to other individuals.

"(2)(A) In the case of any State which is providing medical assistance to its residents under a waiver granted under section 1115, the Secretary shall require the State to meet the requirements of this section in the same manner as the State would be required to meet such requirement if the State had in effect a plan approved under this title.

"(B) This section, and section 1902(a)(25)(G), shall only apply to a State that is one of the 50 States or the District of Columbia.

"(e) In this section:

"(1) The term 'group health plan' has the meaning given such term in section 5000(b)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, and includes the provision of continuation coverage by such a plan pursuant to title XXII of the Public Health Service Act, section 4980B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, or title VI of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

"(2) The term 'cost-effective' means that the reduction in expenditures under this title with respect to an individual who is enrolled in a group health plan is likely to be greater than the additional expenditures for premiums and cost-sharing required under this section with respect to such enrollment.".

(b) TREATMENT OF ERRONEOUS EXCESS PAYMENTS FOR MEDICAL ASSISTANCE.—Section 1903(u)(1)(C)(iv) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396b(u)(1)(C)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: "or with respect to payments made in violation of section 1906".

1396a(e)) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(11)(A) In the case of an individual who is enrolled with a group health plan under section 1906 and who would (but for this paragraph) lose eligibility for benefits under this title before the end of the minimum enrollment period (defined in subparagraph (B)), the State plan may provide, notwithstanding any other provision of this title, that the individual shall be deemed to continue to be eligible for such benefits until the end of such minimum period, but only with respect to such benefits provided to the individual as an enrollee of such plan.

"(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the term 'minimum enrollment period' means, with respect to an individual's enrollment with a group health plan, a period established by the State, of not more than 6 months beginning on the date the individual's enrollment under the plan becomes effective.".

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Section 1905(a) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "The payment described in the first sentence may include expenditures for medicare cost-sharing and for premiums under part B of title XVIII for individuals who are eligible for medical assistance under the plan and (A) are receiving aid or assistance under any plan of the State approved under title I, X, XIV, or XVI, or part A of title IV, or with respect to whom supplemental security income benefits are being paid under title XVI, or (B) with respect to whom there is being paid a State supplementary payment and are eligible for medical assistance equal in amount, duration, and scope to the medical assistance made available to individuals described in section 1902(a)(10)(A), and, except in the case of individuals 65 years of age or older and disabled individuals entitled to health insurance benefits under title XVIII who are not enrolled under part B of title XVIII, other insurance premiums for medical or any other type of remedial care or the cost thereof.".

(2) Section 1903(a)(1) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396b(a)(1)) is amended by striking "(including expenditures for" and all that follows through "or the cost thereof)".

(e) EFFECTIVE DATE.—(1) The amendments made by this section apply (except as provided under paragraph (2)) to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning on or after January 1, 1991, without regard to whether or not final regulations to carry out such amendments have been promulgated by such date.

(2) In the case of a State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of the Social Security Act which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines requires State legislation (other than legislation authorizing or appropriating funds) in order for the plan to meet the additional requirements imposed by the amendments made by subsection (a), the State plan shall not be regarded as failing to comply with the requirements of such title solely on the basis of its failure to meet this additional requirement before the first day of the first calendar quarter beginning after the close of the first regular session of the State legislature that begins after the date of the enactment of this Act. For purposes of the previous sentence, in the case of a State that has a 2-year legislative session, each year of such session shall be deemed to be a separate regular session of the State legislature.

SEC. 4403. COMPUTER MATCHING AND PRIVACY REVISIONS.

(a) VERIFICATION REQUIREMENTS.—Subsection (p) of section 552a of title 5, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"(p) VERIFICATION AND OPPORTUNITY TO CONTEST FINDINGS.—(1) In order to protect any individual whose records are used in a matching program, no recipient agency, non-Federal agency, or source agency may suspend, terminate, reduce, or make a final denial of any financial assistance or payment under a Federal benefit program to such individual, or take other adverse action against such individual, as a result of information produced by such matching program, until—

"(A)(i) the agency has independently verified the information; or

"(ii) the Data Integrity Board of the agency, or in the case of a non-Federal agency the Data Integrity Board of the source agency, determines in accordance with guidance issued by the Director of the Office of Management and Budget that—

"(I) the information is limited to identification and amount of benefits paid by the source agency under a Federal benefit program; and

"(II) there is a high degree of confidence that the information provided to the recipient agency is accurate;

"(B) the individual receives a notice from the agency containing a statement of its findings and informing the individual of the opportunity to contest such findings; and

"(C)(i) the expiration of any time period established for the program by statute or regulation for the individual to respond to that notice; or

"(ii) in the case of a program for which no such period is established, the end of the 30-day period beginning on the date on which notice under subparagraph (B) is mailed or otherwise provided to the individual.

"(2) Independent verification referred to in paragraph (1) requires investigation and confirmation of specific information relating to an individual that is used as a basis for an adverse action against the individual, including where applicable investigation and confirmation of—

"(A) the amount of any asset or income involved;

"(B) whether such individual actually has or had access to such asset or income for such individual's own use; and

"(C) the period or periods when the individual actually had such asset or income.

"(3) Notwithstanding paragraph (1), an agency may take any appropriate action otherwise prohibited by such paragraph if the agency determines that the public health or public safety may be adversely affected or significantly threatened during any notice period required by such paragraph.".

(b) ISSUANCE OF GUIDANCE BY DIRECTOR OF OMB.—Not later than 90 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall publish guidance under subsection (p)(1)(A)(ii) of section 552a of title 5, United States Code, as amended by this section.

(c) LIMITATION ON APPLICATION OF VERIFICATION REQUIREMENT.—Section 552a(p)(1)(A)(ii)(II) of title 5, United States Code, as amended by subsection (a), shall not apply to a program referred to in paragraph (1), (2), or (4) of section 1137(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1320b-7), until the earlier of—

(1) the date on which the Data Integrity Board of the Federal agency which administers that program determines that there is not a high degree of confidence that information provided by that agency under Federal matching programs is accurate; or

(2) 30 days after the date of publication of guidance under subsection (b).

PART 2—PROTECTION OF LOW-INCOME MEDICARE BENEFICIARIES

SEC. 4411. EXTENDING MEDICAID PAYMENT FOR MEDICARE PREMIUMS FOR CERTAIN INDIVIDUALS WITH INCOME BELOW 125 PERCENT OF THE OFFICIAL POVERTY LINE.

(a) ENTITLEMENT.—Section 1902(a)(10)(E)(ii) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1395b(a)(10)(E)(ii)) is amended by inserting "(I)" before "for qualified" and by inserting before the comma the following: "and (II) subject to section 1905(p)(4), for individuals who would be qualified medicare beneficiaries described in section 1905(p)(1) but for the fact that their income exceeds the income level established by the State under section 1905(p)(2) but is less than 125 percent of the official poverty line (referred to in such section) for a family of the size involved".

(b) FEDERAL PAYMENT OF FULL COSTS OF ADDITIONAL MEDICAL ASSISTANCE.—The last sentence of section 1905(b) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(b)) is amended by inserting before the period at the end the following: "and with respect to amounts expended for medicare cost-sharing described in subsection (p)(3)(A)(i) for individuals described in section 1902(a)(10)(E)(ii)(II)".

(c) APPLICATION IN CERTAIN STATES AND TERRITORIES.—Section 1905(p)(4) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(p)(4)) is amended—

(1) in subparagraph (B), by inserting "or 1902(a)(10)(E)(ii)(II)" after "subparagraph (B)", and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"In the case of any State which is providing medical assistance to its residents under a waiver granted under section 1115, the Secretary shall require the State to meet the requirement of section 1902(a)(10)(E) in the same manner as the State would be required to meet such requirement if the State had in effect a plan approved under this title."

(d) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1843(h) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395v(h)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) In this subsection, the term 'qualified medicare beneficiary' also includes an individual described in section 1902(a)(10)(E)(ii)(II).".

(e) DELAY IN COUNTING SOCIAL SECURITY COLA INCREASES UNTIL NEW POVERTY GUIDELINES PUBLISHED.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1905(p) of such Act is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1)(B), by inserting ", except as provided in paragraph (2)(D)" after "supplementary social security income program", and

(B) by adding at the end of paragraph (2) the following new subparagraph:

"(D)(i) In determing under this subsection the income of an individual who is entitled to monthly insurance benefits under title II for a transition month (as defined in clause (ii)) in a year, such income shall not include any amounts attributable to an increase in the level of monthly insurance benefits payable under such title which have occurred pursuant to section 215(i) for benefits payable for months beginning with December of the previous year.

"(ii) For purposes of clause (i), the term 'transition month' means each month in a year through the month following the month in which the annual revision of the official poverty line, referred to in subparagraph (A), is published.".

(2) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 1902(m) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(m)) is amended—

(A) in paragraph (1)(B), by inserting ", except as provided in paragraph (2)(C)" after "supplemental security income program", and

(B) by adding at the end of paragraph (2) the following new subparagraph:

"(C) The provisions of section 1905(p)(2)(D) shall apply to determinations of income under this subsection in the same manner as they apply to determinations of income under section 1905(p).".

(f) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to calendar quarters beginning on or after January 1, 1991, without regard to whether or not regulations to implement such amendments are promulgated by such date; except that the amendments made by subsection (d) shall apply to determinations of income for months beginning with January 1991.

PART 3—IMPROVEMENTS IN CHILD HEALTH

SEC. 4421. PHASED-IN MANDATORY COVERAGE OF CHILDREN UP TO 100 PERCENT OF POVERTY LEVEL.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1902 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a), as amended by section 6401(a) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989, is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(10)(A)(i)—

(A) by striking "or" at the end of subclause (V),

(B) by striking the semicolon at the end of subclause (VI) and inserting ", or", and

(C) by adding at the end the following new subclause:

"(VII) who are described in subparagraph (D) of subsection (l)(1) and whose family income does not exceed the income level the State is required to establish under subsection (l)(2)(C) for such a family;";

(2) in subsection (a)(10)(A)(ii)(IX), by striking "or clause (i)(VI)" and inserting ", clause (i)(VI), or clause (i)(VII)";

(3) in subsection (l)—

(A) by amending subparagraph (D) of paragraph (1) to read as follows:

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) The amendments made by subsection (a) apply to payments under title XIX of the Social Security Act for calendar quarters beginning on or after July 1, 1991, without regard to whether or not final regulations to carry out such amendments have been promulgated by such date.

(2) The amendment made by subsection (b) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of section 9407(b) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1986.

SEC. 4425. ROLE IN PATERNITY DETERMINATIONS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 1912(a)(1)(B) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396k(a)(1)(B)) is amended by inserting "the individual is described in section 1902(l)(1)(A) or" after "unless (in either case)".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4426. REPORT AND TRANSITION ON ERRORS IN ELIGIBILITY DETERMINATIONS.

(a) REPORT.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall report to Congress, by not later than July 1, 1991, on error rates by States in determining eligibility of individuals described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 1902(l)(1) of the Social Security Act for medical assistance under plans approved under title XIX of such Act. Such report may include data for medical assistance provided before July 1, 1989.

(b) ERROR RATE TRANSITION.—There shall not be taken into account, for purposes of section 1903(u) of the Social Security Act, payments and expenditures for medical assistance which—

(1) are attributable to medical assistance for individuals described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 1902(l)(1) of such Act, and

(2) are made on or after July 1, 1989, and before the first calendar quarter that begins more than 12 months after the date of submission of the report under subsection (a).

PART 4—NURSING HOME REFORM PROVISIONS

SEC. 4431. MEDICAID NURSING HOME REFORM.

(a) NURSE AIDE TRAINING.—

(1) NO COMPLIANCE ACTIONS BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE OF GUIDELINES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall not take (and shall not continue) any action against a State under section 1904 of the Social Security Act on the basis of the State's failure to meet the requirement of section 1919(e)(1)(A) of such Act before the effective date of guidelines, issued by the Secretary, establishing requirements under section 1919(f)(2)(A)(ii)(I) of such Act, if the State demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that it has made a good faith effort to meet such requirement before such effective date.

(2) CLARIFICATION OF GRACE PERIOD FOR NURSE TRAINING OF INDIVIDUALS.—Section 1919(b)(5)(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(b)(5)(A)) is amended—

(A) by striking "for more than 4 months", and

(B) by striking the period at the end and inserting a semicolon and the following:
"except that such requirement shall not apply to an individual who has been used (on a full-time, temporary, per diem, or other basis) as a nurse aide for less than 90 days in any nursing facility.".

(3) CLARIFICATION OF NURSE AIDES NOT SUBJECT TO CHARGES.—Section 1919(f)(2)(A)(iv)(II) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(f)(2)(A)(iv)(II)) is amended by inserting after "nurse aide" the following: "who is employed by (or who has entered into an employment agreement with) a facility".

(4) MODIFICATION OF NURSING FACILITY DEFICIENCY STANDARDS.—Section 1919(f)(2)(B)(iii)(I) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(f)(2)(B)(iii)(I)) is amended to read as follows:

"(I) offered by or in a nursing facility which, within the previous 2 years, has operated under a waiver under subsection (b)(4)(C)(ii) or has been subject to an extended (or partial extended) survey under subsection (g)(2)(B)(i), or".

(5) CLARIFICATION OF STATE RESPONSIBILITY TO DETERMINE COMPETENCY.—Section 1919(f)(2)(B) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(f)(2)(B)) is amended, in the second sentence, by inserting "(through subcontract or otherwise)" after "may not delegate".

(6) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this subsection shall take effect as if they were included in the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

(b) PREADMISSION SCREENING AND ANNUAL RESIDENT REVIEW.—

(1) NO COMPLIANCE ACTIONS BEFORE EFFECTIVE DATE OF GUIDELINES.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall not take (and shall not continue) any action against a State under section 1904 or section 1919(e)(7)(D) of the Social Security Act on the basis of the State's failure to meet the requirement of section 1919(e)(7)(A) of such Act before the effective date of guidelines, issued by the Secretary, establishing minimum criteria under section 1919(f)(8)(A) of such Act, if the State demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that it has made a good faith effort to meet such requirement before such effective date.

(2) CLARIFICATION WITH RESPECT TO ADMISSIONS AND READMISSION FROM A HOSPITAL.—Section 1919 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r) is amended—

(A) in subsection (b)(3)(F), by striking "A nursing facility" and by inserting "Except as provided in clauses (ii) and (iii) of subsection (e)(7)(A), a nursing facility"; and

(B) in subsection (e)(7)(A)—

(i) by redesignating the first 2 sentences as clause (i) with the following heading (and appropriate indentation):

"(i) IN GENERAL.—", and

(ii) by adding at the end the following:

"(ii) CLARIFICATION WITH RESPECT TO CERTAIN READMISSIONS.—The preadmission screening program under clause (i) need not provide for determinations in the case of the readmission to a nursing facility of an individual who, after being admitted to the nursing facility, was transferred for care in a hospital.

"(iii) EXCEPTION FOR CERTAIN HOSPITAL DISCHARGES.—The preadmission screening program under clause (i) shall not apply to the admission to a nursing facility of an individual—

"(I) who is admitted to the facility directly from a hospital after receiving acute inpatient care at the hospital,

"(II) who requires nursing facility services for the condition for which the individual received care in the hospital, and

"(III) whose attending physician has certified, before admission to the facility, that the individual is likely to require less than 30 days of nursing facility services.".

(3) DELAY IN APPLICATION TO PRIVATE PAY RESIDENTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 1919(e)(7) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(e)(7)) is amended—

(i) in subparagraph (A), as amended by paragraph (2)(B) of this subsection—

(I) in clause (i), by inserting "except as provided in clause (iv)," after "January 1, 1989,", and

(II) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iv) DELAY IN APPLICATION OF PREADMISSION SCREENING FOR PRIVATE PAY RESIDENTS.—In the case of an individual who, at the time of admission to a nursing facility, is not entitled to benefits under this title, the preadmission screening requirements of this subparagraph shall not apply until such time as the resident is so entitled and, in such case, the preadmission screening requirements shall apply as of the end of the day following the date on which the individual is determined to be so entitled. The previous sentence shall not be construed as prohibiting a State from imposing such a preadmission screening requirement with respect to individuals not so entitled at the time of admission."; and

(ii) in subparagraph (B)—

(I) in clauses (i) and (ii), by inserting "except as provided in clause (iv)," after "April 1, 1990," each place it appears,

(II) in clause (iii)(III), by inserting ", except as provided in clause (iv)" after "April 1, 1990", and

(III) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iv) DELAY IN APPLICATION OF ANNUAL RESIDENT REVIEW FOR PRIVATE PAY RESIDENTS.—In the case of an individual who, at the time of admission to a nursing facility, is not entitled to benefits under this title, the annual resident review requirements of this subparagraph shall not apply until such time as the resident is so entitled. The previous sentence shall not be construed as prohibiting a State from imposing such an annual resident review requirement with respect to individuals not so entitled at the time of admission.".

(B) NO COMPLIANCE ACTION FOR PREVIOUS NONCOMPLIANCE.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services may not impose any sanction against a State under section 1904 or section 1919(e)(7)(D) of the Social Security Act due to the State's failure to comply with the preadmission screening requirements of section 1919(e)(7)(A) of such Act insofar as such requirements applied with respect to individuals not entitled to benefits under title XIX of such Act at the time of their admission.

(4) DENIAL OF PAYMENTS FOR CERTAIN RESIDENTS NOT REQUIRING NURSING FACILITY SERVICES.—Section 1919(e)(7) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1395r(e)(7)) is amended—

(A) in subparagraph (D)—

(i) in the heading, by striking "WHERE FAILURE TO CONDUCT PREADMISSION SCREENING",

(ii) by designating the first sentence as clause (i) with the following heading (and appropriate indentation):

"(i) FOR FAILURE TO CONDUCT PREADMISSION SCREENING OR ANNUAL REVIEW.—", and

(iii) by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(ii) FOR CERTAIN RESIDENTS NOT REQUIRING NURSING FACILITY LEVEL OF SERVICES.—No payment may be made under section 1903(a) with respect to nursing facility services furnished to an individual (other than an individual described in subparagraph (C)(i)) who does not require the level of services provided by a nursing facility."; and

(B) in subparagraph (E), by striking "the requirement of this paragraph" and inserting "the requirements of subparagraphs (A) through (C) of this paragraph".

(5) NO DELEGATION OF AUTHORITY TO CONDUCT SCREENING AND REVIEWS.—Section 1919 of such Act is further amended—

(A) in subsection (b)(3)(F), by adding at the end the following:

"A State mental health authority and a State mental retardation or developmental disability authority may not delegate (by subcontract or otherwise) their responsibilities under this subparagraph to a nursing facility (or to an entity that has a direct or indirect affiliation or relationship with such a facility).''; and

(B) in subsection (e)(7)(B), as amended by paragraph (3)(A)(ii) of this subsection, by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(v) PROHIBITION OF DELEGATION.—A State mental health authority, a State mental retardation or developmental disability authority, and a State may not delegate (by subcontract or otherwise) their responsibilities under this subparagraph to a nursing facility (or to an entity that has a direct or indirect affiliation or relationship with such a facility).".

(6) ANNUAL REPORTS.—

(A) STATE REPORTS.—Section 1919(e)(7)(C) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(e)(7)(C)) is amended by adding at the end the following new clause:

"(iv) ANNUAL REPORT.—Each State shall report to the Secretary annually concerning the number and disposition of residents described in each of clauses (ii) and (iii).".

(B) SECRETARIAL REPORT.—Section 4215 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987 is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "Each such report shall also include a summary of the information reported by States under section 1919(e)(7)(C)(iv) of such Act.".

(7) REVISION OF ALTERNATIVE DISPOSITION PLANS.—Section 1919(e)(7)(E) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(e)(7)(E)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "The State may revise such an agreement, subject to the approval of the Secretary, before October 1, 1991, but only if, under the revised agreement, all residents subject to the agreement who do not require the level of services of such a facility are discharged from the facility by not later than April 1, 1994.".

(8) DEFINITION OF MENTALLY ILL.—Section 1919(e)(7)(G)(i) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(e)(7)(G)(i)) is amended by striking "primary or secondary" and all that follows through "3rd edition)" and inserting "serious mental illness (as defined by the Secretary)".

(9) SUBSTITUTION OF "SPECIALIZED SERVICES" FOR "ACTIVE TREATMENT".—Sections 1919(b)(3)(F) and 1919(e)(7) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(b)(3)(F), 1396r(e)(7)) are each amended by striking "active treatment" and "ACTIVE TREATMENT" each place either appears and inserting "specialized services" and "SPECIALIZED SERVICES", respectively.

(10) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the amendments made by this subsection shall take effect as if they were included in the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

(B) EXCEPTION.—The amendments made by paragraphs (3), (5), (7), and (9) shall take effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, without regard to whether or not regulations to implement such amendments have been promulgated.

(c) ENFORCEMENT PROCESS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall not take (and shall not continue) any action against a State under section 1904 of the Social Security Act on the basis of the State's failure to meet the requirements of section 1919(h)(2) of such Act before the effective date of guidelines, issued by the Secretary, regarding the establishment of remedies by the State under such section, if the State demonstrates to the satisfaction of the Secretary that it has made a good faith effort to meet such requirements before such effective date.

(d) SUPERVISION OF HEALTH CARE OF RESIDENTS OF NURSING FACILITIES BY NURSE PRACTITIONERS AND CLINICAL NURSE SPECIALISTS ACTING IN COLLABORATION WITH PHYSICIANS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Section 1919(b)(6)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r(b)(6)(A)) is amended by inserting "(or, at the option of a State, under the supervision of a nurse practitioner or clinical nurse specialist who is not an employee of the facility but who is working in collaboration with a physician)" after "physician".

(2) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by paragraph (1) applies with respect to nursing facility services furnished on or after October 1, 1990, without regard to whether or not final regulations to carry out such amendment have been promulgated by such date.

(e) OTHER AMENDMENTS.—

(1) ASSURANCE OF APPROPRIATE PAYMENT AMOUNTS.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—Section 1902(a)(13)(A) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(a)(13)(A)) is amended by inserting "(including the costs of services required to attain or maintain the highest practicable physical, mental, and psychosocial well-being of each resident eligible for benefits under this title)" after "take into account the costs".

(18) EFFECTIVE DATES.—The amendments made by this subsection (other than by paragraphs (8) and (13)) shall take effect as if they were included in the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

PART 5—MISCELLANEOUS

Subpart A—Payments

SEC. 4441. STATE MEDICAID MATCHING PAYMENTS THROUGH VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS AND STATE TAXES.

(a) VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTIONS.—Section 1902 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(s)(1)(A) Subject to subparagraphs (B) and (C), financial participation described in subsection (a)(2) may include the application of private funds donated by hospitals to, and subject to the unrestricted control of, the State.

"(B) Financial participation—

"(i) may not include donations to the extent their aggregate amount exceeds in any Federal fiscal year 10 percent of the non-Federal portion of expenditures under the plan in the year, and

"(ii) may not include donations made by, or on behalf of, or with respect to, any particular hospital, to the extent that their aggregate amount in an annual cost reporting period exceeds 10 percent of the gross revenues of the hospital (not taking into account any Federal revenues under this title or under title V or title XVIII).

"(C) For purposes of this paragraph, the fact that a hospital may receive some benefit from a transfer of funds to a State shall not prevent the transfer from being treated as the donation of funds, unless the amount of benefit to the hospital is directly related, in timing and amount, to the timing and amount of the transfer.".

(b) STATE TAX CONTRIBUTIONS.—Section 1902(s) of such Act, added by the amendment made by subsection (a), is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) Nothing in this title (including sections 1903(a) and 1905(a)) shall be construed as authorizing the Secretary to deny or limit payments to a State for expenditures, for medical assistance for items or services, attributable to taxes (whether or not of general applicability) imposed with respect to the provision of such items or services.".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) VOLUNTARY CONTRIBUTION.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to funds donated on or after January 1, 1991.

(2) STATE TAX CONTRIBUTION.—The amendment made by subsection (b) shall take effect on January 1, 1991.

SEC. 4442. DISPROPORTIONATE SHARE HOSPITALS: COUNTING OF INPATIENT DAYS AND TREATMENT OF CAPITAL PASS-THROUGHS.

(a) CLARIFICATION OF MEDICAID DISPROPORTIONATE SHARE ADJUSTMENT CALCULATION.—Section 1923(b)(2) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r-4(b)(2)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "In this paragraph, the term 'inpatient day' includes each day in which an individual (including a newborn) is an inpatient in the hospital, whether or not the individual is in a specialized ward and whether or not the individual remains in the hospital for lack of suitable placement elsewhere.".

(b) FEDERAL FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION FOR MEDICAID CAPITAL PAYMENTS.—Section 1902(h) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a(h)) is amended by inserting "(including pass-through payments for capital costs)" after "payment adjustments".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATES.—

(1) CLARIFICATION OF INPATIENT DAYS.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on July 1, 1990.

(2) FEDERAL FINANCIAL PARTICIPATION.—The amendment made by subsection (b) shall be effective as if included in the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981.

SEC. 4443. DISPROPORTIONATE SHARE HOSPITALS: ALTERNATIVE STATE PAYMENT ADJUSTMENTS AND SYSTEMS.

(a) ALTERNATIVE STATE PAYMENT ADJUSTMENTS.—Section 1923(c) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r-4(c)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (1);

(2) by adding "or" at the end of paragraph (2); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) provide for a minimum specified additional payment amount (or increased percentage payment) based on a formula that takes into account the characteristics of patients of categories of disproportionate share hospitals in the State and that does not take into account (and is not related in timing or amount to) the amount or timing of any voluntary contribution directly or indirectly by such a hospital;".

(b) CLARIFICATION OF SPECIAL RULE FOR STATE USING HEALTH INSURING ORGANIZATION.—Section 1923(e)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r-4(e)(2)) is amended by striking "during the 3-year period".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall take effect as if included in the enactment of section 412(a)(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1987.

SEC. 4444. DISPROPORTIONATE SHARE HOSPITALS: MINIMUM PAYMENT ADJUSTMENT FOR CERTAIN HOSPITALS.

Section 1923 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r-4) is amended—

(1) in subsection (c), by striking "In order" and inserting "Except as provided in subsection (f), in order"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(f) MINIMUM PAYMENT ADJUSTMENT FOR CERTAIN HOSPITALS.—

"(1) AMOUNT OF PAYMENT.—In the case of a hospital described in paragraph (2), the appropriate increase in the rate or amount of payments required under subsection (a)(1)(B) shall be equal to at least one-half of the amount paid under the State plan to the hospital for operating costs for inpatient hospital services (of the kind described in section 1886(a)(4)), except that the aggregate payments made to such a hospital by a State during a fiscal year under the plan may not exceed the reasonable costs to such hospital of providing inpatient and outpatient hospital services to individuals eligible for benefits under this title during the year.

"(2) DESCRIPTION OF HOSPITAL.—A hospital described in this paragraph is a hospital that—

"(A) is a nonprofit, private entity which is not a teaching hospital;

"(B) has a medicaid inpatient utilization rate (as defined in subsection (b)(2)) of at least 45 percent;

"(C) has a private pay utilization rate (as defined in paragraph (3)) of not more than 8 percent; and

"(D) is located in a health manpower shortage area (as defined in section 332 of the Public Health Service Act) in a State which had a waiver approved and in effect under section 1915(b)(4) as of the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(3) DEFINITION.—In paragraph (2)(C), the term 'private pay utilization rate' means, for a hospital, a fraction (expressed as a percentage), the numerator of which is the hospital's number of inpatient days attributable to patients who (for such days) have private third party coverage of health benefits in a period, and the denominator of which is the total number of the hospital's inpatient days in that period.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1923(b)(2) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396r-4(b)(2)) is amended by striking "(1)(A)" and inserting "(1)(A) and subsection (f)".

(c) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to calendar quarters beginning on or after January 1, 1991, and before October 1, 1993, without regard to whether or not regulations to implement such amendments have been promulgated by such date.

(4) by striking the last sentence.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall be effective as if included in the amendments made by section 6408(c)(1) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1989.

SEC. 4447. LIMITATIONS ON DISALLOWANCE OF CERTAIN INPATIENT PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL SERVICES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services may not disallow or defer Federal financial participation under section 1903(a) of the Social Security Act for inpatient psychiatric hospital services for individuals under age 21 under paragraph (16) of section 1905(a) of such Act in a State in which the Inspector General of the Department of Health and Human Services has initiated or completed reviews or audits of such services (but for which services the Secretary has not issued a disallowance notice) as of October 11, 1990, on the ground that the facilities in the State did not meet the requirement of section 1905(h)(1)(B)(ii) of such Act, except as provided in subsection (b).

(b) LIMITATIONS ON DISALLOWANCE.—With respect to services described in subsection (a)—

(1) the Secretary may disallow or defer Federal financial participation only for services provided to an individual eligible under title XIX of the Social Security Act before the date the facility is able to document (through plan of care or utilization review procedures) that the services in the facility on an inpatient basis are necessary (as described in section 1905(h)(1)(B)(ii) of the Social Security Act);

(2) the Secretary may disallow or defer Federal financial participation only for services for which facilities in the State did not meet the requirement of section 1905(h)(1)(B)(ii) of such Act during the 3-year period ending on the date an audit is initiated with respect to such services; and

(3) the disallowance of Federal financial participation during the period in which the requirement of section 1905(h)(1)(B)(ii) of such Act was not met by facilities in the State with respect to such services may not exceed 25 percent of the amount of the disallowance that would otherwise be made in accordance with this section.

(c) EFFECTIVENESS.—This section shall apply to disallowance actions that are pending or for which there has not been a final judicial decision as of the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 4448. TREATMENT OF INTEREST ON INDIANA DISALLOWANCE.

With respect to any disallowance of Federal financial participation under section 1903(a) of the Social Security Act for intermediate care facility services, intermediate care facility services for the mentally retarded, or skilled nursing facility services on the ground that the facilities in the State of Indiana were not certified in accordance with law during the period beginning June 1, 1982, and ending September 30, 1984, payment of such disallowance may be deferred without interest that would otherwise accrue without regard to this subsection, until every opportunity to appeal has been exhausted.

Subpart B—Eligibility and Coverage

(a) OPTIONAL PAYMENT OF COBRA PREMIUMS FOR QUALIFIED COBRA CONTINUATION BENEFICIARIES.—Section 1902 of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396a) is amended—

(1) in subsection (a)(10)—

(A) by striking "and" at the end of subparagraph (D),

(B) by adding "and" at the end of subparagraph (E),

(C) by inserting after subparagraph (E) the following new subparagraph:

"(F) at the option of a State, for making medical assistance available for COBRA premiums (as defined in subsection (t)(2)) for qualified COBRA continuation beneficiaries described in section 1902(t)(1);", and

(D) in the matter following subparagraph (E), by striking "and" before "(X)" and by inserting before the semicolon at the end the following: ", and (XI) the medical assistance made available to an individual described in subsection (t)(1) who is eligible for medical assistance only because of subparagraph (F) shall be limited to medical assistance for COBRA continuation premiums (as defined in subsection (t)(2))"; and

(2) by adding after the subsection added by section 4441(a) the following new subsection:

"(t)(1) Individuals described in this paragraph are individuals—

"(A) who are entitled to elect COBRA continuation coverage (as defined in paragraph (3)),

"(B) whose income (as determined under section 1612 for purposes of the supplemental security income program) does not exceed 100 percent of the official poverty line (as defined by the Office of Management and Budget, and revised annually in accordance with section 673(2) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981) applicable to a family of the size involved,

"(C) whose resources (as determined under section 1613 for purposes of the supplemental security income program) do not exceed twice the maximum amount of resources that an individual may have and obtain benefits under that program, and

"(D) with respect to whose enrollment for COBRA continuation coverage the State has determined that the savings in expenditures under this title resulting from such enrollment is likely to exceed the amount of payments for COBRA premiums made.

"(2) For purposes of subsection (a)(10)(F) and this subsection, the term 'COBRA premiums' means the applicable premium imposed with respect to COBRA continuation coverage.

"(3) In this subsection, the term 'COBRA continuation coverage' means coverage under a group health plan provided pursuant to title XXII of the Public Health Service Act, section 4980B of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986, or title VI of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974.

"(4) Notwithstanding subsection (a)(17), for individuals described in paragraph (1) who are covered under the State plan by virtue of subsection (a)(10)(A)(ii)(XI)—

"(A) the income standard to be applied is the income standard described in paragraph (1)(B), and

"(B) except as provided in section 1612(b)(4)(B)(ii), costs incurred for medical care or for any other type of remedial care shall not be taken into account in determining income.

Any different treatment provided under this paragraph for such individuals shall not, because of subsection (a)(10)(B) or (a)(17), require or permit such treatment for other individuals.".

"(C) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply with respect to any period for which the Secretary of Health and Human Services determines that the number of medicaid beneficiaries enrolled with health insuring organizations described in subparagraph (B) exceeds 10 percent of the number of such beneficiaries in the State of California.

"(D) In this paragraph, the term 'medicaid beneficiary' means an individual who is entitled to medical assistance under the State plan under title XIX of the Social Security Act, other than a qualified medicare beneficiary who is only entitled to such assistance because of section 1902(a)(10)(E) of such title.".

Subpart D—Demonstration Projects and Home and Community-Based Waivers

SEC. 4471. MEDICAID LONG-TERM CARE INSURANCE DEMONSTRATION PROJECT.

(a) AUTHORIZATION OF PROJECTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (in this section referred to as the "Secretary"), upon application by any State may approve demonstration projects (each in this section referred to as a "project") under which covered long-term care beneficiaries (as defined in paragraph (3)(A)) who are 65 years of age or older and who have exhausted benefits under the qualified long-term care insurance policy are made eligible under the special rules specified in paragraph (2) to receive benefits with respect to long-term care services (as defined in paragraph (3)(B)) under the State medicaid plan. Expenditures with respect to such benefits shall be considered to be medical assistance for purposes of section 1903(a) of the Social Security Act.

(2) SPECIAL ELIGIBILITY PROVISIONS.—

(A) INITIAL ELIGIBILITY.—In determining the initial eligibility for medical assistance with respect to long-term care services under the State medicaid plan—

(i) the income of each covered long-term care beneficiary who is 65 years of age or older and who has exhausted benefits under the qualified long-term care insurance policy shall be disregarded, and

(ii) subject to subparagraph (D), the valuation of the assets of such beneficiary shall be reduced by the amount of protection provided under the long-term care insurance policy recognized under the project.

(B) POST-ELIGIBILITY.—The amount such a beneficiary is required to contribute toward the cost of long-term care services shall be the same as other individuals entitled to such services under the State plan, except that, subject to subparagraph (D), the valuation of the assets of the beneficiary shall be reduced by the amount of protection provided under the long-term care insurance policy recognized under the project.

(C) NONDISCRIMINATION.—Except as specified in this paragraph, a State medicaid plan may not discriminate, in the services covered or otherwise, against any individual based on whether or not the individual participates in a project under this section.

(D) MAXIMUM LEVEL OF ASSET PROTECTION.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—In no case shall the valuation of assets of a beneficiary be reduced by more than the maximum benefit level of the qualified long-term care insurance policy or the amount specified in clause (ii), whichever is less.

(ii) INDEXED LIMIT.—The amount specified in this clause is $75,000 increased by the same percentage as the percentage increase in the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers (all items; U.S. city average) from December 1991 to December of the year preceding the year involved.

(3) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(A) The term "covered long-term care beneficiary" means an individual who at any time purchases benefits under a qualified long-term care insurance policy, and who voluntarily elects, at the time of purchase of such policy, to participate in the project.

(B) The term "long-term care services" means medical assistance for the following items and services, to the extent the State medicaid plan otherwise makes medical assistance available to individuals entitled to benefits under the plan:

(i) Nursing facility services.

(ii) Home health care services (described in section 1905(a)(7) of the Social Security Act).

(iii) Private duty nursing services.

(iv) Case management services.

(v) Homemaker/home health aide services.

(vi) Personal care services.

(vii) Adult day health services.

(viii) Respite care.

(C) The term "State medicaid plan" means the plan of medical assistance of a State approved under title XIX of the Social Security Act.

(D) The term "qualified long-term care insurance policy" means a long-term care insurance policy that meets the requirements of subsection (e).

(b) TERMS OF PROJECTS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary may not approve a project of a State under this section unless the Secretary finds that the project meets the following requirements:

(A) The terms of the project are disclosed to each individual before the individual is enrolled under the project.

(B) Subject to subsection (e)(8)(C), any qualified long-term care insurance policy made available in conjunction with the project cannot condition, or otherwise limit, payment under the policy in any manner because the insured is eligible for, or payment may be made, for services under any public program (including the medicare or medicaid programs).

(2) LIMIT ON NUMBER OF LIVES INSURED UNDER ALL PROJECTS.—The Secretary shall approve projects under this section in a manner that assures that there are never more than 25,000 covered long-term care beneficiaries under all the projects. The Secretary, consistent with the previous sentence, may require that a project of a State must permit enrollment of a minimum number of covered long-term care beneficiaries.

(3) WAIVER OF CERTAIN REQUIREMENTS.—The Secretary may waive the following requirements in title XIX of the Social Security Act with respect to covered long-term care beneficiaries who are 65 years of age or older and who have exhausted benefits under a qualified long-term care insurance policy to the extent required to carry out a project:
